05-05-65 Magoo's Pizza Parlor — Donn Paulk

Back in 1965 our family often went to McGoo's in Menlo Park, and Big Al's in Redwood City. Even though I was only ten years old I have some vivid memories from those days. I remember that there were not very many people there and it wasn't very crowded, certainly not like shows these days. There were kids there who came to hear the music, there were families there who came to eat pizza, and there were families like ours who came to eat pizza and hear the music. We liked to come hear all the bands play. I remember The Warlocks although I can't recall any of the specific songs they played. I remember several of the songs were instrumentals. Many were bluesy and R & B songs that were popular at the time. It was great fun!

11-19-66 Fillmore Auditorium - John W. Scott

This tape and its companion of 03/18/67 appeared in the summer of 1989. Like wildfire, they spread through the collections of friends distant and near. It wasn't that they were the finest recordings we had ever heard — they were, instead, a relatively clean window into the murky though legendary past of the Grateful Dead. I had only a handful of pre-1969 tapes, and most of those were disjointed collections that sounded somewhere between very poor and unlistenable. Frankly, excepting the two Shrine '67 shows, 02/14/68 and some of the Hartbeats recordings, nothing else that early had gotten much repeated play at our home. 1969 was another matter. Somehow it has provided us with far more surviving music than the previous years, and with much better recordings. Thankfully, releases of soundboards such as March 1st have made this year one of my favorites. Once my enthusiasm had settled in, it was then natural to wonder about the early years; my interest had been piqued, with little available to satisfy it.

Little did I know that many of my answers dated back to when the band had not even held their new name for a year at what was probably a fairly normal performance on November 19, 1966. This show already has taught me much and is certain to become a classic tape as, in spite of some hiss, this is by far the best sounding tape I have heard from this era. For me, two lessons were striking. On this night the Dead played with a particular raw energy that has disappeared over the years. No less striking than the overall intensity was a wealth of excellent material featuring Pigpen, and his complete mastery of the band while he sang.

The tape in question starts with a nice version of Hi-Heel Sneakers. It is an interesting vehicle for Jerry — he seems to enjoy the slight tongue-in-cheek slant. Next, Pigpen proves himself on an equally rare and well-suited song: the elusive Pain In My Heart. Although this is the only version that we know of, it is clear that the band has performed this song before. The music is built largely on Phil's bass line, and the combination with Pigpen is very effective. As with King Bee, or The Same Thing, the pairing makes for a special chemistry.

The entire first set is full of life, even the still common songs such as Cold Rain and BIODTL jump. Cream Puff War, however, goes ballistic, taking us to a higher plane — absolutely mind-boggling. This was my first real clue to that holiest of Grails, the energy that the old-timers miss so much. The Dead have clearly grown much over the years, achieving proficiency in a myriad of different musical traditions and mastery of weaving these traditions into an incredibly rich and diverse experience. Yet, it seems that in their quest for diversity the sort of raw energy exhibited this night has been lost. It is a trade-off that I can accept. I am, however, eternally grateful that examples such as this have survived.

Following such a charged song, The Same Thing provides a different sort of insight. I had heard tell that many had once felt that the Dead were mainly a backup band (albeit an excellent one) for Pigpen, much like Big Brother and Janis. Although I had long appreciated Pigpen's talent, I had never before understood this perspective on the relationship. This show in general has helped me at least appreciate how others could reasonably hold such an opinion. The Same Thing in particular illustrates an interesting combination of these independent talents. It starts out, in spite of some masterful support from the rest of the band, as a song completely dominated by Pigpen's vocals. Yet, once Pig has finished, the Dead somehow pull the song into an equally impressive climactic jam — a very different song from that which they started. A strong He Was a Friend of Mine ends the first side of the tape. Although Dancin' in the Streets is missing, I find myself sated by this forty-minute blast from the past.

Happily, the show is far from over — indeed, the best is yet to come. On the second side we are treated to three Pigpen tunes in a row; this is where he really takes control. The Smokestack> King Bee is what many consider to be the meat of the tape. Smokestack is hot. Everyone jams his meanest, Pigpen and Jerry exchanging harp for guitar. Then there is that amazing transition. In spite of their common roots in the blues, it is hard to imagine a successful flow between these two songs; yet the Dead, on a play on the bass rhythm, find a natural connection and exploit it masterfully. This is the earliest version of King Bee listed in DeadBase, and it has become a strong favorite of mine. I am sure John Belushi would have approved. Pigpen closes out his hat trick with a smoking Midnight Hour that refuses to quit.

Now when ancient Deadheads talk wistfully about the good old days, I at least have an inkling what they are talking about.

03-18-67 Winterland Arena - John W. Scott

This tape made the rounds at the same time as that of 11/19/66, and is equally impressive. It has much in common with that show: Smokestack, BIODTL, Cold Rain, Cream Puff War, He Was a Friend of Mine and Same Thing all grace both tapes, and yet each show transcends its list and is well worth having.

The shows starts with a fast Me & My Uncle: though short, it is a sign of the energy on hand. The next five songs alternate between Pigpen and Jerry. Pig sings three rather different songs, and although Smokestack is excellent, it is the tender Hurts Me Too that wins my heart this time. There are those who are too sensitized to sexism to appreciate Pigpen's more macho songs. This would be the perfect song to win them over to a broader perspective.

Jerry's choices for the set are solid. He Was a Friend of Mine is the Dead cover song that best captures the spirit of the 60's, and this version is beautiful and poignant. I still have not heard one that is not outstanding. Likewise, Morning Dew never disappoints, and although this is clearly a first set version, it has its moments.

Bobby closes the set with two songs. BIODTL is fun and energetic, but it mainly serves as a warmup for the flashpoint of the set: Dancin In The Streets. Different from later versions, this song is filled with a raw energy and reaches absolutely amazing peaks. As is often the case through the years, this is one of Bobby's best songs — it is easily strong enough to carry the whole tape.

The second set starts with a peppy Golden Road, then Jerry steps to the microphone and amid a variety of animal grunts and snorts announces, "Thank you, thank you, thank you, thank you. Welcome to Set #2, or the post Chuck Berry Set. I'd like to continue the proceedings with a song that we affectionately call Cream Puff War." The Dead launch themselves headfirst into this song. Built on its distinct bounce, and filled with lots of lightning guitar runs from Jerry, it is still hard to believe that the Dead can pack this much jamming into a six-minute song.

Pigpen changes the mood with an entrancing Same Thing. I find myself totally mesmerized by his voice, while gently pushed along by Phil's bass line. Somehow Jerry coaxes the song into overdrive without breaking the spell. This song is absolute magic. Cold Rain & Snow has a hard act to follow. Although I prefer the more recent arrangement for Cold Rain, the fast, driven versions of this period are easy to appreciate in their own right. Phil and Jerry give this one an extra little kick at the end.

Which brings us to... Viola Lee Blues. What an amazing song. It steals the show each and every time I have heard it. This is the one of the earliest versions that I have, and it is as fully developed and at least as vigorous as any later. I love its indomitable spirit, the way that the song comes to a screeching climax like the end of Caution, but then bounces right back again for more. Once again Viola Lee Blues earns top honors in my book.

Death Don't, at the end of the tape, is cut — a final flaw. Given all of the other excellent music, it doesn't seem to matter. Indeed, it is also well worth putting up with the noise that even low generation copies carry. I hate hiss as much as the next head, still I can only hope that there are many more tapes that sound this good locked up in someone's closet somewhere, and that someday I will get a chance to hear them.

08-06-67 Place Ville Marie, Montreal - Edward Sieb

The show was scheduled for noon on Sunday, and was a free concert with both the Grateful Dead and the Jefferson Airplane, sponsored by CKGM radio and hosted by their popular DJ "Buddy Gee" (George Morris).

I estimated that total crowd at about 2,000 to 3,000 people. The show started late. Some time was taken loading the equipment and then tuning up.

Jerry went to the mike and said, "We seem to have lost our bass player. Uh, Philip? Phil Lesh, are you out there? Anyone seen Phil Lesh?" Eventually, Phil arrived back on the stage (a platform erected in the middle of Place Ville Marie, a large square in the center of the city).

Bill Graham was about to introduce the band, when he began telling off someone in the audience for some perceived infraction. The band finally started to play. I definitely recall Viola Lee Blues, and Dancin' In The Streets. The other tunes I remember because I had the presence of mind to write them down when I got home that afternoon. But for that list, they're a hazy memory. I clearly recall they played a long, improvised piece, with a driving, rocky rhythm, that evolved into a jam as well as a drum solo/percussion spacey feedback —"electronic noises" jam of some sort. The offbeat timing, kazoos, and "silly" lyrics fell on bewildered Montreal ears, but soon that hypnotic, enveloping rhythm made the crowd "get up and dance, yeah" — Alligator> Caution (Do Not Stop on Tracks).

Imagine, if you will, a warm, summer Sunday afternoon. It was the "Summer of Love," Grateful Dead music filled the city streets from a free concert. The scents of incense and pot smoke wafted through the air, while colorfully garbed people danced and smiled and laughed. Not exactly a free concert in the Haight, but it was as close as these Montreal hippies were going to get, and it was good enough! Though they only made up a very small part of the crowd, the quite obvious and definitely "counter-culture" Montreal hippie community was out in force. I can recall my amazement, wonder, and awe at the sight of these "freaks" in mime makeup, strange clothing, beads, flowers, and, of course, long hair. I had been searching for this community, and at long last here it was.

I don't recall any Dark Star, but I seem to recall subtle elements, phrases of the tune appearing when they jammed in Viola Lee Blues. I say this only because of a strange sense of familiarity I had when I first heard Dark Star on the Live Dead album late 1969 (early 1970?). Could it be? I suppose we'll never know.

I've tried to speak to as many people as I could find who also attended that concert, but in virtually all cases, no one could remember the songs. I had already been listening to the Dead's first album by then, so I was familiar only with the songs on that album. I had never heard Alligator> Caution, so I referred to it in my notes as "Long rhythmic jam with feedback about alligator at the beginning."

To the best of my knowledge, NO soundboard or miked recordings exist. The sole tape recorder on site was not operating for those sets, and while there is a slim chance that someone in the audience might have had a portable tape recorder with them, the likelihood of locating such a person is very small, and the quality of any such recordings would be mediocre at best. For that free concert, the PA system was contracted by ASTRO SOUND of Montreal, and I recently spoke to the owner, Jack Shalinsky, who recalls that concert! He remembers setting up a Crown 700 series reel/reel to tape the show, but decided to stop recording when he could not get a good audio level set up during the Dead's sound check.

Said Jack of that experience, "I set up the machine and began setting my levels. These guys were so damn loud and all I got from them was feedback. All they did was make feedback with their amps, so I figured, screw this shit, and turned the machine off."

The whole concert, with both the Dead and the Airplane, ended no later than 4:30 PM. My recollection is that the Dead played for more than 90 minutes before having the set cut short for the Airplane's performance.

09-03-67 Rio Nido - John W. Scott

These shows are rightly famous for one song: a thirty-two-minute Midnight Hour. Given the length of the song, it is natural that the Dead cover lots of ground during its course. Pigpen excels on vocals and harp, and even finds time for his role as the rapping, match-making dance director (he even offers Bobby as a partner). And the jams! The wonderful jams range from spacy to intense, always with plenty of bass so they can be felt as well as heard.

This song frequently shows up as filler on tapes without proper identification. We aren't certain whether this epic version was from this night or the next but, if you have an unmarked monster Midnight Hour on tape, chances are that this is it. If you don't have it, be advised this one is well worth finding fifty-eight minutes of filler for.

09-15-67 Hollywood Bowl - Louis Woodbury

My first show. I was only 13 at the time, but enjoyed the show and was quite impressed by the shear joy of the folks all around me. I got the distinct impression that there was a lot more to this than one could see on the surface. Big Brother was listed on the bill as the opening act but they never showed up so the Dead and the Airplane "had" to play longer sets.

10-09-67 -> ? Columbus Recorders - Tom Constanten

Using a three day pass I'd won as Airman of the Month I managed to join them in Los Angeles during the recording sessions of Anthem Of The Sun The prepared piano and electronics work that I did on the album was my first real musical collaboration with the band. It seemed to come naturally out of what I'd been doing before, and their musical explorations were challenging, to say the least. So I didn't feel any decompression, polarization, or anything unusual in the transition from "serious" to "pop." Aside from the inherent absurdity of such categories, it seemed simply a case of musicians of like mind pursuing paths of interest to them. Back up on street level after some sessions at Columbus Recorders in San Francisco, Jerry turned to me and said, "I think we can use you."

During one of the sessions at Columbus Recorders, Pigpen was overdubbing a vocal track for Alligator. One of the takes started to click so well, was so compelling, was such an evocative — I daresay perfect — word painting, that all of us in the control room were rolling on the floor with cackles and howls. Pig saw us through the glass and started chuckling too. In the effervescence of our jollity we neglected to save the take. Besides, we figured we figured he knew what he was doing, and could come up with another one just as good anyway. We figured wrong. After you've seen the spark, it's not too hard to tell when "it" is no longer there. So what wound up on the album was a mix of three solo vocals. Here's a sigh for the "one that got away."

The first time I heard the music through the headphones, while laying down the piano tracks for Alligator, it was as if I could sense the sound coming our of all the speakers that would ever play the record — from portable transistor to Dolmen Dimension sound system. I came to take things in stride that I'd find out later were quite unique to Grateful Dead recording sessions. Instead of hearing "testing... one... two... three" for sound checks, there'd be Robert Hunter reciting the opening pages of Finnegan's Wake — by heart.

During the Anthem Of The Sun sessions we had the opportunity, along with some of the Airplane folk, to have an audience with the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. The Maharishi didn't especially like the band's name. "Oh, no," he said. "You should call the group 'Everlasting Life,'" through his infectiously good-natured chuckle. He gave us each a personally selected mantra, and, and he made his grand exit, handed each of us a rose.

11-10-67 Shrine - John W. Scott

These are significant tapes from an historical perspective, and important additions to any collection. They were among the best quality sixties-era tapes to gain wide circulation in the early eighties. When these tapes first appeared, word of their arrival preceded them through our insulated circles like the blast of heat from a wildfire. Sixteen years later, I can still remember hearing them for the first time, who I was with, where I was sitting even. The staples of my Grateful Dead instruction had started with American Beauty and Workingman's Dead, and had progressed from there. There was so much to digest that there never seemed to be any time left to look back. My only perspective of earlier Dead shows had been from Live Dead. While that is truly a phenomenal album, it is surprising how different a perspective these tapes provide a mere sixteen months earlier. They are filled with a different, raw energy that is unmatched at any other period of Grateful Dead. The jams are less finely honed, but no less appealing.

As I listened to this tape for the first time, each song drew me further and further in. This was my introduction to Viola Lee Blues. I was stunned that even from a cold start the Dead could tame a song with such energy: "Amazing Electric Wonders" indeed! Such power, such control — the hangs were masterful. Such acceleration — I still feel helpless as the g-force squashes me back in my seat when I listen to it now. I was then treated to sublime contrast with Pigpen at his most tender in a heartfelt Hurts Me Too. Jerry's guitar was more prominent and aggressive than in later versions. Next... well, I had heard great Morning Dews before, and this one was no slouch. There was more familiar ground with Schoolgirl (the sort of Pigpen showcase I was used to) yet it still surpassed any other version I had heard. And then... then there was the Alligator> Caution. Alligator — I am embarrassed to admit that previously my main encounter with this classic was the excellent Alligator tie-dye I bought at the 1980 New Years run; pretty design, but I hadn't a clue. For the second time in a single tape I was astonished by my ignorance. Here was an impossible fusion of vintage Pigpen with full-tilt commando-style space and jam. By the time Caution matured my jaw was on my knees — I had lost my virginity for a second time.

The really amazing thing about these tapes is that they appear to be rather average shows for the time. Subsequently, I have heard better versions of all the material. And still, the whole being greater than the sum of the parts, this is must-have. The sound quality alone is reason enough... and that is the least of the arguments.

02-03-68 Crystal Ballroom - John W. Scott

This is a compact tape (thirty-six minutes) but interesting and energetic, filled with very young songs and even a couple of potential debuts (as far as our scattered lists can tell these may be the premieres of China Cat and The Eleven, and the third versions of Dark Star and That's It For The Other One).

The tape begins with a short, hyper Dark Star. Spanning a mere five minutes, the pace is so fast as to be almost comical. Given the evolutionary nature of this version I am able to swallow my smile in appreciation as the Dead start to uncover the nature of the beast. During the closing notes, Jerry asks the enigmatic question, "Leave the lights on, will ya?" Next up, the first-known China Cat is even faster — one expects chipmunk vocals, and this time I have to smile. In spite of its frantic attack, China Cat moves surprisingly smoothly into another possible debut. The Eleven is an appropriately breathless affair as the Dead pursue it with reckless abandon — very impressive, if indeed this is the first outing for one of the Dead's hottest jamming songs. This certainly is one of the highlights of the show, ending in a thirty-second Feedback.

The Cryptical> Other One> Cryptical is another quickie: five all-too-short minutes before melting into a pretty Space featuring glass chimes and flatulent effects. Then we arrive at my favorite moment of the show: New Potato Caboose is crystal clear and absolutely enchanting. The instrumentation is done with an exquisitely gentle touch and matched with strong vocals, including unusually solid harmonies. This is always a song that I look for on tapes, and though I can think of a version or two that are longer and even better jammed, I can't recall any as clean. After a brief weightless pause the Dead charge into Born Cross-Eyed. They really have the Spanish horns down on this one. Unfortunately, the song fades out after a couple of minutes, but I am thankful for the little I have of this interesting show.

This is the famous show where Jerry "pushed Phil down the stairs." Upon listening to the tape the band discovered that it was so hot it became the core tape for Anthem Of The Sun (along with parts the November 1967 Shrine shows). It's not hard to see why, and since the second set had the good fortune to be broadcast live on KPFA, the tapes are in wide circulation.

All I know of the first set is that they played Good Morning Little Schoolgirl. I know this from a friend who also informed me that his friends taped the show and also others at this time. He has, however, since lost the track of them. (If the people he is referring to read this, PLEASE come forward!) Whatever else happened that set, it is set two that makes this one of the all time greats. That's It For The Other One starts things off maniacally after which the band settles into New Potato Caboose, a real good version of a song that developed quite a bit before being inexplicably dropped from the repertoire in May of 1969. Born Cross-Eyed comes after that, it seems as though the song sequence of this set was the model for that on the album with a notable exception — after Born Cross-Eyed they jam and space before settling into the Spanish Jam. It's hard to believe that the band has been doing this jam for over twenty years and STILL hasn't come up with a name for it.

After a short feedback stretch the band stopped playing. From the onstage banter it seems like they were having equipment problems. Once things got fixed they managed to coax Pigpen out front and began Alligator, this version being one of the hottest, most energetic things they've ever played live. Having the tape makes it possible to hear what got cut out before putting it on the LP. After Alligator a neat transition into Caution is made. The jam that follows absolutely rips and the set closes with a howling feedback jam.

For the encore Pig gets coaxed out once again for a Midnight Hour that sounds totally out of whack but no matter. It's still a lot of fun.

03-26-68 Melodyland - John Crutchfield

My memory banks are indelibly impressed with that fateful tuesday evening in 1968 when, at fifteen years old, I was dropped off at Melodyland Theater by my mother for a concert featuring the Jefferson Airplane and the Grateful Dead. I think the Airplane was headlining, or at least, played second. The bands played on a revolving stage to a circular theater — now, that must have been weird! (This place was so psychedelicized, that in another era, it became a church for a born-again preacher named Wilkerson who wrote a book called, "The Cross & The Switchblade.")

The Dead, I'd heard before for the first time on the radio the last new year's eve ('67-'68) when a DJ for then-underground Pasadena F.M. station, KPPC played a few cuts from their first album. I remember being captivated by what I've since termed the "wind" in the Dead's musical sound — it immediately sounded like a foggy, breezy San Francisco day (even though I lived in Southern California with my parents, my grandmother, on my mother's side, lived in the Excelsior District of San Francisco and I'd been visiting her since I flew up for the first time with my sister when I was five-so I knew what a "San Francisco day" felt like and this music was IT!) Anyway, that was 'Morning Dew" and I knew that this band had played in a way that was strange, yet familiar to me and I had to hear more. Next the DJ played "New Minglewood Blues" and I didn't like that as much. (He also played Blue Cheer's "Vincibus Eruptum" which I thought was cool if only for the fact that the band played so loudly that they had to be recorded on a pier in San Francisco Harbor.) So, the Dead, I knew about, and of course, everyone knew who the Airplane was, what with the success of "Surrealistic Pillow," their first release on a national major record label.

The Dead came on first — and I was tripped out at how bluesy they were. Not really my cup of tea. But then Garcia began the strains of "Dark Star" and I was "There" once again. Totally awesome, the groove and melody swept me away into Bliss Land and I was there as Dark Star jammed into The Eleven and then continued to jam on through the night not seeming to stop once for air. Tune after tune, jam after continuous jam. Now that I am reminded that Schoolgirl, Death Don't, and Top of the World were played, I can understand why I remembered the beginning set as being so "bluesy." I don't remember much else, except that Garcia's amp (one with a tie-dyed speaker grill cover) started smoking toward the end of the set, and they ended the set with what I thought was a cool thing, an a cappella version of "We Bid You Goodnight."

"Now, this is a cool band!" I thought to myself, as they left the stage amidst smoking amplifiers. At one point I was walking around and enjoying the liquid light show (probably during Space/Feedback — Yeah! that's it! Because I remember seeing the smoking amp through the tape recorder reels that were moving.) Anyway, I asked Dick Latvala at a tape show at the Fillmore one night in '96 or '97 if he had found anything from 3/26/68 and he replied that all the tapes were used to make Anthem and nothing was available from that era, but later that night he played parts of 10/12/68 which were awesome — So , who knows? All I know is that they didn't play Morning Dew that night and I had to wait until 3/20/94 to hear it played live and I remember thinking at that time that I'd made it to heaven and the circle was finally complete which had begun back on New Year's Eve '67/'68 and everything else would be icing on the cake. And you know what?? It was!

And, thanks to the miracle of tape recorders, it still is!

The Airplane played next and were awesome as well as the light show from Headlights which did a psychedelically effective job of visually bringing San Francisco to, of all places, but, thankfully, Anaheim, California in 1968.

05-05-68 Central Park - Doug

I first saw the Dead on 5/5/68 at the free concert in Central Park, NYC that Bill Graham/Fillmore East put on. Garcia had his long hair and pigtails, TC & Pigpen, etc.

Friends and I had gone the night before to the early show at the Fillmore East to see the Jefferson Airplane (newest Airplane CD is cuts from the four shows they did that weekend) and Crazy World of Arthur Brown. That show as great, with the original set up of radio controlled airplane taking off from stage on long wire track going up to back of theater (both downstairs and balcony) while on screen behind band was movie clip of camera on nose of airplane taking off; at lift-off, the band began to play.

In between CWAB and Airplane, Bill Graham came out on stage to announce upcoming events, one of which was the free concert in Central Park. He stated that Richie Havens, The Paul Butterfield Blues Band, Jefferson Airplane & Grateful Dead would be playing. We all looked at one another and decided to go. The drawing card at the time for us was Havens, whose music we all liked quite a bit.

We rode the bus home to Ridgewood, went home, got up early to do chores, and I picked up everyone again in Ramsey, drove to Ridgewood to the bus, and made it to the Port Authority by noon or so and we all walked up to the meadow and bandstand area in Central Park.

Since we heard the Airplane the night before, we knew how good they were, and we knew a little about Butterfield, we couldn't wait to see Havens. He never showed. Instead, a comedian by the name of Larry Hankin went on first. Oh well. Next up was and excellent Butterfield set. We still didn't know much except the name about the Dead., The Airplane did a set filled with good tunes, familiar ones, THEN THE DEAD!

I recall bits and pieces — Other One type stuff, as well as Mickey's gong in Morning Dew, but not knowing any of the music, I had no idea what they were playing, just that it was amazing sound. Unknowingly this was the beginning of my addiction to the music. The musical ride was so powerful to a seventeen-year-old; we all went away from the show knowing full well why no band could follow the DEAD and why both the Airplane and Butterfield played first!

08-24-68 Shrine Auditorium - Peter Lavezzoli

This classic show was a perfect choice for Two From the Vault. Not only is the sound quality outstanding, but the show itself is a perfect representation of what the Dead were capable of in late 1968 prior to the arrival of Tom Constanten. This show was performed about a month after Anthem of the Sun was released. Most of the Anthem material was culled from the February tour, and it is stunning to hear how these pieces evolved and matured during the six month interval between those shows and this Shrine concert. While the Spring 68 shows have an unmatched visceral power all their own, the August shows have a much tighter and more polished ensemble sound, with a greater emphasis on nuance and dynamics. There is more subtlety, and more fully developed improvisation.

Pigpen opens with a Schoolgirl that immediately sets the tone. We can hear right away how the band is listening and responding as one unit. Pigpen's harp and vocal improvisations blend effortlessly with Garcia and the rhythm section. This is not the sound of a garage band. The real indication is Dark Star. Still barely a five or ten minute piece during the Spring shows, here it begins to develop into the vehicle for extended jamming that it would increasingly become, as the Dead take their time exploring the possibilities of the piece. The sensitivity and depth of this Dark Star is demonstrative of the growth that was taking place at this time. Stephen> Eleven> Death Don't ends the set with power and finesse. At this point the Dead were using different lyrics during the William Tell bridge between Stephen and Eleven. Like Dark Star, this Eleven is an early example of where this piece was headed the following year, with well developed jams and a tight ensemble approach. Death Don't is also a sign of evolution, with Garcia finding new ways to approach the blues.

Set two is sheer perfection. The Cryptical suite is textbook 60's Grateful Dead: psychedelic, dynamic, powerful yet subtle. Phil and the drummers are going places no rhythm section has gone before, while Garcia soars overhead. These days it is easy to forget that at this stage of their career, the Dead were onto something that had never been previously attempted in music. Not even bands like Quicksilver or the Airplane were approaching this level of ensemble improvisation, despite the considerable talents of guitarists like Cipollina and Kaukonen. The Other One perfectly illustrates this unique musical synergy that the Dead were creating. After the Cryptical Reprise has been fully explored, what comes next is the highlight of the show.

This must be the definitive New Potato Caboose. Petersen's exquisite lyrics are given their proper treatment with flawless vocal harmonies. The melodic structure of the song is handled with stunning delicacy and feeling. Phil begins the jam with a powerful bass solo that leads into the lively thirteen-beat "rondo" that was part of the standard arrangement at this time. Here it is executed flawlessly. As the rondo is resolved, Garcia begins his segment of the jam, moving through many different levels of intensity before building to the trademark power chords at the end of the piece. Everyone has taken their time, making this not only the longest known New Potato, but also the most polished.

Pigpen returns to close the set with Lovelight, which has also noticeably evolved: not only as a powerful showcase for his extroverted raps, but also as an example of how he could control the ebb and flow of the band behind him. After this powerful set closer, the Dead return for an encore of Morning

Dew, which almost makes its way through the climactic closing jam, only to be abruptly cut short when the Los Angeles Police Department decide to pull the plug before the song is finished!

10-13-68 Avalon Ballroom - Mike Dolgushkin

This radio broadcast has been making the rounds of taper circles since time began. Accordingly, it has been mislabeled under a zillion different dates and locations. Various songs inserted as filler have also been identified with this night. The list we have in this book shows the correct songs and sequence. This was also the night that Jimi Hendrix showed up, thinking he was going to sit in. Since he stood up both the Dead and Quicksilver at the Sausalito heliport the night before, he was not asked onstage.

The tape contains hot renditions of the Dead's typical repertoire of the time, although Dark Star sounds rather primitive compared to Live Dead's version. During St. Stephen, after "one man gathers what another man spills," Weir says "funniest thing I've ever heard." Ever wondered the reason for New Potato Caboose's premature ending? Well, at this point in history Chet Helms and the Avalon Ballroom were under a lot of pressure from the local authorities. Shows had to end at midnight, or else. Here were the Grateful Dead following THREE opening acts with a midnight curfew and Jimi Hendrix waiting in the wings. Not only was New Potato cut but Pig didn't even get to sing.

Speaking of which, this three-nighter occurred smack-dab in the middle of all those Hartbeats gigs: that notorious period in the Grateful Dead's history when Bob Weir and Pigpen were "kicked out of the band." Obviously, if you look at the gig sequence for this time you will notice that there are full band Grateful Dead shows scattered through the Hartbeats period. Does this mean that Bobby and Pig were only out of the band some of the time? Or maybe for recording purposes only? Numerous other historians have tried to get to the bottom of this with little success.

10-30-68 Matrix - John W. Scott

Most of these Matrix tapes deserve attention as some of the better raw improvisation of the Grateful Dead (well, almost-Grateful Dead as Bobby and Pigpen were absent). This night is among the more popular tapes: both as high quality recordings are available, and as this show features a guest, Elvin Bishop. As vocals are few and far between, more attention seems to be paid to the music, providing a strong argument for the Dead performing more instrumentals in general. The songs with lyrics are interesting — two out of three are unique to this stand, and Death Letter Blues is vintage Garcia (I am surprised he hasn't sung it since) — but it is still the instrumentals that capture my attention.

The mode of the evening is the blues, though there is plenty of other Dead material that is also well explored. It is essentially an improvisational sandwich between two slices of Dark Star Jam, and what a feast it is! Even the songs without their protagonists present are phenomenal (particularly The Other One, which, without vocals and with a cut, still spans at least sixteen minutes). There are four unnamed jams. The first is a nice laid-back jazzy affair. The next two are paired, starting as a wonderful dreamy improvisation, with a theme that sounds like it was pulled from Quicksilver's vaults, then shifting to a blues jam when Elvin Bishop joins in. The final jam centers on a nice bouncy riff from Phil. They are all excellent, with Jerry expressing himself with greater range and abandon than in the normal Grateful Dead configuration. Jerry isn't the only musician who excels in this musically focused environment: Phil's performance is also exceptional. On song after song, he goes wild.

From the laid-back blues jams to the intense bass-filled Other One Jam, these tapes are a must for any serious collector of Grateful Dead recordings. By the same token, any Hartbeats tape is likely to provide an exciting improvisational experience.

11-01-68 Chico - Mike Dolgushkin

An interesting look at the band right before TC joined. My tape starts with Dark Star. It's clear that the song was still developing. A great Other One follows, but just as New Potato starts the tape cuts. Ouch! It cuts back in again during Feedback, leading into the first known We Bid You Goodnight.

02-01 -> 07-69 Six Cities/Eight Days - Tom Constanten

February, 1969 started with the second night of a two night stand at Aaron Russo's Kinetic Playground in Chicago. The ensuing week took us to Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, and wound up in Pittsburgh. Not much time for sightseeing. I had to borrow Iron Butterfly's Vox organ for the shows in St. Louis and Kansas City. Similar to the one I'd used earlier with the band (I much preferred the Hammond B-3, when it was sufficiently amplified), except this one was set up high, so you had to play it standing up. Subtracting the foot needed to work the pedal, it quite nearly left me without a leg to stand on. But there were rewards as well. For the show in Pittsburgh we shared the bill with the Fugs, and the emcee was Paul Krassner, no less.

After a week or so of a routine that consists of hustling from performance to hotel to airport to another airport (they all have this "timeless" and "placeless" atmosphere to them, anyway) to another hotel, and finally to another performance, the band becomes your boogie board. Nothing else is stable — only your comrades in rhythm are there, day after day. Everything else changes — people, cities, buildings... the climate. Things you might ordinarily consider important and substantial get lost in the shuffle. An extremely hectic schedule can make it all seem like some sort of hazy "Anytown, U.S.A."

Pigpen and I usually shared a hotel room on the road, and among the various pastimes we got into was chess. The "Pig Bag" packed one of those peg-board portable chess sets. We brought our chess mania home with us, but there were other diversions as well. Band members were always coming up with ways to beat boredom on the road. One week it'd be cooking up huge batches of bacon in the hotel rooms, another it'd be bottle rockets. Chalk it up to scientific curiosity if someone wants to see how high a super ball would bounce if thrown from a third floor balcony onto the pavement. During one phase there was a run on Buck knives. Even I got one. Only "used" it once, though. One summer afternoon at home at Ross, as Weir's amour of the nonce was giving Phil a haircut. Bob was sitting on the couch, contemplating who would be the victim of the water balloon he was holding. All I had to do was steal up behind him, give a single poke with the Buck knife... and a lapful of water signalled the end to his contemplation.

Inevitably after every gig there'd be a gathering in one of our hotel rooms to check out a recording of that night's performance. Kudos, queries and other libations flowed freely. On the road you're surrounded by your act, if only because of how tightly your time is segmented. There's a "merry band of rogues" sort of comraderie that arises in this strangely insulated existence. When your path crosses that of another band, especially if you know them, it can be like a letter from home. The burden of road weariness gets a bit lighter.

Returning to St. Louis in early April several of us in the band went to one of its ritzier restaurants. The kind where potatoes inspire the chef to sculpture, and the waiter lights the dessert at your table. Silver tongued thespian Jon McIntyre, traveling with the band as our road manager,was from there, and arranged everything. "No, sir. They are a famous Rock band. They don't even own neckties." The decorous staff were eyeing us nervously the whole time, but we were on our best behavior.

02-11 or 12-69 Fillmore East - Bruce W. Scotton

Janis Joplin and Her Band; Grateful Dead

Although from today's perspective it may seem improbable, in any place other than the S.F. Bay Area at this point in time the Dead ranked no higher than third among Bay Area bands. Janis, with or without Big Brother, was already heard and avidly pursued nationally, and we had already become acquainted with the Jefferson Airplane through two hit records and national tours. With the additional mushrooming of psychedelic bands from places such as L.A., New York, and London, the Grateful Dead so far remained a regional favorite with the reputation of being the band that most closely matched the psychedelic experience. But then again from a New York hippie perspective, those Californians just sat around in the sunshine all day anyway; would the Dead have the drive, the ability to produce some work that went somewhere and meant something, that a New York audience would demand?

A second and even more important aspect of the scene must be grasped if the reader is to have any appreciation of the setting for the Dead's Fillmore East shows. Quite apart from who was famous in what order, the eruption of the hippie psychedelic scene was so unexpected, so powerful, and so different from what had gone before before that both bands and spectators were still carried along by its impetus, in ever changing combinations and manifestations. Try to imagine a gathering in which everyone present had been brought up in the '50s which were so straightlaced and backward that white American citizen were convinced that everyone in the country was prosperous. Why was that weird? Because to believe so meant to pretend that African-Americans, Latinos, and Native Americans were not discriminated against [or worse yet, weren't part of everyone.] I actually had an argument with my great uncle one Thanksgiving in which he stoutly maintained that there was no one in Chicago or New York who went hungry! This audience at the concert in question had seen American music before even Elvis arrived, when it was a combination of reworked Broadway tunes with strings and vocal harmony groups called things like the The Four Lads, who stole and "cleaned up" black groups' material. Things were so rigid that when Elvis arrived many ministers and politicians opposed him as the ruination of the nation's young people. His sins? He was sexual rather than asexual, and he sounded black and white at the same time. So the nation and all of our audience had seen sex and feeling in music break out and then get coopted by the music business and again brought under control with artists like Bobby Rydell replacing Chuck Berry, until the Beatles invaded.

Then in just two short years something much bigger than Elvis blew sky-high. Not just a cornucopia of the most energetic and creative rock bands ever seen, but light shows, alternative newspapers dripping dayglow colors, be-ins, peace marches, avant garde dance, naked Living-Theater-type performances, underground comix, psychedelic posters, psychedelic trips themselves, and every week or two a new festival or benefit combining some or all of those elements in a "happening." After the biggest thrill for most of us had been to "fast-dance" to a black doowop group, suddenly all restrictions were off. We'd party with and love people of all colors! "Sex and drugs and rock'n'roll" is now a cliché. Then it was like opening the doors of heaven. We didn't have to be like Eisenhower America; we'd loosen up and have an ecstatic time and remake the world in the process. So, unlike later years when the Dead were the carriers of the hippie culture, in 1969 they were only one part of something welling up everywhere out of the collective unconscious. At that point in time a bunch of us could have gathered at a tripping meeting of someone reading the headlines from that days' New York Times and created something meaningful and outrageous from it.

Given all that as context, most of us had come to see Janis. On the underbill was this "most psychedelic" of bands, so who were these biker cowboys who appeared when they introduced the Grateful Dead? They sure didn't look like any New York hippies. Garcia and Pigpen were in cowboy boots and leather jackets scuffed brown with wear. Pig wore a cowboy hat with a large feather attached parallel to the band and arching out over the back of the hat. Mickey was dressed in a serape; Bobby, leather fringe and levis; and Billy in a cowboy shirt with contrasting piping. Even T.C. was decked out in a broad leather belt and vest. Not only did they look like cowboys, the played country and western tunes! Because I didn't yet know them, and because the DeadBase lists are not from the show I saw [they did an early and a late show each night] I can only guess these were early versions of things like Me and My Uncle and Silver Threads and Golden Needles.

Perhaps sensing that the crowd didn't get them; and it not being one of those nights they could pull everyone into it (remember there weren't many audience members who knew their particular brand of magic and who could help), it was not the Dead's night. I do remember one tinkling harpsichord-tinged piece which I thought was really strange in a good way and must have been Mountains of the Moon.

Then Janis arrived and blew the roof off the sucker. Although this is Dead- and not JanisBase, I must pass on at least the sense of seeing her live. As impressive as the films of her are, they don't come close to conveying her presence. She was a great musician,yes (although apparently already operating with half the voice she'd once had.) She was a great party thrower. But the overwhelming impression of seeing her on stage, every single time I saw her, was that she would do whatever was necessary; sing three hours, scream all three, get down on her knees, shake herself silly, stomp a hole in the stage, crucify herself, to get the audience off so they would respond to her. She was an amazing combination of self assurance and insecurity. She would use all her wiles and talent to move the audience because she couldn't stand, even for one show, not to be loved to pieces. I sincerely worried that she was going to have a heart attack, burst an aneurism, or some such while I was watching her. As a medical student off duty this was not my favorite scenario. Also, lest you think I was just stoned and a touch paranoid, let me reassure you that I never had that feeling about any of the dozens of other [often self-destructive] musicians I saw. Janis sang Piece of My Heart, Summertime, Ball and Chain, and enough else to make me love her; you weren't getting out of there until you did. I'm just glad she didn't die on my watch.

02-28-69 Fillmore West - John W. Scott

In the history of the Grateful Dead there have been several truly momentous concert stands. The February '70 and April '71 series, both at the Fillmore East, are obvious examples. Likewise the '74 February and October stands at Winterland are each noteworthy as collections of exceptional concerts. These four concerts at the Fillmore West in the winter of 1969 are another golden reign at one of the Dead's most notorious venues.

This night is one of those perfect concerts, where every song is played beyond its normal bounds. In comparison with versions from other nights, many of this show's strengths might seem to wane to the status of merely excellent songs. Fortunately, the Dead save the best for last and finish the show with a unique jam that refuses to be outdone.

The first set is happily dominated by Pigpen. After a nice Morning Dew, Pigpen starts his own special brand of momentum with Schoolgirl. Then, after a great Doin That Rag we get my favorite version of King Bee, with strong vocals and a driving bass line that punctuates the song beautifully. A killer Lovelight rounds out the set with little question as to who is in control on this night.

Bill Graham reintroduces the band for the second set: "The last of the gay desperados, the Grateful Dead." The second set amounts to a tour de force through the Dead's best jamming tunes, starting with a wonderful version of That's It For The Other One. The whole song is great, but the closing Cryptical is exceptional in length and intent. It is unfortunate that this is one of the songs that loses in comparison with the performance on March 1.

Cryptical moves immediately into Dark Star. This is a beautiful version, rather than intense — wonderfully different from the outstanding renditions from the previous and subsequent nights. The jams are light, pretty, and well-considered. After a good St. Stephen we get a hot Eleven — the song that, along with Dark Star, is the searing trademark of this excellent year. Death Don't Have No Mercy is one of their finest: beautiful and tender, providing a powerful change in mood. Phil's bass is particularly masterful and expressive.

Even after all this incredible music, the highlight of this show is clearly the final forty-minute jam, starting with Alligator. It is only fitting that Pigpen would be the one to fire up the band to yet another level. After some fun with the lyrics the Dead seem to get serious as the resulting jam is forged. This jam is long and almost unbearably intense, taking nearly twenty minutes to arrive at Caution. Incredibly, the Dead once again exceed all expectations as they attain an even higher level than the already impossible with a long Caution, built to a chaotic pitch. This sequence is easily one of the hottest moments of this historic stand. A few minutes of Feedback provide some much needed meditative space to collect oneself after the fray, and the concert is closed with We Bid You Goodnight, hampered by some problems with the sound system. As the band exits the stage, Garcia reflects upon the final glitches in an otherwise flawless concert, "Goodnight from all of the electronic mice."

There is an easy recommendation to be surmised from this concert: although tapes of some of these shows are scarce, an effort should be made to collect every possible minute from this glorious stand.

03-01-69 Fillmore West - Dick Latvala

This just might be the absolute most fulfilling Grateful Dead performance in history! For starters, we get the most involving and most explicit piece of music ever heard (at least in rock & roll venues): That's It For The Other One, which includes several rushes that just about make you forget that you have to do your laundry. There is a beautiful twist at the final crescendo, where instead of the typical closing chord, we get dropped back into a very nice version of Doin' That Rag. To end this continuous piece of music that comprises the first set, we get one of the most unique (up-tempo) versions ever performed of Cosmic Charlie.

The second set opens with acoustic versions of Dupree's Diamond Blues> Mountains in the Moon. Then a typical finishing jam that has Dark Star (one of the all-time most interesting versions) flow into St. Stephen, and then an inspiring The Eleven, and finishing with Lovelight. These are particularly fine versions. To finish this monster of a show, we get Hey Jude as an encore. Quite incredible!!

03-01-69 Fillmore West - Rea Simpson

This tape appeared on the scene late in 1986. It is one of my favorites from the pre-1970 period. Lots of tapes from this period are quite distorted, especially on the vocals (listen to a very old Cold Rain & Snow). This tape suffers from this problem only minimally and on my copy the cymbals are very clear. It's an amazing sounding tape for its age. But what certainly makes this tape a treasure are the songs they play. You get the standards from this time period along with some songs that are hard to find on tape (especially in good quality).

The shows starts out with Bill Graham introducing the band as, "The American version of the Japanese film, Magnificent Seven, The Grateful Dead." Jerry sings very sweetly on Cryptical and then Phil leads them into a very rowdy Other One. Both Jerry and Phil go wild on this song. Before Bob begins singing the lyrics, you can hear some feedback and he responds to it by trying to mimic it with his voice. The jam after the ending Cryptical verse contains some very interesting rhythms. This neat little jam leads into a great New Potato Caboose. We are treated to a nice, long bass solo on this one. A short moment of silence is used to segue into Doin' That Rag. I'm biased on this one. I love every version I've heard. What I would give to hear it played today! The very nice a cappella ending has someone emphasizing the G on the last word, which gives it a strange sound (very fitting for the song). The Cosmic Charlie is very fast and the beginning reminds me of the intro to Revolution.

To start the second set, Bill Graham does another introduction, "The Great High Hope." The set opens with Dupree's Diamond Blues. This is not at all like they way they play this song now. It's much more like the album version; complete with the doo-doo ending verse. Here is also where TC makes he presence well known. His organ sounds just like a calliope. With a flip of a few switches, he turns it into a church organ for a magnificent Mountains of the Moon. It sounds as if all that's there is organ, bass, and Jerry's voice. It's just beautiful. The rest of the set is quite standard for this time period (Dark Star> St Stephen> The Eleven> Lovelight). Imagine that being standard! It's all played very well and as I said earlier, the recording quality is great. The most notable point for me was the little Garcia and drum solo that ends the Eleven and segues into Lovelight.

The last surprise of this show is the encore. There is much discussion by the band and shouts from the audience; Garcia can be heard saying, "How about Hey Jude?." After more discussion he says, "It's OK man, we'll make it up as we go along." That's very true! It's quite rusty with Pig singing it in his own bluesy style. Things pull together towards the end of the song as it becomes more freeform. At one point during the frenzied ending you can hear Pig sing, "Why don't you try a-walkin' on water" in amongst lots of screams from Bobby (actually he screams a lot during this show).

03-15-69 Hilton Hotel - Tom Constanten

We were hired to play at the 1969 Black and White Ball, an annual benefit extravaganza for the San Francisco Symphony. The original idea was to dress up in those black and white striped prisoner outfits made famous in the old time movies, but that proved impracticable. The ones we settled on weren't too shabby, though — Jerry was a pirate, Mickey was Zorro, and I had an eighteenth century bell ringer costume complete with three cornered hat. It would have been a smashing success, if only the P.A. system could have been ready a few hours sooner. Like, by curtain time.

03-15-69 Hilton Hotel - John W. Scott

The tapes I have seen of this concert are missing the first couple of songs, starting instead with a lengthy, boisterous microphone check with each band member putting in their two cents' worth. Pigpen does his mic check last, noting quietly that, "This is the only one that really has to work on this tune." His microphone works well, though both Hard To Handle and Schoolgirl are a little undermotivated.

A twenty-minute Dark Star builds some momentum with long jams and some nice spacey passages. St. Stephen maintains the level, but it is The Eleven that really takes off. This is one of my all-time favorite versions: exceptionally long, it wanders through several hot jams with Jerry's fingers flying up and down the fretboard. Absolutely amazing — the tape is worth having just for this eleven(!)-minute jam. Fortunately, the rest of the show serves as very respectable filler. The Dead build The Eleven to yet another peak and then roll into Lovelight. Pigpen gives us a second highlight — a great way to end the show.

03-21-69 Rose Palace - Louis Woodbury

My second show. I was starting to catch the "bug". Unfortunately I was not as familiar with the material they did that night, but Charlie Gosher, a friend who was a major influence in getting us hooked on live Dead music swore they did everything from Anthem of the Sun.

Someone, I think it was Pigpen lit some firecrackers on stage and pointed the microphone at them. They sounded WAY bigger. I also remember seeing a guy in the crowd standing directly in front of one of the amps almost putting his head into the speaker to listen. Apparently he didn't think it was quite loud enough!

03-27-69 Merced - John W. Scott

In the Golden Age of the Dead there was the trilogy. First was that paragon of improvisation and inspiration, Dark Star. Surely there will never be another which can capture the exquisite nature of this song; its simplicity lending itself to countless graceful variations and surprises. Then there was Lovelight which balanced the raw musicianship of the band with the captivating vocals of Pigpen. The hat trick was completed by That's It For The Other One which used rhythmic patterns and waves of intensity to produce explosive contrasts. While many other songs were both staples and masterpieces in their own rights (I would never deny the sheer magic of say The Eleven, or Caution) this trio became a cornerstone of the Grateful Dead. In 1969 you were likely to hear at least two of them on any given night; they each survived sabbaticals, and were still active twenty-five years later.

Everything on this night was on — the St. Stephen> Eleven was glorious, brilliant enough to withstand a cruel cut, Death Don't featured intense leads that matched the heartfelt vocals. But the trilogy were paramount. Dark Star is. Perhaps that is all one ever needs to say. For those who still like at least a notion, Dark Star is very respectable. That also is adequate recommendation for any tape. Not to be redundant, but Dark Star is long, wonderful, amazing, ravishing, exuberant, intense, impulsive, charmed, serious — chimerical; it achieves a particularly satisfying climax. Already, this is an imperative tape. Likewise, Lovelight rages. But it is for a last-minute That's It For The Other One that the band nudges their untamed steed with spurred heels and bolt hell-for-leather — determined to beat the venue's curfew. The best the audience can do is hold on for dear life, and collapse exhausted when the trail is done.

03-29-69 Las Vegas - Fred Heutte

While only a fragment of this show seems to be in circulation, it's an exciting one. You hear a lot of comments these days about repetitive song lists (although the Dead are probably mixing it up more than they have in years). Anyone who complained in 1969 about the combination of Dark Star, St. Stephen, The Eleven, and Lovelight (which appear in that order here) would have been crazy, if this show is any indication. The playing is at its most exploratory and concentrated form, treading the familiar ground of these tunes with increasing assurance and darting off for angular, propulsive jamming. In a year of cosmic music-making, perhaps the band considered it all in an evening's work. But even at a distance of two decades the energetic interaction of this classic combination of tunes is still fresh.

04-06-69 Avalon Ballroom - John W. Scott

Because this was a radio broadcast on KPFA and KPFB, there are some beautiful copies of this show in general circulation. It is worth tracking down an extra clean copy of it. As with all tapes from this year the music is excellent. Highlights from the show include a steaming That's It For The Other One that spans twenty-five minutes, a heartfelt Death Don't Have No Mercy, and, of course, Lovelight. The show closes with Viola Lee Blues, perhaps unique in that right after the main climax the power fails, and a bewildered band has to finish the song a cappella.

04-18-69 Purdue University - Jerry Eagan

My first Grateful Dead show was one of the most memorable. The four years preceeding that show had been intense. I was discharged from the Army in 1968. Prior to that, I'd done a tour in Korea and three months in an infantry unit in Vietnam, where I'd been badly wounded. I spent a year in various Army hospitals, began my trip into serious drinking and drugging, spent 1968 watching two of my heroes — RFK and MLK — assasinated, not to mention seeing some of my Vietnam friends going off to do riot duty in Baltimore — dropped acid in October of 1968 for the first time, and "turned on" to the Grateful Dead — including Anthem of The Sun. In 1968 I joined the ranks of several other long hairs working at the U.S. Post Office in Indianapolis, Indiana, and by April of 1969 — the month of my 22d birthday — I was toasted. While my mind didn't articulate it — I was ready for a shattering event to follow up with where the Acid had left off, and take me into new territory.

I found it that night at Purdue University. Purdue is not the place you'd expect a paradigm shift to occur. I'd always considered it a "cow college" — i.e., agriculture and engineering. But the Ballroom at Purdue was where I met the DEAD, live, for the first time. The ballroom was small with room for maybe two thousand people? Certainly not the massive numbers I'd be part of later at Dead concerts. We went through the opening act — a guy named George Stavis. Never heard of him since. May have been a couple of songs he played that eneregized me at the moment, but I was psyched for the Dead. I'd already worn out one copy of Anthem and like the guy in "Jerry McGuire" wanted the Dead to PLAY ME ALLIGATOR.

There were screens between the North and South Ballrooms. The Dead were set up in the North Ballroom, and when Stavis completed his act, the screens were opened and we rushed into the other room. The lady I was with and I wound up flush against the stage. The guys who had played Cryptical and New Potato Caboose on vinyl were right up there in front of me, looking down on me, and then they cut loose with a Hard to Handle that rocked me back so hard I thought I was going to explode. They blasted that song out so hard, with so much energy that I felt stunned. Pig Pen was singing with that yodle of his that cracked me up. I was smiling and dancing and screaming and I could feel something sneaking up my spine that was unfamiliar.

Then Jerry began Morning Dew. Soft, sweet, with that voice that I would come to know with that song that took me into a new and beautiful soft place. There was a space there where Garcia played the song so soulfully that I felt like I was going to cry. I was watching all of these guys do their thing, and was exhilarated that I had made it to this place in time and space. And then they cut into a Cryptical> Drums> Other One> Cryptical> Top of the World> King Bee segue that was the ride into that new place I'd been searching for. I can't say exactly when it happened, but somewhere in that long blast off, someone up in the front row, beside me, got up on stage. It wasn't that big of deal... just a few feet off the floor. I was being squashed up against the stage, so I did the same, helping Sheila up with me. We squeezed into the bow of the grand piano that Constanten was playing. Cryptical had gone into drums. First time I'd seen two drummers trading licks and the sound there on stage was deafening. I was screaming for ALLIGATOR! It's always amazed me that I didn't get thrown off stage by one of the roadies cause I was definitely in an ALLIGATOR frenzy.

Looking back over the set lists for shows preceeding this one, those guys were probably sick to death of playing Alligator, but they somehow put up with my crap and went right on through that incredible fabric of tunes. The Cryptical was clearly one of the most memorable I ever heard. And Top of The World and King Bee were full of blinding energy. If I had to describe the music and the delivery of King Bee was oily, sensually oily, like the massage oil you spread over your lover in the dim light of your bed room.

Doin That Rag always cracked me up. Lovelight wasn't the finale this night, as it has been in so many later shows. It was a song that pulsed and surged up and down several times as Pig Pen and Jerry played with it, Pig doing his rap, Jerry threading through some incredible rifs that were like shimmering needles he was shooting into the air off his guitar. Bobby joined Pig Pen in the finale of that song and then they went into the one and only Cosmic Charlie I've ever heard live.

Somehow, that song exploded some of those time release capsules of Red White and Blue Acid that I'd taken earlier in the spring, cause everything that had been stuck to the inside of my skull came loose. The deep rumbles of the beginning of Cosmic Charlie reverberated in my molars and went all the way to my heels. I was awed into silence by then. It was all too much. I felt like I was going to melt. And then they finished us off with BIODTL. I climbed down off the stage after a few minutes of watching them leave, looking at the drum sets that were standing there without their masters, and shook my head again and again. They hadn't shown me ALLIGATOR (I never heard one live), but they'd shown me plenty more. We drove the forty or fifty miles back to Indianapolis early in the morning, charged, psyched, definitely a half dozen people who'd been taken into a new dimension of reality.

For me, the music was liberating. I was pointed in a new direction. The pain of the death and destruction I'd seen in Vietnam, the incredible desolation of having my right arm nearly shot off over there, seeing hundreds and hundreds of 18 and 19 year old guys moving around with arms and legs gone in Army hospitals, the death of the last good part of the Kennedy/Civil Rights-Movement-early-60's -heroes-American cities-burning down-anti-war protestors being tear-gassed — all that crap that had left me so full of despair — was left behind by what these Grateful Dead guys represented. I understood — without being able to articulate it — that there was a form of freedom here, not just with the music, but with the movement, the dance, the smiles, the community of people exploding into new lifeforms all around me, that I had fallen in love with. And I have always stayed in love with that experience from that night in April 1969, to the last concert I attended — the infamous Deer Creek concert in 1995. And for me, The Music [has] Never Stopped.

04-22-69 The Ark, Boston - Peter Lavezzoli

The three shows at the Ark in Boston are widely regarded as among the finest from 1969. While all three have worthwhile moments, it is the middle night (4-22) which stands out as the strongest and most consistently exciting of the run. Many of the shorter songs in the first set are played as well as one would expect from this era. Top of the World could often be sloppy, but here it opens the show with precision and energy. This is followed by a very exciting and emotional Morning Dew, played at a brisker tempo than what would become customary in later years. Jerry's vocals and guitar are very expressive. BIODTL and Schoolgirl continue to raise the energy level, Pigpen particularly sounding inspired on the latter. Doin That Rag is another song, like Top of the World, that could often sound sloppy and unrehearsed in concert. But once again, this show is an exception, and Rag is about as tight and emotional as I've heard it. Having cleared that hurdle, it was now time to jam. Cryptical> Other One (which suffers from a brutal cut in the master tape)> Cryptical> Death Don't is a crowning achievement. The Cryptical suite is bursting with visceral psychedelic power. Death Don't is especially frightening in its intensity, Garcia singing with a desperation that I've heard in few other versions. And this only the end of set one.

Set two is seamless and flawless in every way. Dupree's is perfectly segued into Mountains of the Moon, which is one of the most gorgeous live versions of this song. Mountains, rather than coming to a stop, beautifully moves into Dark Star with the same kind of delicate transition that is heard on the first faded-in moments of Live Dead from 2-27-69. 4-22-69's Dark Star is the longest documented version from 1969, almost clocking in at thirty minutes, even with yet another cut in the master tape before the second verse. Without the cut, who knows how long it actually ran? But length is not the only thing that makes this Star special, it is a very well developed version with lots of emphasis on group improvisation. The spaces stay thematically rooted in Dark Star rather than wandering off into a different type of "jam." 4-22 also has one of the finest complete medleys of Star> Stephen> Eleven> Lovelite, where all four pieces are well developed and the transitions between songs are well negotiated. Stephen and Eleven both soar heavenwards, and the transition into Lovelight is perfect. Lovelight itself also has that extra something, with a full-fledged Caution jam sandwiched in between, and lots of extra rapping from Pig. After this, it's no surprise that the Dead chose not to do an encore.

04-27-69 Labor Temple - Peter Lavezzoli

This relatively short show is one of the all-time greatest, a worthy follow-up to 4-22-69. This was the first show with an opening and closing Lovelight sandwich, and it is executed perfectly. Pigpen immediately takes control, and the opening Lovelight is one of the finest for extended rapping and jamming, very tight and energetic. The band is playing extremely well as one unit, very unlike the comparatively sloppy performance from the night before (4-26 Chicago). After a full treatment, the opening Lovelight makes a perfectly smooth transition into the first-ever cowboy medley! Me & My Uncle reappears here after being absent from the Dead's songlist since early 1967, and it segues beautifully into Top of the World, which is as tight as the 4-22 version.

The Star> Stephen> Eleven> Lovelight medley ranks with 4-22 as the finest, with all four songs well developed with lots of jamming, and more importantly, the transitions between the pieces are very smooth and enjoyable. Dark Star goes into some spaces here that are similar to the 2-27 Live Dead version. After a full treatment, it winds down delicately to the second verse, which then perfectly moves into Stephen. Stephen> Eleven are both very well played, and the Eleven is especially jammed out and energetic before effortlessly moving into the Lovelight reprise. Pigpen immediately jumps back into the game as if he had never left, and the closing Lovelight is just as developed and exciting as the opening half, with Pig and the band riding the finish to an explosive finale. This is much tighter and better played than the 6-14 Monterey Lovelight sandwich. That show has another fine Eleven, but the rest of it does not measure up to the brilliance of 4-27.

05-03-69 Winterland - John W. Scott

My only exposure to this concert is the first set from a forty-five minute soundboard. This tape is gorgeous — beautifully clear, with rich bass, sounding far better than I would expect from this era. It would be worth having even if the band played terribly, but fortunately the music matches the sound. He Was A Friend of Mine is the best of the few versions that I have, and That's It For The Other One is tremendous, amazing, phenomenal — long and almost painfully hot — with lots of extra bass from Phil.

I heartily recommend this tape, even though it leaves one thirsty for the second set.

05-23, 24-69 Big Rock Pow Wow - Rob Bertrando

The Dead performed both days at this "Big Rock Pow-Wow." The first day was a pretty typical 90 minute set (for 1969, that is), and the Live Dead suite is one of the best, running over an hour. The second day's show, though, is one of the truly unusual ones that the group pulls off as though they did it very day. After opening with Lovelight (due to some problem with the organ), the boys pull out an amazing medley: Doin' that Rag, moving smoothly into an incredibly hot He Was a Friend of Mine, a great transition into China Cat, an almost unbelievable move from there right into The Eleven, winding up in a heart-rending Death Don't Have No Mercy (not that all of them aren't heart-rending)! An abbreviated Alligator moves into St. Stephen right after the drums, and things close with We Bid You Goodnight. I have to say that it is this kind of playing that makes '69 my favorite year!

06-14-69 Monterey - Mike Dolgushkin

This show smokes from start to finish. Lovelight is done at the beginning and the end. The opening jam featuring Doin' That Rag and He Was A Friend Of Mine (WHY don't they do that any more?) is great and the Dark Star is one of the most energetic from that time.

06-14-69 Monterey - Rob Bertrando

I just want to echo Mike's review; this is truly one of the unheralded gems, a real contender for the best of '69. Despite two Lovelights in the same show, both are very hot; the first runs about 26 minutes, and is normally structured, but the second has a Good Lovin-like drum solo in it, and is a little shorter at around 16 minutes. Smooth and unexpected transitions were something the Dead were really working on around this time, and Me & My Uncle must have been a bit of a surprise, coming smoothly out of the opening Lovelight. As Mike mentions, the Dark Star is a burner, but I want to highlight The Eleven, which is the premier version of this song I have heard (out of 25+).

06-21-69 Fillmore East - Rich Petlock

A good version of the rare Green Green Grass Of Home opens this show. Jerry does a good job on one of the first High Times. The China Cat Sunflower> Morning Dew is great. The jam at the end of China Cat is smoking and then it drops down into Morning Dew. The Morning Dew is very good, with some great Jerry vocals and guitar work. Shouts from the crowd urge the Dead into performing Alligator. The Dead then cruise into a well played and nicely jammed Other One, complete with Jerry's "You know he had to die" ending. This leads into a rousing version of Slewfoot, a Bobby tune that has a bluegrass lilt to it. The Dead leave the stage, but come "back by popular demand" to play an excellent version of Cosmic Charlie, both vocally and playing wise.

06-21-69 Fillmore East - Mick Levine

So, East meets West again as I'm walking down St. Marks Place from NYU in the West Village on a typical cloudy, muggy, hippies everywhere, New York day in May, 1969 — but why am I the only one heading over to the Fillmore East ticket window which will be putting Dead Tickets on sale in exactly 15 minutes for the June shows? And when I get to the window, why am I the line — as if I'm buying tickets to a sunny afternoon war movie? So I get 11 seats in the third row at $6 a pop for everyone I know who's into the Dead and coughed up the dough (sitting in the first row at the Fillmore gives you a stiff neck pronto). Been doin' this for two years now and I can still get row CC— I can't believe this.

The answer to these questions is the same as the answer to why the Dead brought their own side stage to Woodstock two months later and weren't even invited to play on the big stage. Incredibly, no one is really into the Dead yet and they're in their fucking prime you idiots! Sure, both late shows will sell out over the next four weeks — there are after all 9 million people in god-forsaken NYC — but it will take every minute of four weeks to do it, and the early shows will all be only 3/4 full — you could mosey on up to the ticket window and walk right in if you wanted.

Which is exactly what we decided do — especially since our avowed policy was to never see consecutive shows in one night — but when we drive by the Fillmore, the entire East Village is jamming on the corner in full color and it just looks too crowded to make the scene, so we go to the West Village to catch Muddy Waters at the Cafe Au Go Go but the early show's sold out so we hit Pizza Plaza and beat it on back for the 11:00 show at the Fillmore.

In the past we might blow off some of the opening acts — like Luke and the Apostles or the Seventh Sons — and just show for the Dead, but Buddy Miles is there with the remnants of Mike Bloomfield's Electric Flag and word is that Jimmy McCarty is playing guitar with them and when he was 17 with Mitch Ryder and the Detroit Wheels their version of "Lovelight" influenced the Dead's and he was one hot rocket and tonite his fuse is well lit, let me tell you, and fat Buddy, surrounded by his big drum kit, is at the front edge of the stage ready to steamroll into our laps and smother us to death wearing nothing but a studded leather vest and his belly and his mic and these guys are hot and funky from the get go, doing Pig's kind of R&B to the max and you can see the Pen and some people offstage right drinking and smoking and diggin' Buddy and the boys.

Then out come Savoy Brown straight from England to do a set of express-train blues, starting off with "Train to Nowhere" and finishing with "Feel So Good" with Chris Youlding on cigar, vocals and fur coat and little Kim Simmonds kicking the shit outta his giant Flying V like a Liliputian logger duking it out with a San Rafael redwood and both Kim and the redwood win, and everyone sure does feel so good by now, let me tell you. These bands really cooked up a storm — I mean like they've already heard the Dead do three shows of All-American Acid Rock-Blues-Country-R&B-Gospel-Bluegrass-Folk music and it's hot as hell in there and everyone's thirsty and the Dead's equipment is getting set up behind the curtain but people keep sending open containers of Orange Aid juice drink off the stage. How polite and considerate we're thinking — they know we're hot and thirsty and they're passing juice drinks off the stage to us. Gee, the Dead family sure are nice people.

Not only that, instead of letting us lose our groove and get bored shitless while they install fifty tons of speakers behind the curtain, they're showing us the old black and white Betty Boop style Sunshine Cartoons from the 1 940's. Y'know the ones where all the bad guys are wearing Puritan outfits and Lincoln beards and walk around chanting "I don't wanna be happy, I wanna be sad..." and all the good guys look — why didn't I notice this when I was eight — exactly like Garcia, and after they bomb the bad guys with these bottles of what appears to be mmm-ilk?, singing "Sunshine, Sunshine, everybody's gotta have sunshine" all the bad guys start laughing and scratching and the vultures turn into birds of paradise and the weeds become smiling sunflowers and everyone parties at the end.

Wow, that Orange Aid was refreshing and nice I'm thinking, and just as I'm beginning to figure out why the blank curtain is starting to dissolve into a Rick Griffin, it's begins to rise and I'm getting a little disoriented because it sounds for all the world as if Garcia is playing "Sittin' on Top of the World" on pedal steel and nobody plays pedal steel and sings at the same time and as the gas tubes behind the gongs explode in perfect synch to the drums, sure as shit there's Garcia sittin' down, mending his ways on his ten-string sewing machine in just about the same spot Buddy Miles occupied three decades earlier and he's got that football-field-wide grin on his mug as he leans into the mic and sings about how he ain't worried — in case we didn't notice.

Fours hours of galactic guitar note births and full regalia summertime Dead later — everyone in NYC knows they were better in the summer — we get our first dose of Casey Jones ever and the whole joint is high-steppin' it out in the aisles and truckin, over the seats, and then Garcia tries to bid everyone goodnight but no one's done yet, which was really unusual after a four-hour show especially considering it's a 5:30 sunny Sunday morning in New York. He says "Really, they tell us we really have to stop now — thanks a lot" and we look at each other and get that flash of paranoia like Wow, they just won't let it happen, will they. Cause like it really seemed as if the entire planet were about to enter a new era of peace, love and galactic guitar note births all orchestrated by Garcia and the Dead right now — tonite — like this very minute.

But alas, when all was said and done, it was just another Saturday night at the Fillmore East with The Good Old Grateful Dead. And the only new era ushered in that night was the beginning of the "daylight on the land" shows — soon to be called Midnight shows — but none of 'em got any higher than this one.

06-22-69 Central Park - Bruce Scotton

So after my 2/11 or 12/69 experience (see above review) why was I still bothering with the Grateful Dead? Well, I wasn't. I'd read Ralph J. Gleason's review of the Dead included in the 2/11, 2/12 program. [Yes folks, Bill Graham used to give out programs, patterned on the Broadway Playbills which are still given out at legitimate theaters, with psychedelic art, unintentionally funny ads placed by record companies trying to be hip, and descriptions of the bands often written by people like Gleason who actually knew what was going on.] That is I'd read it later, after I was again in a state where I could read more than a few words without going off on a long rumination with attendant associations and visions. Gleason's summary was that the Dead were the most respected by the other S.F. musicians, and in a particularly warm and sharing place. That sounded nice but I hadn't seen it. I'd also read a piece in the Village Voice, I think by Richard Christgau, praising the Dead for their emotion-filled, far reaching improvisations that spun out to hours-long concerts.

All that background, along with the eruption of the new free-love-not-Eisenhower-America ethos described in the first review, was operant on the afternoon of 6/22 as I walked across the south end of Central Park on the way to some long forgotten movie with my wife. As we walked I could hear music wafting across the park, good music, really good music. For once in the '60s we were entirely sober, yet this music was somehow creating that psychedelic synesthesia you experience on drugs. The band was playing the sunny day! The music rose and fell like the breeze, it opened vistas and closed them over like the occasional cloud covering the sun overhead, it bubbled up out of the listeners hearts like the fountains out of the ground. It got the little old ladies with blue dyed caps of hair who always sat on the benches looking askance at us hippies to talk to me, with a smile yet! "Young man, young man, what is that wonderful music?" I kid you not.

And I knew, with what was to be only the first of many such psychic or synchronistic experiences around the Dead, I knew with absolute conviction that there was only one group that this could be. "That's the Grateful Dead. Pretty good aren't they?" The ladies nodded and smiled. One tapped a finger in time on her cane. Again I'm not sure exactly where I came in, or rather with which song, because the situation I just described in clearly where I jumped on the bus. From the set list I'd guess it was Dancin' in the Street, Dark Star, or St. Stephen. You'd think I'd have followed that sound across Sheep Meadow, backstage, and all the way to San Francisco, but I didn't, not yet. My wife was set on seeing the movie and we completed our crossing of the park. I think the same song was still playing the band. Whenever I begin to wince hearing some of those lines from Dead songs that can seem so corny and overstated, like "the music played the band," and "strangers stopping strangers just to shake their hand, everybody's playing in the heart of gold band," I remember this day when the inescapable truth of those experiences presented itself out of the blue, on the way to a movie. Remember, we were perfectly straight.

07-10-69 Playboy After Dark - Tom Constanten

One Hollywood adventure took us to Television City for an appearance on Playboy After Dark. The bookshelves on the set filled with mindless books not even worth stealing, other inane facades like the phony high-tech sound system behind "my" harpsichord, the stifling hyperformatted work situation — all tinted the experience. Sid Caesar was the main guest if I'm to judge by the amount of time "Hef" spent with him. Also on that particular show was the astrologer Sidney Omarr, whose writing has always seemed "realer" to me than most of his colleagues', but someone will inevitably say that's because I'm a Pisces on the Aires cusp. Anyhow, he was running off this marvelous spiel about roles and personae ultimately boiling down, as he put it, to the question, "Who are we?" Dramatic... persuasive... but that didn't stop the director from fading out some thirty seconds before the end.

08-28>30-69 Family Dog - Paul Scotton

These shows were at Playland, an old amusement park which was just down the hill from the Cliff House/Sutro Baths and across the street from the beach. The specific venue was a building I figured was the old roller rink which was quite small (I bought my tickets at the door and I remember one night as the first band was already playing buying ticket number 234). There were two stages, one at either end of the room. Both were all of 12-18 inches off the floor and were plywood and 2x4 specials. One stage would be in use while the other was being readied for the next band. When the one band was done, we'd all turn around a face the next band. The first group was Phoenix (which may have been spelled in some clever way), followed by Commander Cody, the Riders, and then the Dead. The place was so small and the scene so loose (which could still happen even then) that various members of the various bands would mingle with the crowd. I stood and talked with Phil for a while, I think during the Commander Cody sets, but didn't know who he was. (These were my first live shows.) When I saw him on stage later I was surprised but we talked again between songs (somebody was having equipment problems I think) and I still didn't know who he was or that they were the Dead. It wasn't until after Pig and the band tore the place up closing the show with an amazing Lovelight and I had danced myself silly that I turned to the people that I had come with and said: "If these guys are this great, I can't imagine what the Dead are going to be like" that I found out who "these guys" were.

09-01-69 Baton Rouge - John W. Scott

As with many concerts from 1969, a quick glance at the set list should be argument enough to listen to this show. Morning Dew, Dark Star, St. Stephen, The Eleven, and Lovelight all appear on a 90-minute tape.

It is particularly interesting to hear them pushing the Workingman's Dead album material before the fact. Featured are a very respectable Casey Jones, a tasty High Time, and an excellent Easy Wind. Bobby tells his yellow dog joke — it's not easy to tell a joke that nobody laughs at.

I don't know how the Dead were able to play Dark Star night after night after night in 1969 and still keep it fresh. One hears complaints when two or three song medleys are repeated every four or five shows these days. It is incredible that the Dead could achieve such power and variety playing the same songs almost every night.

After St. Stephen we get one of those The Elevens, one with lots of momentum, where Jerry just takes off. Even with very stiff competition this is the highlight of the set. A hot Lovelight jumps out of The Eleven — maybe this is the highlight after all.

9-26,27,29-69 Fillmore East - Bruce Scotton

Grateful Dead, Country Joe and the Fish, Sha Na Na

Now the fun begins. New York and the Fillmore East in particular were to be host a series of Grateful Dead shows that are deservedly legendary. With this run the Dead seemed more self assured. There was now a core group of the also legendary "picky New York Deadheads" who were tuned in and turned on enough to bring in other rock cognoscenti ripe for conversion. Yet it was still an amazingly small group by later standards. For still another year I would awake on a Sunday morning, find a new Dead concert announced in the Sunday N.Y. Times, take the A-train from Columbia Medical Center to the Village, walk the mile or so to the Fillmore East, and still be in line at the ticket office in time to get seats in the first few rows. Those of us in that short line would smile at each other in a brotherly conspiratorial way and share stories of the last shows we'd seen, sometimes Janis or Jimi or Cream but always the Dead.

The shows were a whole other thing. Alright, given as I've described in my reviews of 2/11,12 and 6/22 that we hippies were already in a constant, seismic, world change; the Feeling of The Grateful Dead at The Fillmore East was at least a quantum level more intense. It was the epicenter of the seismic change. It was the essence of the hippie lifestyle. Psst, Kid. You want to know what the secret was that made it the special place in a very special time in the world's capital city? It was a love fest. It was a sacred ritual made spontaneously every time we gathered. You think corny right? Unbelievably corny and trite. WRONG! Most of the New Yorkers thought so too at first. New Yorkers always have an attitude, don't they? What the Grateful Dead did was to get the cynical New York audience to open up to one another and the band in a way they never did even at home. When New Yorkers, even hippie New Yorkers, talked about love they were talking about love of your old lady or old man, and sex, and maybe love of your family. Yet when we walked in to see the Dead there was a palpable sense of loving family warmth, the family you wished you had. As hippies we had talked about the need for a more loving America but it somehow hovered around the Dead at this time and we now walked into that space and it became a felt reality and not just a spoken ideal. People looked into one another's eyes and smiled gently. [Non-New Yorkers need to understand that the basic rule of street survival says you never make eye contact with someone you don't know.] People shared joints and water and stories.

How did the Dead do this? Because it was a smaller venue there was much more of a sense of hanging out with the band. You could see their expressions. The stage was only about three feet high, without the elaborate moats and guards that came later. Listen to the tapes and you'll get part of it. The band spoke much more. They'd joke between themselves and with the audience between songs. They were generous, they'd reassure us that they'd be there for hours, that it wasn't over for a long time. But the key was Garcia. He hadn't been burned and imposed upon and sucked dry yet and he was like a human well-spring. From his stage comments it was clear that he was very bright and witty and almost always kindly and good humored. But it was the playing that he sparked and led that exemplified the you've-come-home-to- your-family-you-didn't-know-you-had feeling. For hours, not once but twice a night, Jerry would spill out liquid guitar lines just like a fountain. Soft and caressing, twisted and impossibly psychedelic yet somehow familiar, and soaring and heart-filling. He'd create a sonic sculpture of magnificent beauty and musical inevitability for ten minutes, twenty minutes, and then replace it with another, more complex and more beautiful. He'd stimulate the boys to try anything and he'd match first Phil and then Mickey then

T.C. and Bobby and then pull it all together in some amazing way to segue perfectly into another instantly familiar Grateful Dead song. We'd shriek in delight and hug one another, cynical New Yorkers. Meanwhile Jerry would be off into the new song tossing off more ideas than some other guitarists had in a whole career before he settled on one to build his next structure upon. And Kid. You still with me? He'd almost always do it dancing with someone in the crowd! He'd lock eyes with someone, particularly someone alert and dancing hard and he'd play to and off of that person. In interviews Garcia would describe how he would search for someone who had good energy and then use it to tune into the zeitgeist, the feel of the moment.

The Fillmore East was a former movie theater and we all had chairs, but no one was sitting. We all danced in place for hours, ecstatic, mind-melded on the music as aided by the pot and psychedelics. We screamed. We sang. We yelled, "We Love You!" at the band. Occasionally they would slow it down with a selection like He Was a Friend of Mine or Uncle John's Band. But then the next thing you knew Pigpen would be wailing Midnight Hour or It's a Man's World which the band would punctuate with incredibly tight raveups between verses and you'd be up and dancing for another hour. Just when you thought you might not be able to take any more, that your heart would burst from all the excitement, Garcia would lead them into another peak even higher than any before, and someone would light a propane torch and you'd think the sun had just risen inside the Fillmore, and they'd drop the huge sign over the stage that spelled Grateful Dead in Aoxomoxoa-style letters and flashed on and off in time with the music, and your heart would burst, only it would be with incredible love and gratitude for being there with all this. You'd realize it had burst out of the shell where it usually resided and it was now turned on. And then you'd leave it on.

There was just one problem. At this fever pitch we were all tapped in like remoras hitching a ride on a blue whale. When the whale finally decided it was time to pack up and go home, and that we should detach and go home separately, it felt like our lifeblood, or rather their lifeblood, the blue whale/band's blood which was feeding us, to sustain the metaphor, was being cut off. Tripping with a sudden end to this loving reassuring musical ecstasy left many feeling lost. So you got the New York audience demanding more encores and Phil saying things like "Suck out every last drop will ya." I swear this was the origin of We Bid You Goodnight and Graham's playing a record of Greensleeves while he slowly spun the mirror ball on the ceiling. Toddle on home now Kiddies. See you next time. I wouldn't miss it for the world.

11-08-69 Fillmore Auditorium - Rob Bertrando

Yet another mind boggling show from 1969! One can't tell from the song list, for instance, that Dire Wolf is just over eight minutes long! The truly amazing stuff comes with the jam, though; 91 minutes long, probably a record until 1980. And what a jam! There are well developed instrumental versions of both Uncle John's Band and Playing in the Band (neither of these songs had yet been performed), a Dark Star Other One Dark Star that runs 35 minutes, and a typically excellent St. Stephen> Eleven> Caution(!!)> We Bid You Goodnight to finish that off.

12-19-69 Fillmore Auditorium - Ross Warner

The copy of this show that I stumbled upon a few years ago is only sixty minutes, so may it have been broadcast on The Grateful Dead Hour. It begins with what is thought to be the first acoustic set in band history. Jerry reveals to the crowd how Phil, "you know, the guy who plays the bass," or, as Bobby adds, that "tall skinny feller" is stuck somewhere.

"When he gets here, we'll be able to play loud and all that. So me and Bobby Ace here are gonna regail ya with some old favorites."

"Of course, we don't know what we're gonna do yet."

They start out with a letter-perfect Monkey And The Engineer. The sound is so full and rich that it's virtually impossible to tell that there are only two people on stage. Little Sadie is Jerry's first offering. His voice, like Bobby's, has that youthful twang that is indicative of 1969. It's just a real treat to hear it in an acoustic setting. The big anomaly of the set is Long Black Limousine. Jerry and Bobby lend some beautiful harmonies to a real folky arrangement. The set closes with a sweet Been All Around This World, which like its predecessors, shows a maturity well beyond its years. At the song's conclusion, Jerry and Bobby announce their approval as Phil shows up.

The remainder of the tape shows some real sparks as well. The set opens with a monster version of Mason's Children. The set's centerpiece is a blazing That's It For The Other One that weaves seamlessly into an early Uncle John's Band. The kaliedoscope organ gives the tune a real circus feel. Good Lovin'-> Drums-> Good Lovin' that gives Pig a chance to show his chops.

12-30-69 Boston Tea Party - John W. Scott

This show boasts an excellent second set that features uniformly killer Phil. Mason's Children is an enigma: wonderfully macabre and strangely carefree at the same time. This version is both clear and hot, successfully exploiting its contrasting features. China Cat is great with strong bass. Dark Star is well-jammed, though I can't think of one from 1969 that isn't. Some of the internal space is beautiful, and quite different from the normal fare of this period — as though we are magically transported to 1974 for a few minutes. The closing refrains have that "59th Street Bridge Song" feeling as the Dead move on to Alligator.

It is this side of the second set that really explodes. Alligator is excellent, but after the drums, when Phil comes rolling into The Eleven, it is so magnificent that it reaches you deep in your heart. I have to smile every time I listen to this one. This is Phil's Eleven — big and bouncy and lots of fun. Eventually the Dead tumble through the GDTR/Bid trailer and back into Alligator for a while. Finally, they bring us back down quickly and painlessly with a terse Feedback and a gentle We Bid You Goodnight.

01-10-70 - San Diego - John J. Wood

Fine quality tapes of this show are easily available, and this show is one of a handful that contains the long-lost Mason's Children, a song that guitarist Henry Kaiser and Living Earth both had the sense to record and release, respectively. Here, Mason's Children contains a hard-driving, almost garage band-type jam that gradually veers into Black Peter, a song that the band regularly played since its birth the previous month.

The whole set, in general, is very punchy, with a nervous energy evident in China> Rider, and the garage band groove in a strong Good Lovin' (I'll take a Pigpen Good Lovin over a Weir version anytime). Also of notice is a strong Hard To Handle and a country rockish Dire Wolf. Another of many great Pigpen versions of Lovelight closes the set.

01-30-70 New Orleans - James Sallis

About the same time that Live Dead was released I saw announcements about the opening of a new concert hall in New Orleans. The Dead were headlining the opening night bill. Even as a high-school kid in Mississippi I knew a special event when I saw one, so I immediately got a ticket. I convinced two friends who were curious about the Dead to join me, so we made plans to drive down.

The name of the hall was The Warehouse, and it was an old (guess what) warehouse by the river on Tchoupitoulas Street. After standing around in line all day, we were finally let in. The room was vast, with plain brick walls, but since it had a low ceiling there was an intimate feeling. Everyone sat around on the carpet that was casually tossed on the floor, waiting for the show.

The first act was The Flock, who were interesting due to Jerry Goodman's violin, but they were not outstanding. Then Fleetwood Mac came on. I had read about them being a good blues band, but had not heard their albums. They simply stunned everyone. Peter Green was wearing a thick, white robe and looked like Jesus. He seemed to be in a trance during his solos as he closed his eyes and tilted his head. The interplay between Green and Danny Kirwan was phenomenal, and Mick Fleetwood was going insane with his eyeballs popping out as he flailed at the drums with all of his might. The energy during their set was explosive.

I was not about to miss anything while the Dead were on, so during the break I moved to the front. I watched them set up the tie-dye equipment and noticed an Uncle Sam hat that was nailed to a beam above the stage. The Dead came on well after midnight and opened with a couple of songs I had not heard on their records. Uncle John's Band was very different from what I expected from the Dead. It was very down-to-earth, but it was immediately captivating. When they screamed "goddamn" during the first song I knew we were in for a night of no-nonsense music.

Since I was literally leaning on the stage I could see that Bobby broke a string, so there was a bit of a lull before they started Cumberland Blues. I was surprised at how young and clean-cut Bobby looked in comparison to the other guys, but he played and sang like a man with many years of experience. It was great to see Pigpen with his crumpled hat and rumpled clothes strutting his stuff on Hard To Handle. I thought Good Lovin was a great song for the Dead to cover, and it really rocked. Pigpen's younger brother appeared on stage briefly to add a few lines to Pigpen's rap. Pigpen was an ugly guy, but he added a unique dimension to the Dead. I am glad that I got to see him in person.

For me, the high point of the show was That's It For The Other One. The playing was very abstract and intense, but very together. It was amazing to me how they always made the many changes in volume and mood simultaneously. Jerry was totally in the ozone during this song. He was just staring blindly ahead with his mouth slightly open; at times I was sure that he was looking straight at me. I saw T.C. standing behind the keyboards, but do not remember him moving at all during the show. Unfortunately, I could not hear him from my position. They took us to the end of the show with China Cat Sunflower> I Know You Rider and a rocking Cosmic Charlie. The audience that was left at this hour of the morning clapped and yelled for fifteen or twenty minutes, but there was no encore.

I don't think anyone felt cheated because it was a long night of fabulous music. For me, it was mesmerizing to experience a Grateful Dead concert so close and to watch the subtle looks they used to communicate both satisfaction and annoyance with each other. The spark that comes from the band playing well together and enjoying the music as much as the audience was definitely alive that night. Even then I felt very fortunate to be catching the Dead during what I still consider to be near the peak of their creativity. Seeing that show gave me very high expectations for Grateful Dead concerts, but unfortunately not all subsequent shows met those high standards.

It turned out to be a special night in many ways. It was the opening of a great concert hall that I enjoyed on many other nights; it was my first Dead show; it was one of T.C.'s last appearances with the band; and it was one of the last times that Peter Green played with Fleetwood Mac. The next day as we were wandering around the French Quater we heard that the Dead had been arrested. Busted down on Bourbon Street. It was a depressing end to a beautiful experience. The Dead did not play in New Orleans until ten years later.

02-11-70 Fillmore East - John W. Scott

Unfortunately, good quality tapes of this show are normally forty-five minutes long. I shudder to think of all the music that is missing. Still, what we have is very impressive, a must-have item for every discerning collection.

The soundboard in circulation cuts in during Dark Star. The waning minutes are beautiful and clear, a tantalizing sign that the complete song might rival the version on the thirteenth. The focus of the tape, however, is the following jam and song when the Dead are joined by Duane and Greg Allman and by Peter Green from Fleetwood Mac. This is the first onstage collaboration between these world-class musicians that we know of. The combination was a natural, two of the greatest jamming bands in rock history, both with a commitment to the blues, sharing the stage with yet another phenomenal blues guitarist.

First, we are treated to an all-time great jam, centering around the Spanish theme. The jam winds out of Dark Star with great momentum, and soon Peter's and Duane's guitars are evident. They both quickly find the flow and the musical rapport is wonderful — these are true kindred spirits on this stage, sharing an experience of rare beauty. The jam is so thick with themes and answers weaving in and out of each other that I sometimes find it difficult to keep track of who is playing what. But as it is totally engulfing and fits so well, it doesn't seem to matter. Peter Green has his guitar turned up and plays a hot, fast, and aggressive blues guitar. Duane is quieter and more subdued, always finding exactly the right note without passing through many to get to it and playing that note with a beautiful touch. The actual Spanish Jam is perhaps the best ever, with some great aggressive bass from Phil and phenomenal leads from all three lead guitarists. There is so much going on in this jam that it takes several listenings to begin to get a grasp on it.

The variety of vocals and guitar styles makes this version of Lovelight one of the most exciting that I have heard. Lovelight is one of the few songs in the Dead's repertoire that invites vocal jamming. The response here is great indeed, comparable only to the versions they played with Janis. The vocals are matched with blazing guitar: Jerry's leads are among the fastest I have heard him play — every note is perfect, there could be no other. Then the guest guitars get their chances — fantastic, and finally a free-for-all where the interplay is so incredibly complex that it frequently nears chaos.

If there were only forty-five minutes available on tape, it seems likely that these are the most important to have. To make the best of this tape, I put the uncut TIFT> Other One from the 13th, and as much of the preceding Dark Star as will fit on the other side. The 13th is "plagued" by a jam of three thirty-minute songs that normally mandates a cut in this Other One.

02-11-70 Fillmore East Revisited - John W. Scott

During the '89 Byrne run we were wandering through the Village seeing what was what. I was amused to see two large tables filled with bootleg tapes of a large variety of artists for sale. Amusement turned to annoyance when I noticed that the Grateful Dead were among those being abused. I smiled a frown — a quick down-my-nose glance located a copy of February 11th, 1970. They were going to charge full price for a mere 45 minutes (albeit an amazing 45 minutes), right? I picked up the tape, wrong. Here it was: the whole set list, the one I had been searching for for so long. I asked to hear it. After much grumbling, a two-bit ghetto blaster was produced. Even through such inferior equipment it was obvious that this was not exactly a stellar tape. Ignoring the moral dilemma, I succumbed and paid the man behind the counter his blood money.

We returned to my friend's apartment. As expected, the sound was atrocious — but I finally found out what I was missing. The Dead jump right into a hot NFA to start the show — they were clearly on, even before the guest artists arrived. Nice and driving, this version is well jammed, with Bobby going deservedly nuts in the closing lyrics, and Jerry backing him with a flurry of strummed chords. The missing front half of the Dark Star was the crown jewel of this tape. Similar in execution to its notorious sister version on that luckiest of Friday the 13ths, it exhibits great promise. Unfortunately, there is an ugly splice and it is hard to guess how much is missing. Even through this limited and muddy recording, it is clear that each song deserves to be discovered or released from a soundboard master. A pristine, uninterrupted tape of the Dark Star and the ensuing jams still eludes me, but this seriously flawed recording has redoubled my resolve to find one.

Since I bought this tape I have run across two friends who have audience copies on the first side of their tapes and the soundboard on the second. Somehow I haven't been able to sully the soundboard by grafting a similar tape. When I want to listen to forty-five minutes of the greatest jams ever performed with guest artists I put on the soundboard. When I want to put it all in perspective I listen to the audience.

02-13-70 Fillmore East - John W. Scott

When people try to choose the finest concerts by the Grateful Dead this show is often among the competition. Although I try to refrain from choosing favorites, were I stranded on a deserted island with a single case of tapes I would certainly want this to be among them. This is a complete, consistent concert that merits and withstands continual loving attention.

The first electric set is excellent, boasting a killer Smokestack Lightning. The acoustic set easily outclasses the Warfield and Radio City concerts, with Pigpen doing a beautiful Katie Mae. Bear's Choices notwithstanding, it is the second electric set that is truly awesome, as we are treated to exceptional, almost incredible, versions of three of the Dead's best songs.

Dark Star is a classic, played at its lyrical best. It is a light, lilting rendition with jams that are both precise and inspired. The improvisation is particularly tight as the Dead weave a variety of themes in and out of the melody's fabric. In spite of the countless times that I have listened to this version, it still continues to thrill me.

That's It For The Other One steams from start to finish. The jam out of the drums seems to build forever before the lyrics start. As with Dark Star, the various sections flow effortlessly into each other with impressive, almost historic jams between. There are even a few bars of the Spanish Jam thrown in for good measure. The final "He had to die" jam builds from nothing in an instant and leaves me exhausted when it is finally through.

Lovelight exceeds all logical expectations. When one considers the superb versions of two challenging jam-centered songs that the Grateful Dead have just finished, it seems improbable that they could have the energy or creativity left to carry off a respectable Lovelight. Pigpen seems to coax the rest of the band back into an inspired frenzy and once again the Dead provide a stellar performance, with a nice balance of vocal and instrumental strengths.

02-14-70 Fillmore East - Mike Dolgushkin

This show often get overshadowed by the preceeding night, but I think it's still great. (Of course, I can't argue with everyone's opinion of the 13th.) The first electric set was short but sweet, containing Casey Jones, Mama Tried, and a hot Hard To Handle that was later to appear on Bear's Choice, as did much of the excellent acoustic set that followed.

Where this show really takes off is during the second electric set. It opens with Dancin In The Streets in an arrangement that was fairly close to the way the song was performed in 1966. They were shortly to rework the song into a longer treatment that reached a dizzying peak at Harpur College on 05/02/70. A common (at the time) triad followed — China Cat> I Know You Rider> High Time (wouldn't you just love to hear that now?) They were getting hotter by the minute, pulling off a respectable Dire Wolf and then came Alligator. The band just exploded during this jam. Alligator led into the customary drums, but instead of going right into Caution, they detoured into Me & My Uncle. A long version of Not Fade Away came next, followed by the, sadly, last live version ever of Mason's Children. The band got through the detour and settled into Caution, a long, blazing version of it. After many dizzying power peaks and tempo changes came the feedback. Then — what better way to end this spectacular series of shows than with (not One More Saturday Night) a slow, gentle version of We Bid You Goodnight.

03-21-70 Capitol Theater - Stu Nixon

This show and Stony Brook 10/31/70 were the two early Dead shows where I first GOT IT. I had seen the Dead three times before, at the Fillmore East and in Central Park. This show was a treat from my Uncle Jerry (Jeremiah, not Jerome), two weeks after my 18th birthday, spending the weekend at his place in Port Chester. There was always quite a scene there at his house with Aunt Anne, her father Alfred, the family dogs, and Ken the mailman who'd drop by after his route on Saturday and join the crowd for a highball marathon with Montovani playing on the console.

During my senior year of high school I'd spend a weekend every month or so and catch a wide variety of music at the Capitol. My uncle and aunt never had children so they spoiled me when I stayed over, and I enjoyed the proximity of the Capitol as it greatly increased the frequency of my visits. He would usually get me a ticket for the early Saturday show and I'd go alone (most bands played two shows each night, Friday and Saturday). A few months back I asked for two tickets for the Byrds because I had planned on bringing a friend from Long Island. When my friend didn't make it, he dared my aunt to go and she reluctantly went along. This time Unk figured he would talk my aunt into going with me again so he got two tickets. His plan backfired when she balked and then rallied support from the others and outvoted him so he had to go instead. He took his punishment like a man, however, and got severely loaded before we left for the show. I drove downtown and parked in my usual lot near the train station. The lobby scene was boiling over with colorful sights and exotic smells. Unk remarked that it was a cross between Grand Central Station and the Circus. We made our way to the second row of the balcony just as the houselights went down.

As each song of the first show began, I kept changing my opinion as to what kind of music it was the band was playing. My memories of their music from previous shows were mostly the songs from Live Dead — long jams of loud electric music. This was very different. Walking The Dog was vaguely familiar, probably one of dozens of songs I'd heard sometime in the late 50s or 60s. I classified it somewhere in the early rock 'n roll/r&b category, but I wasn't really sure. I had never heard Me & My Uncle before, but as I nudged my uncle and got a sign of recognition about the lyrics, I felt that this was one of those cosmic coincidences that was meant to happen. So now I knew they played country songs.

That didn't last too long, however, as the next song, Death Don't Have No Mercy, was really unexpected. The song depressed me at first, but then was so powerful that it took me past emotions to a new point of reference. Then I realized it's the Grateful Dead and this must be a theme song. Next they played Good Lovin and I finally recognized a song I knew. You'd always hear this one on the radio and I once even went to see the Rascals and remembered the song. However, when Pigpen sang it was totally different. This version went on for a long time and seemed to have at least a half dozen distinct parts that kept changing back and forth between tight musical themes and improvised blues vocals by Pigpen. When they went from the drum solo back to the main theme he started screaming the words, and I thought the band was trying to play so loud that they'd blow up the equipment and speakers. Instead, they just ended the song with one loud note and then started to think about the next song. I wondered, how could they get into a song so deeply and then stop so short and start it all again?

My uncle turned to me and asked, "This is music?." I started to say something like, "You ain't seen nothing yet," but the band started Dire Wolf before I got the chance. Garcia sang that one and then Pigpen sang again on Big Boss Man. I thought that Pig was the band's lead singer and that Garcia alternated singing with him to balance the loud with the soft in order to keep peace. Such was the case on the next song, He Was A Friend Of Mine, where the theme of death returned. But just as Garcia's melodic vocal faded out, they crashed into Viola Lee Blues and I was sure the balcony was going to fall down into the orchestra section. I tried to remain calm and oddly enough noticed that my uncle didn't seem to mind at all. As a matter of fact, it looked as if he was about to nod off. As I started to daydream the band slid into Cumberland Blues and I thought ok, they like to trade off between backwoods country style ballads and wild electric songs. The song ended the first show (some announcement was probably made about having to stop because of the late hour and the crowd waiting outside for the second show).

As we got up to leave I asked my uncle what he thought of the show. I was so amazed by the Dead that I thought he must have been similarly affected. His only comment was about how loud it had been. Our ears were still ringing, and he said it reminded him of shells going off back in WWII. When we got back to the house the others were still up, anxious to get Unk's report. He repeated his comparison with the war. I hardly paid attention to the rest of their conversation, as all I could hear was the refrain,

"Gotta get down to the Cumberland mine..."

03-08-70 Santa Monica - Louis Woodbury

My third show. Live Dead had been released a few months earlier and I had developed a real love for hearing the band live.

This was actually a really nice venue that had fairly low-profile security at the time. In fact, I saw Pink Floyd there a few months later with no security/police. The DJ from KPPC (one of Tom Donahough's early underground FM stations) explained that someone had apparently set the security folks up in a back room with some porno flicks so they wouldn't bother anyone. They didn't and the night was enjoyed by all.

At some point the Dead mentioned that the show was a benefit for Owsley. I remember a scorching Lovelight closer, and also the Me & My Uncle encore as it was the first time I had ever heard them cover that tune. That made an impression on me because I had discovered that not only was their original material outstanding, but they also chose great cover tunes. I had originally heard Uncle recorded by Dino Valenti (later fronting Quicksilver) on an early solo recording.

04-12-70 Fillmore West - John J. Wood

In David Gans' book Playing In The Band, the Dead mentioned how intimidating it was to have the late Miles Davis as the opening act: Who could blame them?!

Unfortunately, my 100-minute soundboard has most of the show's contents shuffled, starting with the "acoustic" set and a still-developing Candyman (which had premiered in Cincinnati, and was featured all four nights of this run). Deep Elem was another of the showcased songs in the acoustic sets (although both this and Candyman are actually electric), and its jangly groove suggests a cross between Black Peter and the loose vitality of Dancin'.

The tape turns to the first electric set, as the show opening Schoolgirl features a healthy portion of Pigpen vocal/harmonica/bandleader interplay, augmented by healthy portions of Jerry phrases; including some lines that almost suggest New Speedway Boogie. Casey Jones is faithful to the Workingman's Dead studio version, as the band was clearly refining the song's dynamics. Apparently, there were a few sound bugs; as before Mama Tried, Weir asks, "Bear, where have you wandered off to?? Please fix the monitor."

Although the "early" Dead specialized in engaging improvisation, there are those numerous occasions of recklessness. China Cat> Rider is the case here, with rough chord changes and awkwardly innocent vocals only a Deadhead could love; however, Jerry's spunky leads manage to compensate. Sadly, the following High Time is not on the tape, so we skip to a typically charged Good Lovin', with the tape flip during the drum solo. While Pigpen is still the catalyst, Jerry's feisty fills suggest the influence of the Bitches Brew-era John McLaughlin, and almost overshadows Pigpen's thunder.

The tape shifts gears to the final electric set with a strong garage-band Dancin': Phil's pumping, subtly melodic bass lines playing counterpoint to Jerry's inertia, both correlating together with the ensemble to formulate a rumbling peak, then approaching a D-keyed point in the jam whose structure predates the Uncle John-like transitions in '73/'74 China Cat> Riders. Next comes the joyous innocence of a rough-edged Uncle John's; while delivered in the same vein as Casey Jones, a mere blueprint compared to its ensuing years.

The potent one-two of It's A Man's World and Viola Lee Blues close, the former galloping at a sprite pace via Jerry's jazzy fills and Pigpen's driving vocals; its tone a clear San Francisco influence on the James Brown ballad-turned-shuffle. Viola Lee, as "usual," builds to an engrossing climax full of urgent Jerry sprinkles and enriching Phil, gradually building a wall of sonic dissonance that leaves the listener exhausted and sated, yet happily craving more. Despite the convoluted song order, this tape is a keeper.

04-24-70 Mammoth Gardens — Mike Dolgushkin

For many years Tom Constanten was rumored to have played this show. Since he didn't list this gig in his autobiography, I asked him about it. He confirmed that he didn't play that night but told me to "get the tape. I want to hear what I sound like when I'm not there." So I procured a piss-poor audience tape, all that exists apparently. I don't understand how anyone could have mistakenly detected TC's presence as I don't hear ANY keyboards AT ALL on this tape. Nonetheless, it is quite fascinating. Dark Star is very hot; it contains that Eyes-like jam that used to show up towards the end of Dancin' in the Streets. Likewise, scorching is the full Eleven, a song they weren't normally playing at that time although you wouldn't know it from this performance. Good acoustic stuff, too. I would recommend this tape if you don't mind straining your ears a little.

04-26-70 Soundstorm Festival - Paul Gudel

In spring, 1970, I was in college at the University of Chicago, and my friends and I were of course completely into the Dead. One of my friends found out that they were to play at a rock festival in Wisconsin on April 26, 1970. We managed to find someone who owned a car, and five of us drove up there for the second day of a two-day festival.

It was just a beautiful sunny day, and the scene was classic late 60's mini-Woodstock: the stage was set up on temporary scaffolding in the middle of a field on a farm west of Madison, a field literally full of VW mini-buses and real live hippies. There is a color photograph in Vol. 1 of the recent Deadhead's Taper Companion which gives a very good idea of what it was like. The picture does, however, make it seem more crowded than I recall it; I remember standing less than 50 or so feet from the stage and still having quite a bit of elbow room around me on all sides.

The Dead came on in the middle of the afternoon and played two sets. The first set was two hours long and the second set was an hour and a half. The total show was three and one half hours of absolutely transcendental music.

The Dead opened with a very long Lovelight. I remember that this astonished me, because from listening so many times to Live/Dead, I associated Lovelight with the cataclysmic, meltdown finale to a long set of music. That the Dead would OPEN with this seemed extraordinary; where could they possibly go from here? From Lovelight they went directly into something I never expected to hear: a complete That's It For the Other One, including the Cryptical Envelopment sections. And from THAT they went without stopping into China Cat Sunflower (not followed by Rider).

I wish I could recall more specific songs; my most vivid memory of the first set was of a very long Dancin' in the Streets, which was one of the most ecstatic experiences, literally, of my life. It was not unlike the Kresge Plaza version, which took place only a week later. Instead of one long jam, as in the version from, say, Fallout from the Phil Zone, in this version the Dead returned to the chorus several times. They would take off into the most extremely complex jams, and then after taking you out as far as you could bear to go, they would suddenly come back triumphantly (led by the most joyous base playing imaginable from Phil), again and again, to "All we need is music, sweet, sweet music"—it was a revelation to me about how powerful music could be, how good it could make you feel. That the Dead at this time were going around the country, creating this sort of experience several times a week, pulling this sort of joy and depth of emotion out of themselves, still seems to me to go beyond what is humanly possible.

Unfortunately, all I can recall of the second set was that it opened with a very intense Morning Dew. I can still see in my mind's eye Jerry stepping out to the front of the stage, with a look on his face as if he were staring only inward into himself, singing it in a tremendously soulful way. I know they did not play Dark Star; at that time Dark Star was the pinnacle of the Grateful Dead experience (actually, it still is) and I would have remembered if they had done it. In retrospect I know they did material from Workingman's Dead, but I can't recall what specific songs were played.

The most extraordinary thing about the show, compared to later shows in the 90's that I went to, was how relaxed and informal it all was. Security was virtually non-existent. During the setbreak, a couple of my friends just climbed up the scaffolding onto the stage and wandered around, talking to band members and crew. I recall during the second set I noticed one of my friends standing on the side of the stage behind Mickey, banging on a cowbell.

I am so sorry that no tape of this show seems to circulate. This show encapsulated everything that made so many people love the Grateful Dead. I have often thought that if I could relive one day of my life, it would be that day.

05-02-70 Harpur College - John W. Scott

A quick glance at the questionnaire results will identify this show as an all-time favorite among tapers. The date is number three on the favorite tape list, number two for the year, and pops up again and again in the favorite versions of given songs. This is some small measure of validity to the questionnaire, as it has indeed flagged a phenomenal concert.

The concert begins with Pigpen's quizzical voice from the monitors, "How come things are so strange around here?" A strange and wonderful show opens with a great acoustic set — all of the material shines, the old traditionals, and especially the soon-to-be-released material on Workingman's Dead. This album has always puzzled and thrilled me. It was my first exposure to the Grateful Dead, as I bought a copy of their latest album to discover what all the fuss was about. I was confounded, this was not the subversive acid rock that I had expected — it even sounded more like, gasp, country. Yet my toes started tapping and soon the grooves were very well worn. Eight years and several albums later I was introduced to live tapes and was at first uncomfortable with the electric versions of these songs. Of course my appreciation grew and now it is only this show that really reminds me of the true roots of this incredible material.

The Dead start with a pretty version of the some of the old: a rousing Don't Ease and then a nice laid back I Know You Rider, including the verses that are omitted from their electric renditions. The ensuing new material is both fascinating and impressive: while we have been hearing electric versions for about a year, this is the real preview of the new acoustic album. Friend Of The Devil is so crisp and clear — the rich guitar makes this one of my favorite versions. It is followed by some interesting banter, as the crowd calls out for its favorite songs.

Jerry: Everybody just relax, man, we have you all night long.

Phil: How do you expect us to play music when you're screaming?

Bobby: Cool it, you guys, cool it, cool it. You got to start acting like a mature, responsible audience.

Jerry: Don't listen to him.

Phil: Hey, play St. Stephen.

Falsetto Bobby: St. Stephen!

A few songs later, Candyman ends abruptly and immediately we get a blistering Cumberland — phenomenal! It is easy to think of the album as the aberrant version of this song, electric versions are both common and strong, but tonight they remind me that this song was written for acoustic guitar. The same goes for all the Workingman's Dead material — it is impressive just how tight it is. Things get even more interesting when some members of The New Riders, complete with mandolin, join the Dead for "Gospel time" (Cold Jordan). The set is closed by a pretty Uncle John's Band. The mandolin is a welcome addition, giving the song an added warmth.

The Dead match the acoustic with a killer electric set, starting with a nice, loose St. Stephen. That's It For The Other One is historic. After the drum solo the Dead come hurtling into a fast, precise Quodlibet For Tenderfeet, led by Phil on some masterful bass. There is a nice extended introduction before the first verse, but it is the long varied jam between verses that grabs me by my tender parts and says, "Hey, pay attention!" The Dead maintain the enthusiasm with solid, fun versions of Cosmic Charlie and Casey Jones and with a great Good Lovin, filled with lightning leads from Jerry. Cold Rain is the only weak point of the show. In spite of some solid vocals and good effort at the end, it never fully recovers from the painful attempted tunings in the beginning.

Next Pigpen gets his chance to shine. It's A Man's World is definitely his best number of the night. The band supports him at a confident, rolling pace on an excellent song that certainly deserved wider exposure. It's A Man's World is classic Pigpen fare: intense, macho blues with a deceptively tender side. It also gives the Dead some exceptional instrumental opportunities throughout, of which Jerry and Phil take full advantage. I don't know of a better version. The Dancin that follows is also world-class, favorably comparable with anybody's version anywhere, anytime. I tend to get all hot and bothered about the Dancin from Cape Cod in 1979 — here we get a very different style that is just as strong. What a wonderful song to offer two such powerful and distinct experiences!

Phil introduces the break: "You folks should all follow the fine example of the fellow over here who got it on over here with his girlfriend. We're going to take a short break and I want you to all feel each other for about ten minutes while we... But we'll come back and play some more, honest we will."

Somehow the Dead have mustered more energy over the break as they open the second electric set with a hot Morning Dew. The final crescendo surely exhausts the Dead's reserves, and yet the Viola Lee that follows is the highlight of the show — a driving version, filled with that nothing-to-lose optimism; this one keeps on going, no matter what. After twenty minutes of intense jamming in and around Phil's wonderful beat, it builds up to a final frenzy, then degrades into terminal chaos, yet the beat bounces right back for another verse, stronger than ever, and as clean as though it had never been away. We Bid You Goodnight seems drawn out and more enthusiastic than normal, as if the Dead realize that this has been special concert and are not quite ready to let it go.

05-02-70 Harpur College - Gregg Bucci

Many of the images I have of the Harpur show were obtained from my friends who attended the show and from pictures and articles related to the show. One of the lasting images of that show comes from the very large picture of Jerry Garcia from the acoustic set contained in the 1971 school yearbook. It is hardly surprising that the Dead made the yearbook, when one considers that is also contains a picture of a burning effigy of Nixon as well as various other social and political events of the day. I always thought that it was an interesting coincidence that Binghampton, a very liberal and progressive school, had a relatively small amount of campus violence around the time of the Kent State killings and I often wonder if the Dead's playing there at that time had anything whatsoever to do with that. I tend to doubt it in the final analysis, but it is a compelling theory nevertheless.

Some of the rumors, half-truths and folklore which have arisen around this show are interesting, even if they may ultimately prove fictional. One of the stories I've heard is that the Dead hung out in the new dorm complex on campus during the afternoon of the show and that people were dispensing liquid sunshine from water pistols. Judging from the vibes the tapes give off, I tend to believe the truth of that rumor. It has also been said that following the show, which was held in the gym, someone set up a volleyball net and the Dead clowned around with some of the concert goers.

The review of the show in the school's newspaper is a treasure. There are reference copies on file at the school and I was fortunate enough to have tracked it down. I had to tell the librarian that I needed to see a copy of the paper for a history paper I was writing. Unfortunately, the effort required to obtain a copy of the review proved too formidable at the time. I remember that the review started by asking something similar to the following: "Who says the Dead never play any great shows on the East Coast?" It is clear from the review that the author recognized that the Harpur show as a very special one. It would be great if a copy of the review could be included in the "Reviews" section of DeadBase.

You might be interested to know that the school library at Binghampton contains one of the most impressive collections of "underground" newspapers anywhere. When I went to school there, they were contained in a microfilm room that was open to the student body. Between classes, my friends and I would hang out there and go though the papers. There is a gold mind worth of material in those papers, now that I think of it. I distinctly remember reading one of the papers, I think it was the Oracle, and coming across a review of a Dead show from Seattle, WA. The show was from the Eagle Auditorium sometime in late 1967, early 1968. I believe that the review even had a picture of the band from the show. It stated that after 45 minutes of tuning up and noodling that the band had to cancel the performance because they were tripping too heavily to play. They may have played a song or two, but I'm pretty sure it said that they tried to play but just couldn't get it together. If you ever want to spend your vacation doing some interesting research, those newspapers could well provide you with a rewarding one.

An interesting, but probably meaningless, coincidence is that every time the Dead has played Binghampton they have performed a song from Aoxomoxoa. The four shows in Bingo have produce two St. Stephens, two Duprees, one China Cat Sunflower and one Cosmic Charlie. All four shows in Bingo have been well above average as far as this fan is concerned. Judging by the favorite shows feedback in DeadBase V, I am not the only one of this opinion.

05-03-70 Wesleyan U. — Mike Dolgushkin

Here's a tape that's probably useful for "historical value only." Not that the band didn't play well, they certainly did, it's just that the audience is so LOUD. Can you imagine someone talking during New Speedway Boogie? Get this tape, you'll hear it. This seems to have been some sort of primitive remote broadcast, during Lovelight someone is carrying on a running commentary on what the audience is doing. Oh, well, if you have to have EVERYTHING, get this show.

05-06-70 Kresge Plaza, M.I.T. - John W. Scott

This show is a true classic. In my early tape trading days this was perhaps my very first tape from 1970 — the one tape that I saw on everybody's list, it is one of my earliest and fondest memories.

On a cold May afternoon, the Dead provide a preview for the MIT students of their concert the following night. Due to the Kent State shootings, classes were boycotted across the nation and campuses were bustling. It was natural that some of this restless energy collected around the Dead at Kresge Plaza.

As it is cold out, Dancin is a little slow getting started, but once it gathers some momentum, there are some exceptional jams. This seems a very appropriate song for a free outdoor concert. After Next Time we get the sales pitch from Phil: "Maybe this would be a good place to point out that we're still playing at Dupont Gymnasium on Thursday night. This is just a taste of how much fun we can all really have. (Jerry: 'What?!') Besides it will be much warmer in there and we can play a hell of a lot better."

A very nice Morning Dew makes certain that the Dead will have to work to live up to Phil's promise. Good Lovin starts with the immortal words: "This microphone over here don't work so fucking good, you guys." The song does work well, as does the rest of the show — lots of fun for free.

The band cuts the preview short due to cold weather, but given the power of this preview I doubt that any one who happened by could have resisted the real thing the following night, even the most sheltered, or focused of students must have had their horizons broadened on this chilly May afternoon.

The entire show smokes, but get this one for the Lovelight. It contains hints of St. Stephen and China Cat.

06-24-70 Capitol Theater - René Gandolfi

We drove up from Queens to Port Chester, seven packed in one car, partying all the way. It was Bob's birthday (Barnes, not Weir). He had no ticket but was sure he'd get in as the stars were right, this was to be his first Dead concert. We thought we were the lucky ones, we were holding tickets for the front row, center mezzanine. The show was set to start at midnight, and we got there early enough to meet the early show crowd coming out. Everyone said the first show was great. I met someone with a cassette tape of the show, he was playing Alligator — Pigpen at his finest — double drummers driving! We left Bob outside to find his own way in. We entered the theater and were immediately enveloped by what was to become an all encompassing aura of quintessential Grateful Dead. No uptight vibes like at Fillmore East. Even the uniformed guards were mellow, smiling and welcoming you. It was a three-set night, first Acoustic Dead — smooth, mellow, clean. You could feel them draw the audience in, taking off the edges, weaving the spell. Light a cigarette (no smoking in the theater, right!), and an usher would point a flashlight at you, no words, no orders, no heavy scene, just a beam of light — then, if you didn't put it out, a second usher from the orchestra would beam in, and then a third, fourth, as many as it would take to turn you into a private light show and put out the butt. Light a joint and the first beam hit only long enough to let the match go out and off went the beam, no hassle. I saw one guy playing Bogart and heard the usher say, "Pass it, or put it out!"

The acoustic set was followed by NRPS with Mickey on drums, and Jerry on pedal steel. What the acoustic set did to mellow you, the Riders did to get you rockin. The last number, Honky Tonk Women, got everyone up on their feet. Someone (Jerry?) told the crowd that it would take a while to set up for the electric set, so kick back and party, get to know your neighbor, which everyone did. I've seen Winterland get that loose, but never anything this close to New York City. Outside the theater, Bob was hanging around by the stage entrance. (I met up with him a few days later and got his whole story — it blew me away.) He was partying with people at the door, said that numbers were going in and coming out freely. Inside the stage was set and the houselights dimmed, the announcer stepped out on stage right, a mike in his hand, a spot from the balcony, and he said, "If I were to stand on this stage tonight at say something, I'd say..The GRATEFUL DEAD." With that, four things happened simultaneously; double drummers began to pound out the first beats of NFA, explosions in synch to Mickey's bass pedal went off behind a concave wall of amps and speakers that separated the Dead from back stage, each flashing bright white followed by a puff of smoke, the stage lights and spots hit the band, and the audience, which until now had kept to their assigned seats, and had left the aisles clear, surged up, and the aisles filled from the stage edge to mid orchestra and stayed that way for the rest of the night. What followed was, to say the least, an energy packed set with excellent song choice and rendition. The Dead had set us up like a sculptor work with his clay, and now they were taking us on a trip. NFA was followed by Easy Wind, with the Pig in fine form. Behind the amps, forming a second wall, was an arch of people, Dead family, friends, about four people deep, extending from the edge of the stage on the right all the way around to the edge on the left, all moving and dancing. Somewhere in the set, a young lady jumped up on stage — no heavy muscle to get her away from the band, just one guy moving out from the "wall" to take her, pull her close, and dance her back stage. When a guy jumped up, a lady did the same honors. Everything was so mellow! Outside, Bob heard someone yell to him, "Hey, you, what you doin?" He looked up to a window one story up and saw this guy with a beard and mustache calling to him. Bob quickly explained his plight, one birthday boy, great show, no ticket. The bearded man told him, "Hold it!," and scribbled something on a matchbook cover, tossed it down to Bob and told him to show it to the fellow at the stage door. Bob took the note to the door as told, and was immediately dragged through the door into a crowd of people back stage, party in full swing. A little later, he saw the guy with the beard who had helped him get in. The man had just put on a hat with a feather in it, and walked back out to the organ and mike on stage!!

Throughout the night, pyrotechnics punctuated the music. The Dark Star was cosmic, with guitar riffs that made you feel like you'd just left this earth and joined the crew of a starship. Coming out of one instrumental section, Jerry stepped up to the mike, just as he cut into the lyric, "Dark Star crashes..." a piece of flash paper flipped over his head, burning first red then a final flash of bright yellow as it arched down in front of his face. He smiled.

By the end of the night everyone in the theater felt like they knew everyone else. The set ended, the amps were turned off, the stage doors opened to let the smoke clear, the early stirrings of dawn could be seen through the open doors and still the crowd just sat there, stunned. And the Dead, knowing that all good trips need a smooth landing, came back on stage with Dave Nelson and Marmaduke and, acapella, sang a Cold Jordan encore that left no room for anything more.

09-18-70 Fillmore East - Rich Petlock

That's It For The Other One is usually the first song on Side A of a tape from this show. Though it is somewhat short, compared to other versions, Jerry's guitar work in the jams is very interesting. Pigpen belts out a nice version of It's A Man's World. A good version of the all too rare Till The Morning Comes is next. This was probably the first time that it was performed. The only known electric version of Operator was also played at this show. A hot jam session ends this show, with a very well played and jammed out Good Lovin in it.

09-19-70 Fillmore East - Jamie Johansen

I've always been a huge fan of music from 1970 and when I got this technically flawless tape I was blown away that this show was not held in such high regard as others form this formidable year.

While the set list may not directly catch your eye, I guarantee that the playing will blow your mind away!! My tape begins with the Dark Star I believe is the best ever played (yeah yeah 2-13 and 8-27-72 are excellent). As was common place for this year, the band introduces the theme, and melts into psychedelic bliss. From here, they fall in and out of consciousness with the music almost coming to a stop in several places. Out of these ashes rise a jam that is part Feelin Groovy jam, part heaven. Garcia is merely acting as an instrument by which the music can pour out. Jerry is at his lyrical best, with jams that just put a smile on your face.

This Dark Star melts into a rowdy St Stephen that simply puts most other versions to shame. After this comes what I believe is the finest Not Fade Away of all time. As Stephen tapers into oblivion, the drummers begin their tribal beat. As the band crashes into the song, Phil produces some sound effects with his bass that lets you know that the band means business. You have to listen to the tape to believe the jams that occur within this one song, including a full fledged China Cat jam that is just the pinnacle of this great show. This exhausting version is then followed up by an equally compelling Lovelight with full Pigpen rap. As the band comes to a crashing halt, Jerry yells FUCK!! into the mics, proclaiming he has given his all.

What follows is something I have never heard on any other tape. The PA music begins, with the tape still rolling, while the demanding New York crowd clamors for more. Suddenly the crowd erupts as it is apparent that someone has come back on stage. Unfortunately for the crowd, it is only Phil and Pig out to tell them that Jerry has serious cramps and that Bobby has trashed his voice. After the crowd vocalizes their displeasure, a well lubricated Pigpen adds his two cents worth by telling everyone to go home and get some pussy! A truly classic show that needs a full soundboard to accompany what's already out there.

09-19-70 Fillmore East - Jim Hecht

Recollections of 9/19/70 in Particular and 1970 in General

I attended about 50 shows; the first was 1/2/70 (one of the three greatest I ever saw) and the last was in 1981. About 20 of those shows were in 1970. I personally feel, for a number of reasons, that 1970 may have been the peak year of the Dead experience. At least on the east coast, they finally became a stand alone act and from May onwards it was just the Dead (and friends). Even though they lost TC (he left at the end of January, 1970) they still had Mickey and most importantly had a healthy and vibrant Pigpen. As long as they had Pig they had someone who the rest of the band could jam behind without having to sing, and as a bonus, they could properly perform the most joyful song in the Dead experience, Lovelight.

Everything seemed to come together in the September 1970 four day run at the Fillmore East. I had seen them twice while traveling in the summer. Once in Winnipeg, Canada as part of the Trans-Canada Festival. A second time was at the Euphoria Ballroom in San Rafael, CA where Janis Joplin had joined Pigpen onstage during Lovelight. When I returned from summer vacation I found that my fraternity brothers at Columbia had obtained tickets to all 4 shows at the Fillmore East and I would get to go to 3 of them.

The first was Thursday, 9/17/90. The other day I listened to the audience cassette tape we made. The band talks like they were returning home (what a shambles this place has become over the summer) they spend many minutes adjusting the monitors and launch into a brand new tune, an acoustic version of Trucking. The song was so new that it received little attraction, although the next night, Friday, the audience is rhythmically applauding as if part of the crowd had already learned the song.

The acoustic sets on all four nights were American Beauty inspired gems with Thursday and Saturday ending with End of the Road/Swing Low Sweet Chariot. The songs were new and beautiful, the playing was inspired, and the acoustic sets set the stage each night for the rest of the gig. I don't have a tape of the electric set on Thursday but I do remember thinking that it was really good and I couldn't wait for Saturday.

Everyone had a feeling that either Friday (9/18) or Sat (9/19) would be THE night. I was secretly hoping that the Friday show which I wouldn't get to see was their off night. Talking to my friends on Saturday it was apparent that while it was really good it was not the ultimate peak. After the acoustic set on Sat, which I only have a few songs from on tape, the New Riders came on and were perfect. I do have a tape of most of their set and they simply took the audience to the next level from which the Dead were due to depart from. What is noticeable is that Garcia on pedal steel couldn't be held back, a foreshadowing of what was to come. The electric set that night was the best one I was ever at and fortunately my friend was able to record most of the NRPS and the electric set it in its entirety (minus a side change during Lovelight and a few missing bars in Sugar Magnolia and in a drums portion).

Some people do not like audience tapes because they are muddy, distant etc. The recording equipment was primitive but we were college students after all and certainly couldn't afford small high quality decks. It had to be small and conceivable otherwise Bill Graham's guards would confiscate the tape and sometimes the equipment! The tape was made from about row 15 on the right side of the orchestra and for me it has the audience ambiance that soundboards always lack. Furthermore, the audience was fairly well behaved and knew when to stomp and when to be quiet.

Back to the concert though. The set started off with Morning Dew which just kept building. The Morning Dew just reminded me of the swirling never resting sea. Garcia was unrestrained and it was clear at this point that the band was "on". Dew ended and I was actually a little disappointed. Not in the playing or how I felt but in the recollection that the best Dead shows were the ones where they didn't stop but just went from one song into another. If they didn't segue, then often after a few filler songs you were back to normal.

But this show was different. This was the only time I can think of that each song moved you to a higher level, or at least kept you at the same level, as the previous song. Me and My Uncle kept you up there. Good Morning Little Schoolgirl brought Pigpen out and clearly it was a great night for him. The level notched up. Cold Rain and Snow kept up the momentum. At this point the whole audience was energized. Next came Easy Wind and I doubt they would ever play or had played that song with such an energy level. Sugar Magnolia was probably the perfect choice at that point. It tapped the audience's desire for a rollicking song so that it could sit (or stand at some point) through what was to come next.

The Dead played Dark Star> St. Stephen> NFA> Lovelight only a few times on the East Coast; all in the May to November period. They only played this sequence a few times at other locations. Prior to 1970 the Eleven was played while at the end of, and after, 1970 NFA often had GTRFB added which produced a different effect. Suffice it to say that, for me, they never were better (maybe equal in a few cases) on any of those individual songs than they were here. Jamie Johansen has reviewed the SBD of this sequence for DeadBase Forum and I heartily agree.

After the concert my friends and I were drained. We agreed that this was THE concert and just hoped that the tape came out. We wandered around the streets of NYC finding ourselves in front of the Dead's hotel. We waited around a little and finally took the train back to Columbia. To point out the quality of the weekend I also attended the next night Sunday 9/20. It was definitely not up to the standards of the night before. Yet the DeadBase reviewer seems quite impressed by the available soundboard tape. I would say that 9/19 along with the Boston University Concert on 11/21/70 were the only two where the last line of Samuel Becketts novel Watt is applicable. "No symbols where none intended."

This show, to me, is on par with 2/13, 14/70 and 5/2/70. I find myself constantly blown away every time I listen to it. The recording is crisp, the performances are excellent, I don't understand why this show isn't held in as high regard as some others.

The band opens with my favorite acoustic set EVER. Everything they did turned to gold. Big Railroad Blues is particularly interesting, the acoustic versions had a different rhythm and general feeling than the electric. Ripple is sweet, as is To Lay Me Down, where SOMEONE is playing a piano. Who is it? Truckin' is good also, while I love the subsequent electric versions I wish they would have explored this avenue more.

The electric set leads off with Casey Jones. Particular highlights are Sittin' On Top of the World, Big Boy Pete and Easy Wind. Unfortunately, somewhat less than half of Good Lovin' is on the tape. The jam, however, is absolutely stellar. Not Fade Away starts it, one of the longest versions I've heard, leading into what may be the all-time best rendition of Caution. Many different jams are explored, the band takes their time. Jerry's leads at times remind me of his 1974 style! Caution drops off into a scary feedback; primal melting music at its finest. Then, what else could they possibly end with but We Bid You Goodnight. Really, this show should be an essential part of anyone's tape collection. If you don't have it then you're missing something special.

09-25-70 Pasadena Civic Aud. - René Gandolfi

The Dead only played here once, probably because the town makes Orange County look like liberal heaven. At the Civic Auditorium, you were not allowed to stand during the performance. You had to stay in your seat, and there was definitely no one in the aisles. In spite of this, the Dead played a great show, and even managed to nail the Pasadena authorities a little bit.

Towards the end of the second set, Bobby told the crowd that Pasadena had a curfew and that the band had been told to cut off the music at midnight. He made the announcement at about ten to midnight. Bob — "We made them a deal, we'll only play one more song and they said ok." Little did Pasadena realize what the Dead can do to burn you with that one, and they ripped into a Lovelight finale of epic proportions. Went longer than ten minutes, though.

09-25-70 Pasadena Civic Aud. - Louis Woodbury

This was the first time I saw a show with the New Riders...Excellent! They opened the show with Casey Jones (a new tune at the time) with a rolling rhythm backbeat that sounded like a steam engine. There are songs that we hear from time to time that don't really click until one particular listen. That night Pigpen did an Easy Wind that really made that song for me.

Garcia on pedal-steel with the New Riders was a real treat. They skipped over one of his solos mistakenly, but apologized and followed up with an incredible growling Garcia solo in Dirty Business. They were still working out some rough spots, but it was all fairly casual. The New Riders did nearly everything from their first release and some great covers too. The Stones had been on Ed Sullivan a few days before and Marmaduke did a great comical Jagger impression when the New Riders closed with Honky Tonk Woman.

The Pasadena Civic was an ornate auditorium, a nice setting but the law was getting nervous about the Dead being in town and was enforcing a strict no-smoking policy. There was a young-Republican-looking young guy in a grey suit dancing awkwardly who noticed someone furtively lighting up a non-tobacco smoke and tried to get the attention of a policeman. Fortunately none of the lawmen saw the suited guy and his friends made him sit down and behave.

After one or two abortive stabs, Bill Graham's right hand man Paul Barratta began promoting concerts at Winterland on his own. These were his opening shows, featuring Jefferson Airplane, the Dead, Quicksilver, Hot Tuna and the New Riders. Unfortunately, the operation was ill-starred from the beginning. This very weekend Marty Balin left the Airplane, John Cipollina left Quicksilver, and Janis Joplin died. Graham had Winterland back by New Year's Eve.

This night also featured an innovation in broadcasting. It was the first FM quadrophonic broadcast of a live concert with a TV simulcast. The way they handled the quad aspect was that KQED broadcast two channels, KSAN the other two. Obviously this would have been extremely difficult to tape, no one to my knowledge has a four-channel audio of this show. I've never seen a video of it either, which is too bad since I chose to listen to it on KSAN rather than watching it on Channel 9.

The Dead didn't play that long but what they did was excellent. Till the Morning Comes (which I remember from that night) was the best version I've heard. Good Lovin' was also memorable, but China Cat> Rider was the highlight of the show. For quite awhile this was the ONLY live China Cat> Rider that most people had, listening to it now it still stands as being an all-time great version.

This is also the first live tape I owned. I got it in August of 1971, a year before I first saw the band.

10-16-70 Irvine Aud., Philadelphia - Zea Sonnabend

This was the oddest show I've ever been to as far as vibes are concerned. This show was the Drexel (a technical college) Homecoming concert. Drexel rented the auditorium at the University of Pennsylvania and reserved every other row for Drexel students and their dates. This meant that us hippies were surrounded front and back by awesomely STRAIGHT students expecting a nice homecoming concert but certainly not expecting the likes of Pigpen and the boys. To top that off, the hall had been designed by an ex-Penn student who had dropped out of architecture school but had gone on to become a famous architect anyway and when commissioned to design the auditorium at Penn, he submitted the same design, which didn't pass in school out of spite. They built it anyway and it has the worst acoustics of any college hall I've ever been to.

Fortunately, this was my third or fourth show so I was very much already devout and my friends and I were able to overcome the wierdness by sufficiently changing our consciousness. I remember very little of the actual content of the show except that it was very much Pigpen in the limelight and they didn't play Dark Star, which I always rooted for in those days (and still do!). They were also having a hard time with the acoustics because all of the sound immediately went up into the domed ceiling and they could probably not hear themselves.

Most of the Drexel students were polite enough to stay through the first set but during all parts of the show a few were leaving at a time and at the break quite a few left. A lot seemed quite offended by us at their concert as well as the band. I had forgotten all about this until I saw DeadBase.

10-31-70 S.U.N.Y. Stony Brook - Stu Nixon

My fifth Dead show was the turning point. The Port Chester show over six months before primed the pump and the summer interlude really built up my anticipation. This show was early in my freshman year at Stony Brook and I was ready for anything. Four of us went to the late show on Halloween night, but I was the only one of our group who had seen the Dead before. A lot of people were at their first show that weekend. After dinner we explored the campus for a while, dropping in on several coffee houses and pubs in the various dorms. The one next to mine had a particularly hip staff that played the Dead, CSN, and Joni Mitchell as I recall.

Around 10:30 we wandered over to the gym and waited outside for quite a while beyond the scheduled starting time for the second show. I had heard that the Dead were famous for the lateness of their shows so I wasn't too surprised. Other people were more impatient and started a bit of a chant to let us in. We finally got in around midnight. There were both reserved seats and general admission (in the back) at this show. We entered at the back of the gym and the four of us stayed in the back half for most of the show.

From the early moments of the first song, Casey Jones, the whole gym was dancing. Starting off with what was probably their most popular song to date immediately grabbed everybody's attention. They followed with Sugar Magnolia and we all shifted our dancing to high gear. We couldn't have kept up the flailing at that rate forever, so I was glad when they dropped down slightly on Next Time You See Me. By that time I was completely confused. All three songs were sung by a different member of the band and I imagined that the band was purposely trying to trick everybody with the variety of vocalists and song styles. Just as I was thinking that this was going to be a dance concert with all fast songs, they played That's It For The Other One and Cosmic Charlie, complete with drum solo and wild, extended jamming. I temporarily became separated from the people I was with and floated through the freeform crowd. I had lost track of what song they were playing or even how many songs, but I didn't really care.

When Pigpen began singing Big Boss Man my sense of reality slowly began to return. I remember that I once thought Pig was the leader of the band, but now I saw that they each could step up and lead for a while. How bizarre! Then I thought of Crosby, Stills, and Nash and for a second noted some similarity. Then Weir sang Mama Tried and I resumed my invented theory that the band was up there trying to fool us with each song. A hippie singing a cowboy song... Bob and Phil always reminded me of the prototype hippies while Jerry and Pig had more of a biker/hillbilly image for me.

I was becoming a little more coherent and had a chance to think for a second (in those days they took a lot more time between songs for tuning), and I started to remember the rotation of vocals earlier in the show and figured that it was now Garcia's turn. Wrong again! Pig does Good Lovin. I remember this song being really hot back in March in Port Chester, and this version was just as good. Yep, Pigpen's the leader all right! Then Garcia took over with St. Stephen and blew me away AGAIN. I saw my friends a few yards away and everyone in the place moving together with the music. As the jam progressed, the music started taking on a very slight familiarity that slowly grew until suddenly those first notes of Not Fade Away erupted from the stage. For the next fifteen minutes I experienced the most exciting and powerful music I had ever heard. Not Fade Away and Goin' Down The Road Feelin' Bad seemed as if they were made for each other and when they went back to Not Fade Away a second time I couldn't believe it. I thought that they were never going to stop, or that maybe that they couldn't stop. The music was out of control and the musicians were hanging on for their lives. Eventually they did manage to stop, and we wandered out wondering what exactly we had just experienced that night. More than just your average rock 'n roll show, some force or energy from outside this universe decided to pay a visit to the Stony Brook gym that night, and used the Grateful Dead as their passage to our dimension.

11-08-70 Capitol Theater — John W. Scott

The only tapes I have heard of this show all come from the same distinctive audience tape, with lots of crowd in the "mix." Many copies are very hissy, but low generation tapes sound quite clear for this sort of limited audience recording. The crowd that is by far the more noticeable irregularity in this tape. Once one gets used to the chatter though, one hears some silver linings to all the ambiance. It is particularly nice to hear/feel the enthusiasm, it helps to convey the intimacy of the venue. I actually find myself listening to snippets of the commentary. Twenty years later this is an anthropological find, a link into the past. Perhaps these distractions are just as pointless as the thoughtless conversations that sometimes mar shows and tapes these days, but I catch my silver linings where I can.

The conversations are by no means one-sided — after Dark Hollow, Bobby reassures the audience: "...So you're not missing nothing later on. But right now we're missing King Kong vs Godzilla, and I hope to tell ya, I didn't get to see King Kong, but but, Godzilla he was one mother fucker. He breathes, he uh spits fire, radioactive fire, and blows things up." Someone suggests, "Have him join the band." Bobby continues, "I'd hate to see him come crawling out of my iceberg." This night is a very different form of monster show.

The concert starts out with what was to be the last Grateful Dead acoustic set until 1980. There is plenty of wonderful and interesting material in this set, perhaps more so than some other classic acoustic sets such as 02/13/70 and 05/02/70. The strength is not only in the songs that we have gotten used to in acoustic sets such as Dark Hollow, Rosalie McFall and Ripple, but in a variety of rarer fare. El Paso is such a natural for acoustic music that it is a crime that it was not a regular part of the 1980 sets. Bobby's vocals are genuine and flawless, Jerry's runs throughout set this song in its old-West element far better than in electric versions.

Next up is a rare Operator: fast and fun, it has me looking for another version to add to my collection. Ripple is warm: a crowd pleaser, getting them to clap along, the ambiance helps here. Closing the set is a stunning version of Uncle John's Band, this acoustic version is very well jammed. This is one of the songs that shows the limitations of the recording as there is a fair amount of distortion in the bass and vocals.

Much of the excitement of the electric set initially derives from the novelty of the set list. The curiosities include the only known versions of Mystery Train and My Babe and apparently rare versions of New Orleans, Searchin and The Main Ten. Still, like its acoustic counterpart, every song in this set is excellent, it is not just a collection of freak tunes. It is obvious from how comfortable the band is with this unusual material that it has certainly been rehearsed, if not performed, before. I love the easy, natural way in which the Dead find the transition between Mystery Train and My Babe. The supposedly first version of Around & Around is impressively tight, an auspicious rocking start for a song that has proved to be one of the Dead's most powerful Rock & Roll numbers over the years. New Orleans is just as hot, and I am surprised that it did not catch on as one of Bobby's standards, it surely would have fared as well. Pigpen finishes the run of rarities with a rousing Searchin'.

Someone in the audience goes nuts for Baby Blue — it goes over well with a number of others also. In spite of the excitement, this song is the one that the random conversations are most noticeable and annoying. Adding insult to injury, Baby Blue is cut.

A hot Truckin results in a nice spacey Dark Star, with some soft places. The Space is fun to listen to: with the intimacy of a theater, the crowd is able to participate in the improvisation. On this audience tape, with all of the screams, laughter and assorted noises that it sounds more like a Pink Floyd composition than the normal GD Space for the time.

Out of the space comes a haunting refrain, the primordial Playin, The Main Ten. Glorious and exotic, this theme is my favorite segment of this exceptional tape. The transition into Dancin is beautiful and delicate. Phil. Theses two songs are gorgeous, so tasteful, enchanting.

11-21-70 Boston University - Thomas Flannigan

One cold Saturday night in Boston, I dragged two guys from my college dorm, got on Boston's trolley, and went to one of the most incredible music experiences of my life. I was a freshman at Boston College and had been deeply disappointed by the Jefferson Airplane concert at BC, November 7, 1970. The sound system was lousy and the Airplane were not at their best.

The Dead were not that well known in Boston yet, and had been booked to play at Boston University's Sargent Gym, a tiny place seating only 2,000 people with basketball court and small grandstands. Sargent Gym was cold and tense as gate-crashers triggered the police to drag some of the Deadheads out the door by their arms and hair. They screamed in protest as the cops moved in. A crack squad of African-American police from Roxbury were brought in, and they only handled the toughest crowd control situations. Tickets were $3.50, and some had been counterfeited, delaying the start of the concert and adding to the tension.

Finally the concert began... with a chimpanzee show! No one could figure out what this was for. After a few minutes, the New Riders started playing into a beautiful sound system. Every note was as clear as the night air. The concert had started late, so the Dead did not do their acoustic set. They came on at 10 p.m. with no cheers or acknowledgment they were onstage.

The Dead said nothing and played Casey Jones, and other short pieces. Deadbase VIII is accurate for the first 4 songs. So far, so good, but nothing special. The Dead took a long break, tuning behind the amplifiers, and came out with Good Lovin' — the old Pigpen version that lasted 20 minutes and was something like a blues concerto. The place went nuts. None of us expected this, having been listening to Live Dead, then only a few months old. We didn't expect a Motown concerto. After a tremendous ovation the Dead immediately went into the old, happy version of Dancing in the Streets, and everyone in the gym was dancing. The black cops were dancing with hippie girls, security guards were dancing with Deadheads, and on and on.

Dancing lasted 18 minutes, and the concert became more and more magical. Jerry plucked the first two notes of St, Stephen with a sly grin, and the hot gym exploded again. St. Stephen was done with the Scottish chorus, drum solo, and into an early Not Fade Away. Incredible. More jamming followed, including an extended Cosmic Charlie. Finally, the evening ended with a lyrical Uncle John's Band. A nine minute ovation ensued, until a roadie took the stage and said the Dead were too tired to play any more.

We grabbed the last trolley back to BC and were too stunned to talk. We stayed up all night, missing the Dead's impromptu acoustic radio set at 2 A.M. A transcendent experience.

12-27-70 El Monte Legion Stadium - Louis Woodbury

This venue was smaller than the average high school gym and former home of Saturday Night Wrestling and is now gone.

This one I am pretty sure I caught on the 27th after the appearance on KPPC but the set list for the 28th looks more familiar. KPPC was free-form radio at its best with a long history of pranksterism broadcasting from the basement of the Pasadena Presbyterian Church. The DJ that followed the interview remarked that the "air-conditioning" in the tiny studio wasn't quite up to handling a visit from Garcia, Marmaduke et al who had quite audibly been smoking joints during the interview.

I knew it would be a close intimate show when I noticed Pigpen sharing a pint of whiskey with the guy taking tickets at the door. What could one say but smile and nod? Really personable folks.

At the time they were taking quite a long time between tunes and the crowd in the back was getting a bit rowdy at one point when it took several minutes for Bob to get a broken string changed (apparently they couldn't find one). Unfortunately we had to leave before it was over but I could still hear them playing Uncle John's Band from out in the parking lot on the way home.

12-31-70 Winterland - Mike Dolgushkin

I watched this on TV, so I guess this was my first exposure to the band "live." We tuned in during an unscheduled appearance by Hot Tuna. After the New Year's festivities the Dead opened with Truckin'. Jerry was in the middle.We saw an electric Monkey and the Engineer, we saw Pig sing Easy Wind. We saw Weir take a hit off a big bottle of wine. The rest of it's a blur.

02-18-71 Capitol Theater - Ron Waloff

A group of friends attending college in Allentown, PA, drove to NYC to pick up my girlfriend and her college roommate. Then we headed to Port Chester for the show. The scene was different from other rock shows in that it was happening in a small town, near the big town. Going in was uneventful, noting a large group of rather strangely dressed and acting young people.

The other thing about the group which had affected my perceptions was that they came from the west coast. This to us east coast hippies, was that they were cooler and several years (light?) ahead of us.

The show started with the NRPS who had Garcia on pedal steel sounding great. It was during this segment of the show that I remember it now, guys in fireman's uniforms walked down the aisle and got up on stage. The whole place had been filled with smoke from assorted sources and in our state, we thought that's what these firemen were there for. The entire place was emptied out into the street, a bomb threat had been called.

No bomb was found and they let everyone who was standing out on the main street of Port Chester near the theater back inside, no tickets asked for. People said it was called by folks wanting to get in but who didn't have tickets. The show itself was incredible. Six new songs played, sets that could be whole shows now or at least seem like them. Perhaps an hour longer than current shows. The jamming was incredible. By the end of the show you felt completely drained and that you had indeed been on a trip.

The memories of the shows back then was that they were so much more alive and allowed for expansive ajms and contained more songs and that twenty to twenty-five songs per show were about average length. But I still go as often as possible.

04-04-71 Manhattan Center - Blair Jackson

This was quite a day for me. That Sunday afternoon, a friend and I had taken the subway down to Greenwich Village to see Tom Constanten's mime/musical piece Tarot at a small off-off-off-Broadway theater. I had never seen T. C. live before so I was thrilled to catch him in the flesh in such an intimate place. It was trippy and strange as I had hoped. (I was fortunate enough to be at the 04/28/71 Fillmore East show a couple of weeks later where he sat in with the boys — what a show!)

From the theater we headed up to the Manhattan Center, where people were already queued up around the block for the Dead-NRPS "Dance Marathon." In line I bought my very first Grateful Dead T-shirt: a bootleg job showing Garcia playing an acoustic guitar under the band's name in American Beauty lettering. I wore it till it fell off me a couple of years later; by then there were a few good official shirts to be found.

Once inside something became very clear — the promoters had sold way too many tickets. The place had a slight gymnasium quality to it, but with literally hundreds more than the legal capacity inside (we subsequently learned that dozens had broken in through a roof entrance) it took on the steamy ambience of a sauna. It was easily the most crowded I've ever been at a show, and the one I saw two nights later at the same place wasn't much better.

I have no memory of the Riders' set that night, but I was into them pretty big time in those days, so I assume I loved it. Actually, I probably spent most of the set trying to find room to breathe. I never did. The Dead's two sets were both a little on the short side, though filled with some excellent rock and roll. This was the first time I remember noticing that a show wasn't spacey, and I feared that the band was trying too hard to cater to the rock 'n' roll yahoos who'd started coming to shows after Casey Jones and Truckin were hits. It didn't occur to me then that no one could have endured a space show under sweatbox conditions like that. My personal highlight was St. Stephen, of course, though like everything else that night, it was hard to fully appreciate it bathed in perspiration. You win a few, you loose a few.

04-06-71 Manhattan Center - Mike Dolgushkin

Damn near every tape I've gotten from this period has been great, I want to mention this one because of its unusual song selection. It took them a little while to figure out how Oh Boy went, but once they started they pulled it off quite well. A rare Hog for You followed. A great Midnight Hour came later in the first set. And, this doesn't qualify as rare material, but the Truckin' that closed the second set is WAILIN'!

04-26-71 Fillmore East - G. M.

Tickets for the April '71 Fillmore Dead shows were not that easy to come by. Since this was the pre-Ticketron era, people were camping out three days before the tickets were scheduled to go on sale. The friday before the shows, my friend Barry and I had late-show seats for Procul Harum (who, by the way, were great) and while waiting outside, Barry decided to see if any Dead tickets had been returned. This is how we wound up with seventh row center seats for the April 26th show.

Monday evening we stepped off the Lexington Avenue local at Astor Place in the Village and immediately noticed the very surreal atmosphere that seemed to envelop us. As we walked the two blocks to the Fillmore, the people on the street seemed a little different and the smell of patchouli oil permeated the cool, spring night. We were able to walk right into the theater and noticed Marmaduke walking ahead of us with his guitar case in hand. A three hundred pound usher wearing a Fillmore East t-shirt and sporting a very long pony tail handed us our programs and pointed to our seats.

The Fillmore had a very strict policy about smoking. However, when the Dead came to town, the rules changed. Amidst the smell the audience seemed very relaxed, and people were actually sitting in their seats. After nodding to the familiar faces that I used to see at every concert, the lights went down and the New Riders of the Purple Sage were playing. Garcia, of course, was playing pedal steel guitar. The set must have lasted over an hour and I remember the music as being very upbeat, funky, and a lot of fun. Behind the band, an amazing light show of colors and shapes danced, swirled, and seemed to become part of the tie-dyed flourescent speaker system grills situated on either side of the stage.

After a thirty minute break, the lights again went down and Kip Cohen, the General Manager made the announcement, "From San Francisco, please welcome the Grateful Dead." As the band plowed into Bertha, large letters spelling out Grateful Dead descended from the ceiling and began flashing on and off. The band played, the light show colors danced over the musicians, and every few minutes a brilliant burst of white flame shot up toward the ceiling behind the speakers. To this day I would love to know how they did it! Every three or four songs Pigpen would walk up to the mike and belt out one of his numbers, definitely one of the highlights.

Perhaps an hour into the set, the Dead once again tuned up their instruments while Garcia sneaked a couple of drags from his everpresent cigarette. As the audience became very quiet, the band went into Dark Star. Above our heads the ball of mirrors started to turn and starsize lights began to travel over our seats, bodies, and the walls, making 360-degree trips around the theater. The audience was very subdued, lying all the way back in their seats and really getting into the music. All of a sudden, the band was playing Casey Jones and the first set was over. A quick trip to the water fountain and to the john and we were back in our seats for the second set.

As the lights went down it became apparent that another musician was also on stage. It was not uncommon for musicians to come by and jam with the Dead. The question was who was in town tonight. Garcia stepped up to the mike and introduced Duane Allman and the Dead took off into Sugar Magnolia. Allman really had a chance to shine in It Hurts Me Too as he, Garcia, and Pigpen took turns on the breaks. The rest of the set sounded great; the band was very tight, the colors danced around the theater, flashes of white light kept erupting, the bass kept thundering, and suddenly it was all over.

As Barry and I sauntered out the side door onto Second Avenue, our immediate concerns were: How to deal with a two-hour subway ride at 3 AM and how to get tickets for the rest of the shows.

04-27-71 Fillmore East - John J. Wood

While the other three nights have received extensive annotation in these pages, this night has been ignored; which may have paled in comparison to the other three, but (on tape) also a unique standout in its own right. The band benefitted greatly from having Tom Constanten and the late Duane Allman sit in the other nights, but I don't think the Dead have played with a guest that offered such a contrast in styles until Hall & Oates on the MSG 9/24/88 Rainforest Benefit.

First, I must make the admission that — like Hall & Oates — I have never been a Beach Boys fan. I have always felt that most of their material were Chuck Berry rip-offs, their stories lyrically disposable. While Pet Sounds has been widely considered a breakthrough for these California folks, I have always preferred anything on the Beatles' Sergeant Pepper, the Airplane's Surrealistic Pillow, and the Dead's underrated debut album. Still, the Beach Boys have become a big influence on rock & roll, one which I simply never hopped on their bandwagon.

Yet, as the tapes indicate, the Beach Boys managed to synthesize the essence of the Dead's sound into their own music. Searchin' is given a Pigpen barroom reading with edgy vocal harmonies that work. Riot In Cell Block #9 boast loony sound effects that typify a rebel anti-law stance.

After a pair of Beach Boys standards that reveal their musical limitations (as they unconvincingly attempted a sing-along with the audience on Good Vibrations), the Dead plug in for a Deal-styled Help Me Rhonda. Sadly, my tape is cut one minute into this gem, and that one minute contains much more bite than the Beach Boys original.

The song that works best for the two groups, though, is Merle Haggard's anti-drug ode to rednecks, Okie From Muskogee. Although the tone appears sincere, I cannot help but draw the sarcasm that makes this once-only-played rendition such a gem. While Jerry had limited room to solo, his tastefully accomplished leads around Brian Wilson's vocals typify his strength as a role player. In the recent Jerry-Elvis Costello interview in Musician magazine, Garcia stressed that his favorite role is a support musician: he must have had a ball this night.

The Beach Boys cap their cameo appearance by assisting in an almost-thrash version of Johnny B. Goode. Then it's business as usual with Uncle John's and Lovelight (yeah, some business!!). While this night has been often taken for granted, the tapes revel in its own innocence, and can always find a home in every Deadhead's tape collection.

04-28-71 Fillmore East - Tom Constanten

New York City. The complete yellow pages. Population saturation, communication nexus, geopolitical serendipity, event space density — whatever the reasons and like it or not, it was always a special place to play. There's something you can feel in the air, the exhilaration of performing for a critical but approving audience. Even the lights feel warmer. I remember several magical

Dark Stars at the Fillmore East, even aside from the April 28, 1971 show when I sat in with the band. That one occurred during the Tarot project, and so I happened to be in town. The previous night, the Beach Boys sat in with the band, and Bob Dylan was in attendance. Guess which evening was written up in Rolling Stone?

04-28-71 Fillmore East - John W. Scott

Out of a landmark series of concerts, this night is often overshadowed by the following night, but it still stands out as one of the Dead's finest shows. The Dead tip their hand early as they open up the show with a hot Truckin, almost too hot for the first set. What follows is a wonderful variety of well-played songs. The two Pigpen tunes are the best of the set; we get a great version of that rare song, The Rub. This is the tune I find myself singing after the first set is over. King Bee is equally impressive as Pigpen gets good bass and guitar support. Other great material in this set includes Cumberland, Bobby McGee, Ripple, and a hot Bird Song. They close with a fine Bertha.

The second set is filled with all-star performances of some of the Dead's greatest songs. The Morning Dew is easily one of the best from this era. And this from a standing start! Pigpen does up yet another intense Hard To Handle, with Phil giving what is perhaps his best performance of the evening. We get a tasty Other One, a respectable Sugar Magnolia, and then Tom Constanten returns to the Dead for the rest of the show. The resulting songs are incredibly tight, even if somewhat short. Dark Star is wonderful. It starts out a little fast, but they slow it down a bit and do some nice wandering. Then the Dead move right into yet another proven crowd pleaser: the St. Stephen> NFA> GDTRFB> NFA medley. The audience was surely sated. I wonder whether anyone could have been so bold as to expect (or even hope) the next night to rival this. Surprises can be wonderful indeed.

04-29-71 Fillmore East - Dick Latvala

This famous show is the Grateful Dead's last Fillmore East appearance. There are four previous shows on this run, and each has something special to offer, but the final night is the most exciting.

The first set was well played, but there are no exceptional moments other than Hard To Handle which had been done on each of the previous four nights; and, as in most 1971 versions, it is very powerful.

The second set opens with a rousing Morning Dew. Things slow down with adequate renditions of Minglewood, Sugar Magnolia and Black Peter. Beat It On Down The Line and Second That Emotion (talk about a rare cover tune!) pick things up nicely and then we get the first major highlight of the evening: Alligator> Goin Down The Road Feelin Bad> Cold Rain & Snow. This version of Alligator includes some improvisational material that makes you feel just about as good as humanly possible, reaching a step above an exciting attempt at a tune. China Cat> I Know You Rider and Greatest Story both have exciting moments. Soon we reach the end of the show and we get a special treat: one of the best versions ever of Midnight Hour and the most involving We Bid You Goodnight I have heard.

Since this tape is easily available, and it is of such excellent quality, I would definitely include it in a collection of the best Dead shows.

04-05-71 Manhattan Center — Dave Levy

You see, it's Spring of 1971. There's this kid named Dave. He's really into music. All kinds of music. He's also just fallen in love with Roz. Dave's friends are all planning to meet in New York City to go to a Grateful Dead show. Dave is talked into it. Why not? Roz lives in Brooklyn and it seems to be time to (oh my God!) meet her parents. They decide to try to get into the show on Monday, April 5 at Manhattan Center. This show is the second of a three-night stand being billed as the Dance Marathon.

Dave is real curious about what the big deal is. What's so special about a Dead show, anyway? No one will give him an answer. They all just sort of nod knowingly and say, "You'll see, you'll see. You gotta BE there!."

On show night Dave, Roz, Karen, and Dana all take the subway from Brooklyn to Manhattan. Lots of people are hanging out around the venue. Lots of folks looking for tickets. Somehow, a pair of tickets materialize for Roz and Dave. They pay the price printed on the tickets ($5.00). Dave hears lots of people grumbling about how expensive these shows have gotten and how Dead shows should be free and what a Capitalist-ripoff the whole scene is becoming.

Inside is nothing like he's seen before. Lot's of freaks just milling around. Dave and Roz find their friend Billy inside and settle down on the floor. Looking around, Dave notices that the equipment on the stage has had all the speaker grills replaced with very colorful tie-dyes. Looks nice. There's quite a bit of electricity and anticipation in the air.

Karen explains that the New Riders of the Purple Sage will start the show and to watch for Jerry (whoever that is) on pedal steel. Just before the lights go down, some orange juice is passed around. Dave and Roz are real thirsty and drink some.

Well, as the New Riders start playing Dave sort of fades out. Seems there are all these lights and things happening behind his eyes. This is pleasant Country-style music (but it DOES have an interesting electric edge to it, doesn't it?) and he sort of drifts through the Riders set, disturbed only by requests to push back (it is VERY crowded — later, he'll learn that there were many counterfeit tickets sold).

A short break happens during which Dave's friends seem to be oddly concerned over his well being. Dave can't understand this, as he feels fine (he is sure that he's completely disassociated with his body, however, and his consciousness drifts nearby watching the scene with amusement).

The lights go out again and THIS time things get real different. The whole crowd seems to go crazy. Hootin' and hollerin'. It's contagious. Dave starts yelling too. Meanwhile something is happening on a completely non-verbal level with Roz. Somehow, some sort of bonding seems to be happening. Dave can't recall what NOT being with her is like.

The band comes on stage. There's more talk about pushing back. Seems the folks up front are being really squeezed. They start to play.

Dave's impressions:

ELECTRIC! ELECTRIC! ELECTRIC! Where did all this electricity come from? This is not the same as American Beauty. His breath is taken away. Something about reverb-and-echo-and-guitars-and-lyrics-and-the-crowd and the lights and owowoWOWOWOWOWOWO!!!!

These guys just PLAY! No jumping around or other hysterics. It's like a classical ensemble performance, or a good jazz group... they just let the music do what it's supposed to do and don't rely on a circus atmosphere to pump up the crowd! This is EXACTLY the solution to what has made him feel uncomfortable with most Rock 'n Roll performances.

Some more fade out time now...

Dave somehow realizes that the discomfort he's feeling is because he has to go to the bathroom. He starts off to find the restrooms (Roz is in a mild panic 'cause she's SURE he'll never find his way back). Downstairs to the lounge. This has GOT to be the strangest sight he's ever seen. There must be a hundred people sitting around in the lounge area. All you can hear down there is the bass drum and the electric bass. THUMP ka-THUMP ka-THUMP ka-THUMP. All these people look completely zombied-out and they are ALL tapping in rhythm to the THUMP ka-THUMP. Dazed and confused, Dave blunders into what appears to be a bathroom. The ladies in there very gently maneuver him out and point him towards the men's room. No one gets uptight.

Back upstairs in time for the break. Roz is relieved. Dave is slowly re-joining the human race and becoming more aware of his surroundings. He's pretty sure that during the first set he managed to completely re-create the evolution of the human mind, starting at some sort of invertebrate flatworm-type creature and evolving, evolving... He chats with friends during the break.

The lights go down for the second set (third, if you count the Riders). The band breaks into this intense, pounding boogie. Things begin to flow. The whole audience is dancing together. Oh yeah! This one IS on American Beauty. It's Truckin'! The music gets softer and the lights go down even further and suddenly... An EXPLOSION of bass notes and all the spotlights focus on this SPARKLEBALL! Spinning lights everywhere, colors! The guy next to Dave loses it entirely... he starts saying "Holy sh*t! The Sun. The Moon. The Grateful Dead. Oh God! Oh God!..." over and over and over. At some point he becomes horizontal and later drifts off.

The concert ends with a rhythmic-tribal-howling exchange between the singer (someone called him Pigpen) and the audience. Clearly, the crowd and the band are playing TOGETHER. Symbiosis and synchronicity.

The band is gone. The lights are back on. Everyone drifts around not wanting to leave. Dave and Roz have somehow become DaveandRoz (later to be known as Swifty Nifty and the Howling Whoopee). They describe a sense of being hermetically sealed together. Welded by the experience. An intense déja-vu flows through Dave's experience as he sees friends again from a new perspective.

As DaveandRoz and Karen and Dana leave the ballroom and begin to walk off the effects (they won't be able to go near the subway for a couple of hours yet), a feeling envelops them that something really extraordinary has happened. They are satisfied, content, happy. The night goes on...

Postscript —DaveandRoz celebrated their 18th wedding anniversary in August of 1991. Their 20th "unofficial" anniversary was four months earlier, on April 5th. That is the one that really counts. Whatever glue was used on April 5, 1971 was good stuff. It has lasted.

07-31-71 Yale Bowl - Blair Jackson

I guess one way of telling that the Deadhead bug had bit me was the fact that after a year of seeing the band in the relatively safe confines of the Fillmore East and the Capitol Theater, I started traveling to see shows whenever I could. One of my first Grateful Dead field trips was at the Yale Bowl in New Haven, Connecticut, about two hours from my suburban New York home. In '69 and '70 the New York Giants football team played some of their home games there while Yankee Stadium was being refurbished, so I was already familiar with the stadium.

Like any self-respecting elitist, I was horrified at first that my beloved cult band would play a stadium, but when my brother, my best friend David, and I arrived inside, we were delighted to see that the concert was only taking place in one end zone of the cavernous facility. It was still the largest crowd I'd ever seen the Dead play for. Security going in was nonexistent — in fact, now that I think about it, I was rarely frisked at shows until the mid-70's — and I took advantage of the situation by bringing in my little Aiwa reel-to-reel tape recorder and a few three-inch reels. Yes, fans, this is the one and only Dead concert I ever taped!

Actually, though, my friend David ended up doing the taping, because a curious thing happened. The way the concert was set up, the crowd was in the end zone bleachers and there was a sizeable half circle of grass between the stands and the stage that was empty. Well, needless to say, during the opening notes of the first song, about half the crowd — me included — spilled out of our seats and onto the field where we could dance freely. Between the first and second song the promoter tried to get everyone back into the stands, but instead more people joined us on the field. Ah, joyous anarchy!

The show itself was tremendous. Though the sound was somewhat lacking (they weren't used to playing that sort of facility) over the course of two long sets they offered up a lot of what they do best. The first set had a spacey section that linked Playin', Dark Star (fairly short as I recall) and the still-new Bird Song. Sugaree and Mr. Charlie both had their debuts in that set, too. The second set was rockin' nearly every second, and included China Cat> Rider and the Not Fade Away> GDTRFB> Not Fade Away sequence that they seemed to play every time that I saw them in '71 — not that I was complaining; Goin' Down The Road was then, and is now, among my favorite Dead tunes.

During the kick-ass Uncle John's> Johnny B. Goode encore, we noticed clouds of smoke rising from outside the stadium. When the concert was over and we filed out we quickly learned this was tear gas: a bunch of Yale radicals, believing that the Dead show should be free, had stormed the gates during the second set and had been beaten back by the police! When we got to the car, our eyes burning, we checked out the tape we'd made. It sucked, quite frankly, and I ended up recording over it about a year later. (Probably a mistake.) I haven't had a tape of the show since. My memories of the show are all good ones, though even at the time I remember saying to David, "I'm worried. I think these guys are becoming too popular."

08-06-71 Hollywood Palladium - Dick Latvala

This show is another "must have" for serious collectors, mainly because it sets the standard for audience recordings. I can't think of anything else in this range until the 80s when exceptional equipment became readily available.

The show starts off with an exciting Bertha that lets you know you're in for a blistering experience. Nothing much after this, though, until we get, without a doubt, the absolutely most incredible rendition of Hard To Handle.

The second set is awesome, not a weak moment. The climax has to be the involving and thrilling version of That's It For The Other One. Sugar Magnolia, Morning Dew, and Lovelight also leave you not wanting anything more of a show.

08-06-71 Hollywood Palladium - Louis Woodbury

A HOT show on a HOT August night! Best Hard to Handle I've heard yet.

It seemed really odd at the time to be seeing the Dead in the home palace of the polka-king Lawrence Welk. While entering the Palladium under the watchful eyes of Mr. Welk's giant mug waving a baton on the animated billboard across the street, we kinda' figured that if he only knew what was up that night he probably would have dropped his baton.

Months later, he did "crack down" on folks having too much fun at shows there and even went so far as to post signs ALL over the inside with a list of things you WOULD be arrested for and made sure every 3rd person was a frowning security guard or helmeted LAPD officer.

But not this night. The Dead stopped playing there after rules got too thick.

The New Riders with Garcia did a great set, but some folks had started to pass out from the heat down on the floor. I myself almost couldn't stay on my feet and the opening of the first set remains a tad fuzzy. I do remember the guy that can be heard getting taping tips from Bobby & Jerry after Bertha ("you out there with the microphone, if you want to get a decent recording...") packing a battery-powered reel-to-reel deck and a microphone taped to an old cane. I'm still amazed at how good that turned out under the circumstances.

Anyone who was there will also remember the plastic cups that beverages were served in. Folks discovered that a pair of them made great elevator shoes to see over the top of the crowd, except the cups occasionally cracked and collapsed suddenly under the weight and dropped the unsuspecting folks like a sacks of potatoes. An excellent show that went 'till the wee hours (at least 2 am) after which we managed to find our way home and climbed up onto the roof of the local high school to watch an impressive summer sunrise.

08-23-71 Auditorium Theater - Thomas Flannigan

This concert was the first one we ever taped, and we had to be careful about it. It was a beautiful summer night in Chicago, and the Dead did lots of Pigpen in the city of the blues. The concert was held in the 4,000 seat Auditorium Theater.

The Auditorium was built in 1889 and is thought to have among the finest acoustics in the US. The old Airplane album "Thirty Seconds Over Winterland" had 30 seconds of crowd noise from Winterland and the rest from the concert that I attended at the Auditorium Theater in 1972.

At one point during this Dead concert, Bobby said: "be cool in this place; it is the best. We like playing here." This comment was not taped. In 1976, a dancing Deadhead accidentally set one of the old curtains on fire and the Dead never were allowed to play the hall again.

This concert did not have the electricity of others I attended during this era: (November 21, 1970 Boston University — threatening cops end up dancing with Deadheads during Dancing in the Streets); October 21, 1971 Syracuse War Memorial (cops storm stage and end concert, many fans arrested); April 21, 1971, Providence (Dead defy police who came on stage to stop concert and played Uncle John's band and Johnny B. Goode as police stand helplessly near Pigpen). But there was some nice playing.

A couple in front of us featured a crew-cut guy wearing a suit and his lady friend in hose and heels. She was appalled at the surroundings. At one point she hissed at him: "I thought you were taking me to a concert!"

08-23> 24-71 Auditorium Theater - Paul Scotton

This was a great venue about half a block off Michigan Avenue behind Roosevelt University. It was an old opera house, I think, with the arch over the stage and most of the architectural detail painted in gold and a big chandelier high above the main floor. There were I don't know how many levels of balconies climbing up the walls. On one of these dates I sat in the second or third balcony with at least two more levels above us looking just as much down on as over to the band. What I remember most about these shows is that Space was a hard sell to this audience with whistles and catcalls highlighting the feedback until the feedback got so loud it drowned out the natives. But there was no question who owned the night when the band began driving and the same folks who complained during Space were shouting for more at the end of each show.

09-29, 30-71 Rehearsals with Keith - Ross Warner

My copy has half of the material from each session. The first side doesn't really feature Keith too much. Bird Song, China Cat-> Rider, Bertha and Mexicali Blues are kind of performed around him instead of with him. But there is also an interesting jam based on the theme from Uncle John's Band. Truckin' gives the new guy a chance to help out and Brokedown Palace has some sweet harmonies. The second side from the 30th reveals Keith in a much more prominent role. Playin' In The Band doesn't reach its usual heights, but gives him a real chance to show his stuff. Also included is the earliest known version of Jack Straw. This is a even rougher cut of the arrangement that was debuted in Minnesota the following month. Bobby sings all the vocals and the lyrics are very different from their 1972 counterparts. Deep Elem Blues shows Keith at his best. This rare electric version is almost a ragtime arrangement and features Keith taking some hot leads. Big Railroad Blues allows the first Godchaux to kick up some sparks as well.

Attics Of My Life, on hiatus until 1972, also makes a rare appearance. Its harmonies make the Brokedown from the previous day seem silly. In the oddities column, my copy does unfortunately not include the versions of Cold Rain & Snow and Ripple from the 30th, which also constitute "breakouts." Whatever you can find from these rehearsals, check them out. It's nice to see the birth of a new incanation.

10-27-71 Syracuse - Thomas Flannigan

The day that Jerry died, I naturally flashed back to many concerts over the years. For some reason, the one I thought about the most was this one. There were better concerts over the years, but this one was so magical. It reminded me of the good times.

When the live album Grateful Dead was issued in September, 1971 the Dead invited "Dead Heads" to write in. I complied, and asked about an eastern tour. In mid-October, 1971, I got a little handwritten note describing 6 or 7 concerts in the east and midwest. Such a polite little note written in what used to be called ladies handwriting. I decided to go to Syracuse, passing on Columbus (I missed Dick's Pick's Volume II). No one in Boston would go, so I hitched to Syracuse.

This was one of those clear, cool autumn days people live for. Hitching was easy. Four rides and I was walking into downtown Syracuse. I arrived at 5:00 PM and bought a ticket at the box office. I got turned around and walked through the completely empty parking lot in back of this huge hockey arena. I walked past a huge truck, and saw a tall, hairy guy talking to a hippie. The tall guy was Jerry! He recognized my long hair, smiled and said: "HI!" I was to shy to engage him, so I walked on after smiling and saying high!

This was the first concert I knew of broadcast live over the radio, and the Dead were ready. They played tons of new material, unheard at the August 23, 1971 concert in Chicago, the last time I had head them. "Gloria" got the huge arena dancing. This was the first time I had ever heard "Saturday Night" and "Deal." No explanation was given for Pigpen's absence.

The powers that be stopped the concert early. Many Deadheads were busted after the concert. I loped over to Syracuse University and slept on a pool table in a dorm with football on until the wee hours. I woke at 7:00, walked over to the expressway on-ramp, and stuck out my thumb. A hippie gal in a tie-died VW van came by, and offered a ride to me and two other hitchers. She took us all the way to Boston. All of us had been at the concert. I learned later many more were busted by the still-angry police as they hitched on the same entrance ramp. But early-birds escaped. I got back to my BC dorm at 5:00 P.M., and would not shut up about the concert. People seemed bored, opened a beer and listened quietly.

11-07-71 Harding Theater - Paul Grushkin

This "review" is based on another "review," which my then girlfriend Kate Rosenbloom and I wrote in the Stanford Daily (11/11/71). We were hopelessly enthusiastic, and we meant every word of it.

It would have been enough, as the old Jewish Passover song puts it, that the Dead reaffirmed that they are the Great American Band: the greatest and most powerful rock & roll band alive today. It would have been enough that the Dead played for four-and-one-half hours each night at the Harding (there were two) and only charged $3.00. It would have been enough that technically and musically they were tight and mean, drivin' and cookin' as only they can be, and played all of their songs those two nights in tune and very well. It would have been enough to know some friend at home was making an FM tape of the whole thing off of KSFX. It would have been enough that the San Francisco crowd was typically warm and friendly and extremely well-stoked.

But the Dead at the little Harding? The combination was almost too much to take.

The Harding (now a church) was an absolutely wonderful place to see the Dead. There were old, beautifully paneled wood doors everywhere; a big, weathered marquee outside; an airy lobby with a nice rug; blissfully passable acoustics in an otherwise unadorned small neighborhood theater with maybe five hundred roomy seats on the ground floor. Upstairs, in the balcony, there were perhaps 300 more seats, but these were huge, plush affairs with such niceties as double leg-room, padded arm rests, and actual seat backs (to rest one's head!), all with a perfect view of the intimate stage.

The worst seat in the house was no more than a hundred feet away. It was like bopping down to the Bijou to catch the Rolling Stones.

"It's like walking into a huge party, just for all of us," exclaimed our friend, Uncle Bub. Bub was there with Big Mac (known to all as E. Clair), Funkhouser, and Tomaso, not to mention Mr. Mellow, C. Mel Chewey, and Robbie Sue, and our very good friends Stony Ralph Brown and the Boys. It was so good to be out on the trail together!

Backed by the Heavy Water light show (a light show in that small a theater — incredible!), the Dead opened with a very personal and introspective Truckin, not the high-powered version they'd been sending out all year. And there was a hard-rock version of Cumberland Blues, and a happy, lilting Sugaree. There were majestic touches to Jack Straw and a "Western Man's" El Paso, both trotted out by Bobby.

Ramble On Rose (for Kate Rosenbloom, of course!) opened the second set, followed by a deep, deep Me and Bobby McGee, which soared into Sugar Magnolia, that, as Kate puts it, was nothing less than a cosmic orgasm.

The first of many traditional back-of-stage flares was set off, and everyone let out a collective groan of pleasure. Then there was Dark Star, the great acidic triumph off Live Dead, and, after some good ol' drums, The Other One, and now the Dead had the audience in the palm of its hand/brain, brain/hand; tripping or not, it made little difference. It was all a trip by this point.

This journey lasted something of an hour, and when it was done they launched into a madcap version of Me and My Uncle, only to return again to The Other One. Amazing.

Not Fade Away and Goin' Down the Road proved once again that the album (Skull & Roses) version may be totally sublime, but when they raise it to a boil on stage right there in front of you, it's a whole different thing. We danced and danced — in our seats, on top of our seats, under our seats, those incredible seats.

Following a twenty-minute ovation that rocked the house, the GD returned with Johnny B. Goode into Uncle John's Band. It was yummy. The whole evening was yummy.

12-01-71 Boston Music Hall - John W. Scott

That's It For The Other One, featuring some particularly fine work by Phil, is amazingly persistent. The surprise in this show, however, is the intertwined Me & My Uncle, which puts all first-set versions to shame; a version that even manages to stand up to its impressive Other One companion. These songs are so closely woven that you almost need a program to keep up. It runs something like this: Cyptical> Drum Solo> Other One (intro)> Space/Bass> Me & My Uncle (intro)> Other One-verse 1> Space> Me & My Uncle> Other One> Space/Bass> Other One-verse 2. Whew... Phil takes frequent, strong leads throughout these passages. If you listen closely, in some of the Space Bobby plays a few bars of the Weather Report Prelude, a taste of years to come.

Wonderful jams abound with everyone contributing in peak performance. There are so many improvisations, variations, and spaces that when the Dead finally re-enter The Other One for the last verse, it is almost a surprise. Even after this exhaustive effort, a great Not Fade Away is driven by Phil, and Jerry still manages some scorching leads in Goin Down The Road Feelin Bad.

12-05-71 Felt Forum - Mike Dolgushkin

The whole show is good, but this has to be one of the most bizarre versions of Dark Star they've ever done. It is STRANGE.

12-10-71 Fox Theatre - Mike Dolgushkin

The jam in the second set, featuring Truckin, The Other One and Sittin' On Top Of The World is long, spacey, and unpredictable. Good Lovin is one of the best. It's one of those times where where you can't tell if Pig's following the band or the band's following Pig.

12-14-71 Ann Arbor - John W. Scott

This version of That's It For The Other One is also worth checking out (see 12/01/71). After Cryptical they roll into The Other One with great conviction. The introduction is very impressive, but before they finally reach the lyrics, the Dead seem to change their collective mind and disassemble. Soon, a raging Me & My Uncle jam appears from nowhere, hot enough to almost warrant playing the whole song again (they did it in the first set). However, this energy is soon diverted back into The Other One, where Bobby sings the first verse. After the lyrics the song quickly dissolves once again, this time into Space. As the jam develops we inevitably find ourselves back for the final verse of the Other One. The version of NFA that follows similarly slips in and out of consciousness. This is an interesting tape in which I discover something new every time that I listen to it.

12-15-71 Hill Auditorium, Ann Arbor - Jace Crouch

The Grateful Dead went through a lot of changes during 1971. Mickey Hart became ill and left the band in February. Pigpen became ill in August, and had to sit out for most of the fall tour. Keith Godcheaux joined the band in September as a short-term keyboard replacement for Pigpen. By December, though, Pigpen was well enough to rejoin the tour. He gave us some incredible music, from Mr. Charlie and Run Rudolph Run, to the powerful (and never repeated!) Lovelight sequence from this night. The Pig sang his heart out on that fall tour, maybe giving us more than he should have so soon after his first round with the illness that would eventually kill him.

Since this was my first show, I have a lot of memories of that night. There was plenty of excitement in town when we learned that Pigpen was back on board. "Skull Fuck" was in wide circulation by that time, along with the quasi-legal "Vintage Dead" and a white-cover bootleg derived from the 10/04/70 Winterland simulcast. Every head that I knew was planning on being at Hill Auditorium to see the Dead. The band had not played Ann Arbor since 1967, and folks were getting anxious. It was a two-night stand, but I could only afford the second night. In fact, my girlfriend bought the tickets, so I guess that I couldn't afford the second night either! Thanks Edith, wherever you are.

When we arrived at Hill Auditorium, tickets in hand, the box office was still open. You could still get seats a half-hour before showtime. We walked into billowing clouds of ganja, found our seats, and inhaled deeply and repeatedly. Then about a dozen people forced their way in through one of the side doors; guess they couldn't afford tickets either, but maybe didn't have girlfriends. The New Riders opened, and they thoroughly stunned a crowd of Ann Arbor hippies who had mostly never even heard country music before: who are these dudes? Finally the Grateful Dead came on-stage. Trouble was, we could barely hear them singing: the mix was bloody awful! The vocals were too low and Keith's piano was way too bright in the mix. By the end of China> Rider we were all shouting "turn up the vocals" or "turn down the piano." Jerry misunderstood all the shouting, and they made the piano louder for the next couple of songs. After six or so songs they finally got it right.

And what songs! Bertha, Me and Bobby McGee, China> Rider, Mr. Charlie, Run Rudolph Run, It Hurts Me too, Jack Straw, El Paso, and others. After the break we got a Dark Star> Deal that was filled with some of the most violent and slashing music we'd ever heard. It shocked a lot of people, even those of us who had been listening the Other One from "Skull Fuck." I clearly remember a Cryptical> Drums> Other One> Cryptical sequence about halfway through the second set, but that music has not survived on the fragmentary tapes of set two that have recently become available. I dont miss that jam too much though, because of what is preserved on these tapes. The crowning glory of this show is a powerful and long sequence based on Turn On Your Lovelight> I'm a Man> I'm a King Bee> Two Trains Running> Lovelight. Pigpen only sings one verse each of King Bee and I'm a Man, and only two lines of Two Trains, but the blends are smooth, the band is tight, and Pigpen is at his best. A bit more Grateful Dead followed, and then the encore. It was a nice soulful Uncle John's Band, but during the second verse some fellow from the audience jumped up on stage and grabbed Phil's microphone right off its stand. A roadie came out and grabbed the guy and dragged him off to the side of the stage. During the instrumental break there was actually a fistfight between the roadie and this guy, which was sort of distracting. I was sitting off to Jerry's side, and so got a full view of the punch-out over on the other side of the stage behind the stacks of speakers. Eventually a roadie came out and put a microphone back on Phil's stand, and Phil sang along for the last verse.

Pigpen didn't sing during UJB, but instead came out to center stage rear, leaned back against an amplifier, and watched the band and the audience. We all thought that he looked tired. As it turned out, we were more right than we knew at the time. Damn but I miss Pigpen!

12-31-71 Winterland Arena - Nathan Wolfson

For a variety of reasons (availability due to frequent FM broadcast, hyped anticipation and recollection due to the celebrated nature of the evening, and so on), New Years shows often comprise the cornerstones in many collections. New Years '71, while not the over-the-top adventure proffered by, say, New Years '76 — nor overrated like the ultimate "you had to have been there" News Years, 1978 — is still a worthy contender (if not a "must have") for the collections of those interested in the early 70s.

By the end of '71 (in fact, by sometime in October, by most accounts), the "jamming had returned." The resurgent, hesitant choppiness of many performances during the year had finally given way to a maturing band, comfortable with its new line-up. While better examples of this transformation exist prior to and (of course) after this show, that general sense is in evidence. This is especially noticeable, of course, in the "2nd set jam" improvised around a Truckin> Other One combo (with the obligatory 1971-esque throw-away/tangential inclusion of Me and My Uncle).

Typically, the post-jamming-but-pre-concluding-Not-Fade-sandwich song selection, when it existed around this time, could serve as, at worst, a respite from the truly mindboggling playing surrounding it. This second set, however, raises the level of interest during this space in the set. This is not acheived in the usual manner (that is, by doing away with those isolated songs and running with full-on jamming throughout throughout the set) but, rather, by introducing a uncommon but well-rendered take on the blues staple, The Same Thing. Only a handful of renditions exist prior to the song's return in the 90s, and this is the only one of its era that I know of. And unlike some "one of a kinds," this one works well and successfully bridges the two most interesting, jamming parts of the set.

The FM tapes circulating from this show are about as nice and full as post-broadcast American FM gets. And the announcers' comments add well to the flavor of the event (not to mention reflecting pleasingly on the social gestalt of the era).

03-21-72 Academy of Music - Nathan Wolfson

Like the stories about the $500 cookie recipe mistakenly purchased from Neiman Marcus, or the "Good Times" computer virus passed around the Internet via email, "urban legends" also inhabit Grateful Dead tape-trading circles. Perhaps the most convincing (I want to believe) goes something like this: When the Betty Boards were first purcased from a storage locker auction in the '80s, the tapes were divided up amongst various people (typically, three). All the batches of tapes, except one, were transferred to PCM, Beta HiFi, reels, etc., and gradually leaked into circulation. That lone batch has recently surfaced, typically (the story goes), in the form of someone trying to sell the tapes back to the Dead. The organization doesn't have the money to purchase the tapes, but maybe a few will get sold to bootleggers or otherwise get into circulation.

Variations on this theme have wound their way through Dead trading circles almost continuously since the Betty Board tapes began circulating. As this article goes to press, yet another version of this tale is making the rounds. Only last week, someone in the Dead organization repeated the story to this author, fully believing every bit of it. The problem: No one who has repeated any of the various versions of this story has ever heard any of the tapes. No one in the Dead organization, including the people most intimately involved with the vault and tape-release processes, has ever heard any of the allegedly "for sale" tapes. And though I hope that I am wrong, the latest round of rumors appears to be more of this same urban legend making the rounds. There is NO TAPE to substantiate the rumors. So regardless of how many people believe the current round of stories — and who they are — there is no substance to it.

One other aspect of this urban legend remains constant: This batch of Betty Reels always contains the fabled Academy of Music run from 1972. There are no soundboard tapes of this run in the vault. And the audience tapes in circulation typically leave a fair amount to be desired, the 21st even more than the others. What we have here is the grungy middle of a somewhat middling first set. Sure, there are some worthwhile moments. Even an average China>Rider from '72 is more interesting than many "hot" ones from years later. And hearing Garica play pedal steel on Looks Like Rain is a too-rare a treat. But what else have we got going on here? Large gaps between the tunes, suggesting either technical difficulties (which aren't mentioned over the P.A. as they usually would be at this time) or sluggishness on the part of the crowd/band (which appears to be the case). It's almost like a public rehearsal. Which is fine for what it is, but becomes bogglingly odd when one considers the "legendary" nature of the shows comprising this run.

Hopefully, this urban legend will become a reality, we'll hear a complete soundboard tape of the show, and the second set (or even the upgraded first set) will knock our socks off. Until then, this one probably isn't worthwhile to seek out for any but the completists amongst us.

03-25-72 Academy Of Music - CDS

At the end of 1971 I had seen The Dead the whole total of two times — what a drag! By now a small group of friends were becoming what was to be known as Dead Heads. Our prayers were answered when it was announced two shows a night for almost a week straight at The Academy of Music. I only got the chance to see three of these shows but as it turned out, one was to be the best I ever saw in the twenty years I followed The Dead.

I don't remember how I heard about it but somehow I got wind of a show at The Academy billed as "Jerry Garcia and Friends" with special guest Bo Diddley. How interesting I thought. No Dead but Jerry was still one Cool Dude! I didn't have a ticket but had become hip to buying them off people on the streets. I went down to the Academy about 1:00 that Saturday afternoon and wasn't there more than 5 minutes when a guy asked me if I wanted to buy a ticket. HELL YEAH! How much I asked this stranger? "Five Bucks." Where's the seat? "SECOND ROW CENTER!!!" Talk about miracle tickets! I had just made the score of a lifetime. But remember readers I had a ticket to Garcia and Friends. Little did I know who his Friends were!

I had time to kill so I called up some guys I had done some business with back in my hometown of Syosset, Long Island. Steve and Rick were cool guys I had gone to school with and were more than happy to have me over till showtime. I made my way to their father's apartment in Midtown very happy as to what just went down. Now I'm not too impressed when it comes to people with money, but when I entered this place I was very shocked. You see, their father wrote commercials for T.V. and obviously had some very deep pockets. This was no apartment, it was a five bedroom townhouse located in the middle of Manhattan!! Who knew things like this existed? Not someone who had yet to reach his seventeenth birthday! We partied up a storm that day and their father even joined us! Already a weird day, I had never partied with anyone's father before! But he was a real liberal guy in a Kesey-like way. One of the enlightened ones. By now it was getting late so I sat at a table and using a razor very carefully cut a barrel of Orange Sunshine in half and down the old hatch it went. It's a good thing I did that because that turned out to be some very strong stuff. Thanks Bear!? I hailed a cab to the show and the driver made his way downtown The cabbie pulled up across the street from The Academy, I paid him and got out. I took one step and STOPPED! In front of the theatre was a very long line of motorcycles all sparkling clean, these bikes looked as if they had just gotten off the Turnpike from The Mars Hotel!! The affects of that Sunshine were starting to grow on me!! Later I found out these machines belonged to THE HELL'S ANGELS!! and this was a party for THEM!!

The show had already started, having lost track of time and space. The lobby was almost empty when I arrived at the entrance. I'll tell you something, this guy at the door gave this ticket one very long look. "Okay," be says, "go to the usher on the right." This guy takes out the old faithful flashlight and we proceed down the aisle. Down and down we went till we were almost at the stage. Looking up, there was Bo Diddley dancing around on the stage with a rectangle of a guitar, black derby, and a sheriff's badge!! And who were playing behind him? Jerry, Bobby, Phil, Billy, Pigpen and Keith! The Grateful Dead were playing backup band for the legendary Bo Diddley!!!

Now this usher must have been dosed or something because he couldn't find my seat! But he did find one in the third row just right of center and I was still a very happy camper to say the least! Bo Diddley finished up his set and there was a short intermission. The roadies fixed up the stage and the lights went low. The anticipation and adrenalin were flowing. The time had arrived. They all took their places, tuned up and started to play. And it was Bertha down to the last little echo at the end. This was going to be one Hell of a Night I thought!! Jerry Garcia and Friends were The Grateful Dead, and I was in Dead Head HEAVEN!!!!!

Let me pause here for a moment... and tell you readers a little about what they were playing that night. Jerry's first solo project had just been released and Bobby had just finished recording Ace. With all that new material plus all the stuff that was going to end up on Europe '72 they had quite a lot of songs to draw from. By the way, the band would leave to go to Europe in a few days and Hundred Year Hall was recorded four weeks after this show.

Now that I take a long look at this show, it was the premiere of Bob's new record. They played almost every song off this gem. Jerry even got on pedal steel during Looks Like Rain. (This being the only time I have heard of him doing this live). Black-Throated Wind, Greatest Story, Mexicali Blues, Jerry threw in Sugaree and Brown-Eyed Women, and Pigpen doing his Mr. Charlie. This was turning out to be an amazing party, and party it was: as being so close you could see Jerry pouring shots of Jack Daniels that was on top of his amp and using a little spoon to provide nosepowder.

Another surprise was in store for me that evening. During Playin' In The Band some chick with long hair (Donna Jean) comes out and lets out a HUGE SCREAM!! and joins Bobby in singing. The place went WILD!! She left the stage and returned when Bob finished up the first set with Saturday Night. What a fitting song I thought, One More Saturday Night at a party on a Saturday Night!! Break Time! Great, I thought. Get the old pipe out and take a few tokes. Well all it took was three and I had to put that away! You see every time I inhaled the Sunshine was getting BRIGHTER AND BRIGHTER!! So I sat in my seat and stared at the little lights on the amps and occasionally looking up to see if the ceiling was still there.

The Dead came back and the second set started, but this is where my brain cells were FRIED!! and I can't remember what they played. I wonder why, HA! But I do remember some of the things that went on. Two guys in the second row were taping the show on a cassette recorder. It was later I learned about a then-secret group called "The Free Underground Grateful Dead Tape Exchange." (Hell's Honkies probably being the first based out of Brooklyn — Artie, Les, Jerry and Harvey). Did you ever ask yourself how they got those machines in? These guys were pretty smart, they wrapped them up as presents for The Dead!!

I remember the crystal ball throwing out beams of light during Dark Star(?) and my memory comes back intact with Pigpen doing Lovelight. The band took another short break and the stage went dark. A short time later I could see Phil on stage talking to the audience. It was then a small stagelight was placed on him and he was caught red handed smoking a joint. "WHOOPS!!" he says but he continued on talking, making no sense at all, at least not to me. Who was going to bust him? The place was already ripped off its foundation an was traveling at the speed of light in some other universe and as it turned out we had our own private Army, The Hell's Angels, RIDING SHOTGUN!!! The rest of the band made it back and they closed the show with Not Fade Away, Going Down The Road, and with Pigpen taking center stage back into Not Fade Away. After the last cord had been struck it was one of those nights you just go, HUH? and can't believe its over...

03-28-72 Academy Of Music - Ihor Slabicky

Seeing the Dead with Pigpen was something else. He was the side of ourselves that we keep under control most of the time and let out once in a while — the dark side of the Grateful Dead. At times, it was scary to see him perform. His appearance contrasted with the jeans and t-shirts of the rest of the band: cowboy boots, jeans with a truckers wallet in the back pocket, cowboy shirt, bandanna tied around his neck, leather jacket with several harps in the pockets, beard, and a turned-up cowboy hat. When he came out to sing, he didn't just walk out from behind his organ — he strutted out and took control.

He gave the impression that what he was singing about had happened to him, and that he could make it happen again right there in front of you. He gave the feeling that if he wanted to, he could take you out of the audience and make it happen to you too. During a Good Lovin jam, Pigpen would sing and rap and improvise words the same way the band would play music. You weren't sure whether to watch Pigpen singing or listen to the band playing along with him or watch him lead the band.

It was Pigpen with the Grateful Dead Jamming Blues Band backing him up. When he said "Stop.," they stopped. When he said "Go!," they went all the way out. At the end, when he was finished, there was always the quiet, almost shy "Thank you."

The last time I saw Pigpen performing was in March, 1972 at the series of shows in the Academy of Music, in New York City. The band took off for Europe after that. When they returned, Pigpen was in poor health and did not tour again. He passed away on March 8, 1973 at the age of 27. A number of songs come mind as his: Easy Wind, Big Boss Man, Good Lovin, where he showed the power and drive that he could evoke from the band, and Operator, the gentle and sad side of life.

04-11-72 City Hall, Newcastle - John W. Scott

This may not be the hottest show on the European tour, but it has some startling moments. The beginning of the first set is lackluster, picking up a bit with Black-Throated Wind. Pigpen gets the second set off to a more solid start with the most serious piece yet: Good Lovin, and the band responds with some excellent jams. After Ramble On, an intense Truckin is fired up with Bobby thrashing his voice, and everyone else belting their instruments, before tumbling into a quiet and pretty Space. A nice exercise in contrast. The Space gels into a little jam featuring Phil and Jerry before the drums. Unfortunately the flip interrupts this collaboration, but there is more on the other side.

After the briefest of Drums, the Dead plunge into the Other One. This is where the show really gets interesting. After a wonderful, four-minute introduction, the band swerves and returns to Space. For three minutes they disassemble and reshape what they have just built, before The Other One pops back of its own accord for the first verse. Next up, the inter-lyric jam is very pretty, centering on two themes, the second flavored with The 57th Street Bridge theme. The jam drifts very far from The Other One, even dips back into space for over seven minutes, comes up with yet another jam then finally back into the Other One for the final verse. I have given up hope several times during the travels. All told and done, this excursion has spanned about twenty-six minutes — very healthy for a post-Cryptical Other One.

Perhaps realizing that they could not hope to match the improvisational intensity of what had preceded, the Dead switch tacks. This version of Comes A Time is wonderfully tender, culminating in a twisted, heartfelt ending. On my tape there is no Sugar Magnolia, which is just as well, as the Brokedown encore is much more suited in the wake of such a profound and introspective song.

While the first set may be expendable if you already have others from this tour, the second set should be a welcome addition to any collection.

04-14-72 Tivoli Theater - John W. Scott

This tape seemed to appear on the scene in early 1987. I always suspected that there was some very hot, uncirculated music from the Europe '72 tour, and finally we get some proof — proof with a vengeance. The second set is a scorcher. A fairly short but pretty Dark Star with some excellent jams is still easily overshadowed by an amazing Pigpen sequence.

The Good Lovin is strong enough, but suddenly the Dead are rolling into Caution. This version is so hot and so tight that it is incredible to think that this is only the second time that they had played it since 1970. Both the vocals and the instrumentals make it clear that everyone was into the moment. Phil thunders away with gusto, Jerry provides frantic, raging leads, and Pigpen has the strength to tie this all together, moulding the song in his own image. While the rest of the band is still playing Caution Pig belts out a verse of Who Do You Love, excellently done, making me wish that this song had become a regular portion of their repertoire during Pigpen's reign. Winding back through McKernan improvisation we get back to Good Lovin, which they tie up in winning fashion.

The set is closed with a hot NFA> GDTRFB> NFA combo. Reminiscent of Hendrix burning his guitar onstage, Bobby finally sacrifices his voice for the Saturday Night encore and I doubt whether much of it could have been left for the following night. This show has given me renewed desire to seek out more of this famous European tour.

04-29-72 Musikhalle, Hamburg - John W. Scott

This is a nice, but hissy soundboard featuring good performances by Pigpen and lots of aggressive bass. A quick glance at the label will expose some plusses and minuses: oh boy, Dark Star and Caution; Who Do You Love is missing — ouch, Ouch, OUCH!

Any show that starts with an exploratory Playin has already won a friend in me. The whole first set bears this out — even the standards, such as Big RxR Blues, shine. Other gems from the first set include an enthusiastic B.T.Wind, China Cat> Rider (middle of the first set was common for this time period, a rut that I could live with), and a long, hot Good Lovin' (frequently played in this just-before-the-end-of-the-first-set position on this tour).

When weighing the high points of the second set it is easy to favor the spacey, engaging Dark Star. This tasty version includes a variety of jams, including the 57th Street Bridge one. Yet, where Dark Star excels, Caution is awesome, totally awesome. The crescendos build over and over again, with Phil leading the way. I am left hungry and disappointed for the missing Who Do You Love. Even though it is cut, Caution still spans almost twenty minutes. A beautiful Uncle John's Band encore soothes the wounds and my tape is forgiven.

The Dark Star and Caution alone make these tapes worth owning. I would be eternally grateful to the kind soul who comes up with a nice complete soundboard.

Epilog: When I received soundboards of the whole show they were rendered worthless by a loud, obnoxious high-pitched whine that mars the entire first tape and the second tape well into Dark Star. Ouch!

05-03-72 Olympia Theater, Paris, France - Bob Welle

It was my good fortune that I crossed paths with the Grateful Dead in Europe in 1972 and that I was able to get a ticket for their May 3rd show at the Olympia Theater in Paris. I heard about the Dead's European tour from three Deadheads from Alabama whom I met a few weeks earlier at the Youth Hostel in Zurich, Switzerland. They were going to Germany to see the Dead, I was bound for Paris to visit my friend Patti who was spending her junior year of college at the Institute of European Studies.

When I arrived in Paris I met Patti and she took me to the student lounge at the Institute where I met a group of Deadheads who already had their tickets for the May 3rd show. They were getting ready for the show days in advance by listening to the American Beauty and Live Dead albums over and over again on the stereo in the student lounge. The student lounge at the Institute became my headquarters and "Ripple" became my theme song for Paris. I hummed it, whistled it, or sang the verses wherever I went.

I was looking for a ticket to the May 3rd show and Patti said she knew another student at the Institute who had one but now was thinking of traveling to the south of France rather than going to the show. The suspense went on for a couple of days as the woman tried to make up her mind about what to do. On the morning of May 3rd I telephoned Patti about the ticket. She said she could get it for me and I was elated. I went to the Institute that afternoon and caught her as she was running between classes and she passed the ticket off to me as if it were a baton in a relay race. It was my miracle.

The Olympia Theater is located at 28 Rue des Capucines, just a short walk from the Metro station. Accordingly, I rode the Metro and arrived well before the doors opened. As I approached the theater I could see the crowd lined up on the sidewalk in front, otherwise the building blended into the streetscape between the two adjoining buildings, all standing at the same height. It was a gentle Spring evening and the setting sun cast its rays on our side of the street and bathed the scene in golden light. The line of people waiting outside already extended from the front door down the sidewalk and around the corner of the block. I expected to see more Americans but everyone around me was speaking French. Legions of grim-faced police were on hand, apparently expecting some kind of trouble from the Deadheads. There was no trouble, just a mellow scene of happy people waiting patiently in line.

The Olympia's facade itself is artistically unique with wrought iron adorning the columns. It was evidently built sometime in the late 1800's as Toulouse-Lautrec did posters in 1896 for shows at the Olympia. This venue has a rich history of famous performers on its stage; the Beatles did a three week run there in January, 1964 just before they came over to the U.S. and appeared on the Ed Sullivan show.

As one views the Olympia from the front elevation, the perceived size is misleading because the building is relatively narrow along the sidewalk, perhaps fifty or sixty feet. Once you pass through the lobby and through the doors into the seating area, the theater opens up, evidently wrapping itself around the backs of the adjoining buildings. The auditorium area is clear span, with a very high ceiling. The seating area floor slopes downward from the back to the front. The stage is framed by a proscenium arch and flanked by stairs on both sides that lead up from the auditorium floor to the wings.

A large balcony spans the width of the theater and overhangs approximately the back third of the seating area. The total capacity seemed to be about 3,000. The seats were old but comfortable, the type that are cushioned and lined with a crushed velvet type material. Perhaps it's the design of the building, or the materials in the theater, or both that combine to create an excellent acoustical environment. The next time I saw the Dead was at the Saint Paul Civic Center Arena, a large "sugar bowl" venue and the sound bounces around in every direction to make for a terrible acoustical environment.

When the doors opened I found my seat in the midst of the group of five from the Institute. You could feel the excitement and anticipation build and rise in the air as we sat and waited for the band to come on stage. There was no opening act and the show started at about 9:00 PM, an hour later than scheduled.

The French are generally more tolerant about smoking, and at that time smoking in your seat during the show was permitted. I had started rolling my own cigarettes a couple months earlier, and during the first set I pulled out my pouch and papers and started rolling one between my knees. The Americans sitting next to me all noticed but didn't say anything. They alternated their glances between the stage and leaning forward to look over at me to see what I was rolling. I believe they were disappointed to see me light up a cagarette.

The band opened with "Bertha" and Jerry's voice was just a little tight and the mix a bit off through the first couple of verses but everything was totally together by the end of the song. I was seated about thirty rows back at center stage, so I had a decent view and the acoustics were great. I was staring at the band, trying to identify everyone, and by the time they were well into "Me and My Uncle" I was certain that there was something different. I was puzzled by the fact that there were extra people on stage compared to what I remembered. By this time I had been on the road in Europe for about six months, having also traveled across North Africa and behind the Iron Curtain, so I was cut off from most news from the United States during that time. The last visual image I had of the band was the photograph on the jacket cover of their LP Workingman's Dead which I had acquired about a year earlier in 1971.

I really took notice and sat up straight in my seat when the band broke into "Playin' in the Band" later in the first set. The first thing that caught my attention was that Jerry and Bob did an excellent job with the introductory guitar parts and they also controlled the tempo to my liking. "This sounds fantastic," I thought as the music unfolded. (When I listen to the tape, it still does). The other event was that Donna Godchaux, who had been hanging in the background until now, came center stage to the microphone and sang great harmony with Bob. I was stunned by this and asked myself, "When did a woman join the band?" Although I was certain about the extra people on stage, it wasn't until I heard Donna's voice that I realized one was female. (I learned later that Donna had joined only about six weeks earlier, on March 25, 1972 and Keith Godchaux was the other "extra" person whom I was trying to identify). The audience obviously liked "Playin'" and gave an enthusiastic round of applause at the conclusion. Bob called Donna back to the microphone for an introduction and to take her bow. "Hello, hello, hello," she said and waved to the crowd as the applause grew.

Donna also sang beautiful harmony with Jerry on a nice version of "Sing Me Back Home" later in the first set. She was fantastic on a hot version of "Greatest Story Ever Told" along with Bob to open the second set. Although she was relatively new she had already established her presence in the repertoire.

Ron "Pig Pen" McKernan was in excellent form this night, and carried his share of the singing load. He treated us to "Mr. Charlie," "China Shuffle," "Next Time You See Me," a fantastic version of "Good Lovin'" which included a blues interlude that I still have not identified, and also "Hurts Me Too." In retrospect, Pig Pen's performance was all the more meaningful and memorable considering that his final appearance with the Grateful Dead occurred the following month and within a year he was dead.

The May 3, 1972 show was especially memorable because it was on this night that the band delivered its episodes of "China Cat Sunflower," "I Know You Rider," "Tennessee Jed," and "Jack Straw" that later appeared on Europe '72. As I listened to the latter two songs unfold in real time it was new material to me since they had premiered only a few months earlier. When the LP was released I must have listened to these cuts a thousand times and I was able to capture that special sensation of reliving the show.

The first set concluded with a clever version of "Casey Jones" in which the tempo accelerated at the line, "better watch your speed." As the last chord faded out and the crowd cheered Bob spoke into the microphone, "Intermission." It was at this time that I realized that most of the audience did not understand English. Quite a few people were standing up clapping and cheering like they were asking for an encore, others were putting on their jackets and sweaters indicating that they thought the show was over and they were preparing to leave. Bob tried again, this time throwing a little French accent into the announcement, "Said, intermission." Nonetheless, there was a general movement towards the exits and our group of Americans looked at each other in amazement and laughed over what was happening. As the band walked off the stage they looked back over the audience which was obviously beyond their control. Then a local woman jumped up on stage, grabbed the microphone, and told the audience in French that the show was not over and that it was only a break. With this news the house erupted into wild, gleeful cheering. The first set lasted nearly two hours and also included "Sugaree," "Black Throated Wind," "Beat it on Down the Line," and "He's Gone" which was the only weak link in the set because Jerry's guitar and singing were slightly off key.

Following "Greatest," "Ramble On," and "Hurts Me Too" in the second set Bob announced that they were very proud to do "our number one hit in Turlock, California" and I remember asking myself, "Where the hell is Turlock"? The band broke into "Truckin" which was like an old friend to me. The band did a transition into "Other One> Drums> Other One> Bobby McGee> Other One > and Wharf Rat." It impressed me then, and still does today, to observe the way the Grateful Dead used the ending of one song as the beginning of a new one. This particular string lasted about forty-five minutes and included some very fine improvisation. Then they did "Jack Straw" which, as anyone who has listened to "Europe '72" knows, demonstrated the high quality recording possible at a live show. The intimate setting and acoustics of the Olympia seemed to be the perfect place to record for posterity the soaring harmony that Jerry and Bob were capable of. At that time Jerry was 29 years old and Bob was 24 and their voices were clear and strong.

The band built up momentum towards the finale' and did a fabulous stretch that included Sugar Magnolia, Not Fade Away, GDTRFB, and ended back at Not Fade Away. By the time they got to GDTRFB they were really rolling. Jerry's guitar was leading the way and Donna's singing in harmony was right on. They really cooked during this final segment of the show and the tempo brought up the temperature in the house. The encore was "Saturday Night" and the final chord faded out at approximately 1:30 AM. The audience definitely got its money's worth that night My ticket stub shows a price of twenty-two French francs which was the equivalent of about six U.S. dollars at that time. A few days later I was on an airplane headed back to the States and the May 3rd Olympia show was a fitting climax to a memorable time in my life. To this day every time I see or hear reference to Europe '72 it awakens very special memories for me.

05-11-72 Rotterdam - John W. Scott

This show is a long one. The tape I have starts well into the second set with the Dark Star, and runs a full ninety minutes. The Dark Star itself is long and respectable, with lots of space and some good improvisations from Phil. The highlight, however, has to be the jam that follows Sugar Magnolia. We get the last version of Caution in and out of Who Do You Love. While the sequence is reminiscent of 04/14/72, the execution is actually quite different: longer with more wandering. There is lots of good solid, sometimes explosive, bass to guide it and, of course, some tasty runs from Jerry, but once again Pigpen is the focus. Who Do You Love is too short (one verse) but then sometimes you just have to take what you can get. It takes a little while, but Truckin manages to catch a little of the spark from the earlier songs to ignite its climactic jam. Uncle John's Band begins sluggishly as the Dead sound exhausted but happy from what has already transpired. This song also manages to rally for some great instrumentals at the end.

05-18-72 Munich - Fred Heutte

For those of us who learned about the Dead's live performances initially through the Europe '72 album, all of the tapes from that tour have a nice lived-in ambiance. It was the band's first big foreign excursion and by all accounts the playing ranged from very good to superb and the fun seemingly nonstop. With a new lineup including two keyboard players and one drummer, the unfamiliar locations, and a chance to play for fresh audiences with few preconceptions, the band exhibited an extra dose of vigor and cohesion. Because the music from this period is so well enshrined in Europe '72, it's easy to overlook the full show tapes. Most of them are gems, and because of the interest in the tour and the band's recording intentions, good copies are widely available. The tapes reveal the little flaws, particularly on vocals, which probably resulted in specific performances not being included on the record. You may also hear one of the eleven Dark Stars from the tour — perhaps the one from this Deutsches Museum show. With its dignified bridge into Morning Dew, it would have been just fine on the record.

05-23-72 Lyceum - Mike Dolgushkin

This tape has been in wide circulation for the last few years. It consists mainly of the typical Europe '72 material played extremely well, with a few exceptions. Sittin' on Top of the World and Rockin' Pneumonia back to back make this a better than usual first set for that time. The Dark Star is good and scary, as a Dark Star should be, and Goin' Down the Road starting off from nothing gives it an added punch. Also, this is the most developed Hey Bo Diddley that I've heard them do.

05-26-72 Lyceum - Mike Dolgushkin

I'm surprised that no one has reviewed this truly great show in these pages before. By now everyone knows that this gig is where the Europe '72 jam comes from, listening to it you can tell that they edited it wisely for the LP. Truckin' really is the main jam, The Other One was more of an afterthought. (Plus, The Other One was already out on a live LP). The first set features a hot 23-minute Playing in the Band, and the audience-requested NFA> GDR> NFA is a trip to listen to.

For me, the most emotional part of the show is Chinatown Shuffle. It was the last time that Pigpen sang a lead vocal with the Grateful Dead. We miss you, Pig.

06-17-72 Hollywood Bowl - Louis Woodbury

A nice show. I didn't realize until DeadBase that it had been Pigpen's final show. He wasn't feeling well enough to sing much at all but he did sit in on keyboards for a while. I'm glad I had the chance to see him one last time there before the Dead's first tragic loss.

During El Paso, Bobby knocked his mic stand over instinctively trying to catch a little kid playing on stage that had tripped & fallen momentarily while chasing one of the beach balls bouncing around. The kid, obviously unhurt, just kept right on playing.

Unfortunately this was also the first time I had noticed private security personnel from some local outfit whose logo was an outline of the U.S. in the tight grip of a big hand. They appeared to be primarily college-age jocks with little or no training and one of them ("affectionately" nicknamed Lunkhead by the crowd) actually started a fight!

07-16-72 Dillon Stadium - Zea Sonnabend

This was my first stadium show, and since I had missed Woodstock this was the biggest concert crowd I had been in up to that time. What a great time! About 15 or 20 of my friends converged from all over the Northeast and we went together, including a two-year old, a movie camera, and electric George. It was blazingly hot but they had big hoses in the back where you could cool off and very low key security inside. Lots of people disrobed and wandered about. What I remembered most about the show was how CHARGED it was; it seemed somehow especially electric, with the excitement being more intense than almost any show I've been to before or since. I had thought it was just my fond memory, but I recently found the tape of it and the moment I put it on I got such a JOLT of electric flashback that my mind was blown (again and again and again and again....)!

We had heard rumors about Pigpen not being well after Europe so we weren't completely surprised that he wasn't there but wondered how they would compensate for his very noticeable presence on stage. It seemed that Jerry was playing with that searing intensity that distinguishes a good show from a really great one and he kept it up from the first note through the whole hot and wild afternoon. Just as the sun dipped behind the tie-dyed speakers and we had to squint to see the stage, we saw some commotion and extra people coming onstage and wondered what was happening since no guests had been announced. Since it was hard to see with the sun in our eyes we had to wait till the first note to realize it was the Allman Brothers Band! Duane, of course, had passed on, but the band was still at a peak of popularity and chops and it was one of the most ecstatic moments of my life to see some of my other favorite musicians show up to jam with the Dead. It was rock and roll history in the making!

My friend and I left our group spot on the field with a side view and climbed into the bleachers at the back to get a better view of the whole stage and the sunset on the tie-dye. Dickie Betts and Jerry were awesome together; it had that swing, it had that drive, it had that e-lec-tri-ci-ty!

Get the tape if you can; the sound quality isn't perfect but the energy shines through.

07-18-72 Roosevelt - Mike Dolgushkin

If only for the fact that if you're a Dark Star fan you MUST have this tape. The rest of this show is no slouch either. The first set is very strong, but the highlight is the revival of Bird Song, in a reworked version that was longer and spacier than the way it was done in '71. The third ever Stella Blue, with slightly different lyrics, was also good. The second set started off routinely with Greatest Story followed by Playing In The Band (note that they did two Bobs followed by two Jerrys). This Playin was done at a time when the band was just starting to find out what the song was all about. It's long and very exploratory; by the end of the year it was REALLY good.

After the two Jerry tunes the jam started off with Truckin. Many people expected it to go into The Other One as was a rather common practice then. What they were still occasionally doing with Truckin was jamming in the middle of the song, then doing a sort of vocal reprise. That's what happened this night. Once the reprise was over they dissolved into a short space jam that soon became — DARK STAR! This Dart Star reminds me of men on horseback riding across rolling, grassy hills in the moonlight.

Before the vocals they switched to a fast jam reminiscent of 02/13/70, swung back into the main theme and Jerry sang (getting slightly reverbed). They came out of the vocals, jammed a little, quieted down, and momentarily stopped as if to say, "Dark Star's over, this is something else." Something else turned out to be some of the weirdest most mystical space I've ever hear. Roosevelt Stadium left New Jersey and visited the other planets in the Solar System and distant galaxies, where the unexplainable was explained. The whole jam was very dissonant (even more so than Victim Or The Crime or Picasso Moon) but there was a definite theme running through it. This gradually built up into an early version of the Tiger, then things got quiet and peaceful and the Dead floated off into Comes A Time.

07-26-72 Portland - John W. Scott

When this tape first appeared in 1991, it made quite a splash at DeadBase — here was a gorgeous, clean 1972 soundboard whose list hadn't even appeared in DeadBase IV. This tape, while not among the best of the year, aptly demonstrates the impressive strength of even average shows in this interesting, transitional year. The first set is solid, with lots of playful conversation onstage between songs, including Bobby threatening to take out a contract on Owsley (see the timings section for details). The highlight, not surprisingly, is Playin In The Band — one of those nice dreamy versions they were apt to play in 1972. At over ninety minutes, the first set is longer than the average second set in 1990 (by what margin, I don't know as my tape is inexplicably missing the closing Casey Jones), and unfortunately does not fit comfortably onto cassette without a cut.

It should come as no surprise that the highlight of the second set is Dark Star. This version is long (over thirty minutes) and pretty. It is also exceptional in that Jerry sings both verses, a rarity between 1972 and 1978. There is a particularly nice jam that begins with a bass and drums duet, and then picks up with some strong piano from Keith. Dark Star is not the only song worth mentioning — the Comes A Time that follows is absolutely beautiful, and the NFA> GDTRFB> NFA, and especially the Saturday Night encore provide a very strong rocking finish for this very long (over three-and-a-half hours) show.

08-21-72 B. C. T. - Henry Kaiser

During the past year of so I've spent a good deal of time listening to different versions of Dark Star as research for my own recording of that song. One of the amazing things about Dark Star is how flexible and sensitive to the moment it can be. There are many different kinds of Dark Stars: lyrical, spacey, hot, cold, fast, slow, inspired, dull, and transcendent. This 08/21/72 Dark Star is a pretty odd and unique specimen. I'm not especially crazy about the rest of this BCT show, although the band is in pretty fine form, Garcia plays with a great Europe '72-Stratocaster guitar tone and Keith plays his best. The unusual qualities of the Dark Star (which could be compared to the Glastonbury Fayre album version from Wembly 04/08/72) really stand out.

The Dead take about ten minutes to get to the first, and only, verse sung here of the song. They cruise along the A to G chord change of the song at a relaxed pace as Garcia noodles around in the A mixolydian mode. Nothing too special yet. After the first verse things slow down a bit and begin to open up improvisationally. By about 13:50 the music has become quite dissonant and angry sounding. Around 16:30 Garcia kicks in his wah-wah pedal and does some fast, atonal chromatic runs. This is about as weird and avant garde sounding as the Dead can get.

At 17:50 the music slows down and at 20:15 Garcia tries to start Morning Dew a couple of times but the band won't let him. He plays the introduction a couple of times but is first cut off by some jagged bass slashes from Lesh and then by the whole band. At 21:30 the pulse enters again at a kind of jazzy up-tempo and then Garcia and Weir drop out leaving something like a piano trio as Keith spends about 2:15 soloing over some very jazzy playing from Lesh and Billy. Weir and Garcia join in and at 26:34 Weir leads the band into El Paso. The song meanders on into a quiet Dark Starry space for a few minutes at the end, but before the second verse gets sung (don't you hate it when they don't finish the song?) Garcia begins Deal, which is fairly brief with a solid ending. All in all, the unusual moods and surprises in this Dark Star make for a different from the usual musical journey.

08-22-72 B. C. T. - Mike Dolgushkin

I guess I got into the Dead sort of backwards. Most people go to their first show knowing next to nothing about the band and get their minds blown when they first see them. I, however, was a Dead Freak (as we were known then) for over two years before I first saw them. I had all of their records, I even had some live tapes, so I was already familiar with the bulk of their repertoire.

We settled into our seats (fifth row, right side) and shortly the band came out. They opened with a sloppy Bertha during which Jerry had to retune during the instrumental break. I didn't care, this was the first song I was seeing them do live and I was thrilled to death! Greatest Story came next and I was thinking, "How cool. They're doing solo album material." Loser came next, about which I thought the same thing, then we got Black Throated Wind. Funny, huh? By this time I was thinking, "Enough of the short songs, when are they gonna do some long stuff." I got my wish immdediately with Bird Song. The jam in the middle sounded so much like Dark Star that I sat back in my seat, looked at them, and thought, "Yeah. THIS is the Grateful Dead." After more short songs including a sparkling Friend of the Devil, they did a monstrous Playing In The Band. Soon after, it was break time.

I got back to my seat before the second set and found out that they had done Dark Star the night before — we wouldn't be likely to get it that night. It didn't matter for some reason I REALLY felt like hearing The Other One. All through the show people were calling out for Truckin causing Jerry to remark at one point, "We'll save that top forty shit for later." Truckin finally came up as the fourth song in the second set. They jammed out of the vocals and for awhile it seemed like they were going to go into the reprise, but went into Billy's drum solo instead. Well, hey! A drum solo! I knew what was coming next. The band came back, Phil did his intro and I just stood there not believing what I was hearing. The "Comin' around" vocals were particularly thrilling. After having gotten the tape I now realize what a long involved Other One it was.

The Other One soon melted into Stella Blue, which of course I'd never heard before. I didn't hear it again until after Wake Of The Flood came out, but when I heard it on the record I thought it sounded familiar. Now I know why. The second set soon came to a smashing conclusion with Not Fade Away> Goin Down The Road> Hey Bo Diddley> Not Fade Away. I especially enjoyed Bobby's histrionics at the end. Since BCT is part of Berkeley High School even a Grateful Dead concert qualifies as a campus event and must end by a certain time. There was no encore. No matter, I left the show feeling a thousand times better than I did 24 hours before. The Grateful Dead can do that to you.

08-27-72 Creamery Benefit - John W. Scott

Of all the fantastic Dead shows in years gone by that I missed, I think I might have enjoyed this one the most. Not only was this a landmark concert in terms of the music played, but also in terms of the surroundings. On a very hot day in late August some thirty to forty thousand people gathered in a beautiful Oregon field and relived a little piece of 1967. The water shortage aside, this seems an idyllic setting to attend a Grateful Dead concert. Video footage shows lots of dancing, smiles, frisbee, children, dogs, and good wholesome fun. Clothing was optional and some of the gratuitous footage during China Cat> Rider would prompt Tipper Gore to slap at least an R rating on this film.

Bobby dubs the band "The Sun-stroked Serenaders," but in spite of the oppressive heat, and the frequent tunings it necessitates, the Dead play one of their finest concerts. Every song is played exceptionally. Jerry provides some tasty lightning leads on China Cat> I Know You Rider. Playin is great in every way; long and hot as the Oregon sun. The phenomenal Bird Song is a strong argument that this song is deserving of second-set status. On top of all this amazing music, to close the second set the Dead play one of the hottest versions of Greatest Story Ever Told.

As the sun sets the Dead come back for a third set, beginning with a wonderful Dark Star. Heaven on Earth. There is such peace and tranquility, a beautiful and relaxing contrast to the torrid afternoon's music. Dark Star is lyrical and passionate, floating, then soaring on the evening's breeze. Yes, of all the fantastic Dead shows in years gone by that I missed, I think I might have enjoyed this one the most.

08-27-72 Creamery Benefit - Don Wolfe & Paul Scotton

During the week of this show, Eugene, which is roughly 20 miles from the site, was the hottest place in the country for 3 days straight at 106 degrees. On the day of the show, the temperature "cooled" to about 100. At one point during the show Bobby said: "It's the first time I've been in Oregon when it hasn't rained and now it's too fucking hot." The tickets were labels for Nancy's Honey Yogurt, a Kesey family enterprise and one of the products of the Springfield Creamery. Traffic on Hwy. 126, the two-lane road out of Eugene into the site, was horribly jammed. What was normally about a 30-minute drive from Eugene took over two and a half hours. There were streams of people walking in from wherever they gave up and parked. In spite of all the mess, everyone, including the Lane County Sheriff's Department, was good natured. The deputy at the gate directing traffic had a big smile for everybody and wished us all a good time.

The Riders opened the show (unfortunately Garcia was not playing pedal steel) and during their set a skydiver parachuted onto the field, drawing cheers from the crowd and adding to the sense of excitement. Whether it was somebody trying to avoid the traffic jam is not clear, but it didn't seem to be planned because the organizers appeared to be as surprised as the crowd. By the time the Dead took the stage, the sun was blazing. The stage faced out into a field which by then had become a dust bowl from the thousands of feet. (I don't remember as much dust at a show until Boreal Ridge. - Paul) They sent around a tank truck with drinking water from time to time, but couldn't come through on the tantalizing promise that they would spray the crowd (as Ken Babbs explained on the tape, it turned out that the truck that they wanted to spray with was the one that "drained the shitters"). It was so hot and the dust so thick that at least half of the audience moved off into the woods on either side of the stage. That's why it looked like the band was playing to such a sparse crowd.

Ken Babbs introduced the band and "Babbled" messages concerning lost children, water updates, and so on during the show. He had a helper in a huge sombrero that he called Brother Bartholemew, who would wander through the crowd collecting messages, and then Babbs would read them from the stage between songs. He also warned us about the Long Tom River, a meandering lowland stream off in the woods, being unsafe for swimming. This warning was widely ignored out of desperation by people trying to get any relief at all from the heat. All in all, it was a very loose, informal setting, with occasional whoops coming from "backstage" someplace back among the trees.

"China Cat/Rider" was an early highlight and, maybe because of the wide-open rural setting, the band seemed to focus on spacier jamming tunes like "Playing in the Band" and "Bird Song." As the day progressed and the sun swung around to the west, the sun began to shine on the stage with a vengeance, causing tuning problems. I think they took a second break just to get out of the heat for a while. (When they played the same field ten years later, the stage was positioned at the opposite end of the field facing east and away from the sun. Of course the rest of us got to squint then.) As the sun got low in the sky, both the temperature and the dust seemed to settle down a little and the crowd began to emerge from the trees to watch the band for the third set. They started with Dark Star and the whole scene became a blissful dream of a bright summer afternoon in the country. Rural Oregon at its finest. The band played until twilight because now the crowd and the day were all in the groove, but since there were no lights on the field, once it got dark it was time to go home.

09-09-72 & 09-10-72 Hollywood - Phil DeGuere

These two shows remain my personal favorites, although the details are largely gone from my memory and I've never heard a tape to refresh it. The Dead, on their best nights in Los Angeles, play what seems to me a different kind of show: looser, more playful, more fun, which is why I've never understood why they hit LA so infrequently. I'm not lumping Ventura, Irvine or San Diego in with LA, by the way. Nowadays they play one set of shows a year: at Long Beach.

In September 1972 it was a treat to catch the Dead in a small venue like the Palladium, which holds 3500 or so. It's set up as a big dance hall with a few tables along the walls and balcony, and there was a bar. The crowd was that perfect size: enough people to let you feel part of one happy family, not enough to make it uncomfortable anywhere in the hall. I wish I could remember what they played; I just remember each concert as a four-hour long orgasm, every note tastier and righter than the one before. These shows (and the handful of others like them) seem like double-edged swords to me: they were so good I was spoiled for months afterwards hoping the next show would catch it again.

09-09, 10-72 Hollywood - Mike Dolgushkin

Too bad the band can't still play the Hollywood Palladium. The place seemed to bring out the best in them. Thirteen months after the legendary 1971 shows the Dead played the Palladium again. These tapes, too, have something to offer. The first night The Other One has a maniacal intensity that reminds me of the Waterbury, Connecticut gigs later that month. The second night's second set starts with a He's Gone> Truckin — stop that's extremely interesting. The jam is great — Dark Star> Drums> Jack Straw> Sing Me Back Home. Supposedly David Crosby plays on this, although I can't hear him for the life of me.

09-09-72 Hollywood Palladium - Louis Woodbury

This was the first show I saw without Pigpen. They were in great form and played a lot of new (at least to me) material. They were still playing Friend of the Devil in the faster style like it was originally recorded for American Beauty. That was also the first Stella Blue I had ever heard and it left a pretty powerful impression. I could never remember the words at that time but I could instantly pick that musical drift forming out of a jam anytime after that.

On the down side, someone in the crowd for some reason threw a beer bottle at the stage that broke between Bob and Jerry. No one hurt but it got a little tense for a bit. Bob flipped a wild-eyed finger at that portion of the crowd. I always thought that only happened in rowdy cowboy bars. In a nutshell explains the beginning of the bottle and cans ban at shows.

09-23-72 Waterbury, Ct. - Mike Dolgushkin

This was the last Cryptical for a long time. The Other One that follows has a strange, rowdy jam in the middle. Friend Of The Devil and Bird Song are also exceptional.

09-27-72 Stanley Theatre - Arthur Dent

This one must not be in wide circulation, else it would certainly be held in higher regard by the community at large than reflected in the feedback surveys. In DeadBase VIII this show barely made the list; in DeadBase IX it seems to have vanished from deadhead consciousness. The show starts with Morning Dew! An excellent Playin is drawn from the singularly deep well from which many a fine Playin flowed in 1972. A wonderful Dark Star, long as is the 1972 tradition (the three longest ones in the DeadBase VIII timings section are all from '72), features solid tours through the theme, theme/jam, jam, spacy jam and space phases in a nice even progression. It is beautifully balanced with some blistering guitar work from Jerry during the Jam segment. And afterwards, the band follows Phil into a collector's-edition Cumberland.

09-28-72 Stanley Theatre - Ross Warner

It's a tape beyond description. In a year with so many landmark shows containing colossal jams, (Europe, 8/21, 8/27, 11/19, 12/31) it's hard to imagine any one show breaking away from the pack. This one does. While the actual concert may not have the historical significance of some of the above-referenced dates, the performance remains my favorite from 1972. My tape begins with the Playing In The Band that concludes the opening stanza. While there are those who feel that this song reached its peak in the sweltering heat of the Pacific Northwest a month before, this reading has always struck me as superior. Jerry's fingers don't stop moving for a single second. The resulting composition is without flaws. I've never heard a Playin' that keeps such insane momentum the whole way through. No noodling here. Cap'n Trips just takes off and never looks back. If he doesn't like what he sees around any given corner, he just makes an immediate turn. No stops. Even when it appears that the band is going to wrap things up, Jerry marches on. And the scary thing is, this is only a preview.

The second set begins with a Bertha that kicks and screams right out of the gate. This version retains the spark of its inaugural 1971 counterparts, but has taken on the sophistication that would define the entire year. When Jerry takes his solo, the notes sound like they are literally ripping through my speakers. The sound also has a ratty quality that is refreshing in the midst of this vintage known for sophistication. Next up the best Greatest Story Ever Heard. Yes, I mean it's better than the Veneta version. Bobby and Donna's howls give the song the justice it so richly deserves. And the subsequent jam is simply one for the books. After tearing up the jam, Jerry lends a St. Stephen theme as the band builds to a crescendo. The Strat Man's Fender is in maximum overdrive as you have to wonder if this one's ever gonna stop. Jerry's piercing solo leaves you absolutely floored by the tune's end.

To most likely lend some sanity to the proceedings, the band offers up sweet renditions of Brokedown Palace, Ramble On Rose, Me & My Uncle and El Paso. They then proceed to launch into one of the most mind altering continuous suites of music they ever performed. They begin with a He's Gone that has a nice edge to it. Unlike many '72 versions, including the one on the album, the song begins with instant momentum. Phil's voice lend some real power to the vocals as Jerry, Bobby and Donna go where the wind don't blow so strange. After the parting harmonies, the band immediately begins a jam based on the remnants of He's Gone. But it gradually reaches such heights that you don't realize they've brought you to the outer limits until it's too late. He's Gone never had a monster like this spring out of its belly. The music eventually melts into Phil's lap and he takes the helm a powerful bass solo. The rest of the band does a nice job bringing in the necessary reinforcements as he finally builds into the rumblings that signal the beginning of The Other One.

But after rousing the beast from its slumber and luring it into complete chaos, The Grateful Orchestra gradually floats back into space. It's at this point that you realize that they've got you in the palm of their hands. They're simply toying with you. You cannot beat The Warlocks, for they will bury you. The band then comes hurtling back through the atmosphere and plays The Other One as it was always meant to be. Jerry is simply unconscious. Phil applies the necessary support as Bobby fires out the first verse. The ensuing jam also spares very little time in ditching the prescribed itinerary. After shredding the song's built in jam, Jerry proceeds to whip the band into such a frenzy that you'll swearing you're back in Playin'. It sounds as if he's trying to rip the strings right off his guitar. Out of the ashes begin the playful strummings of Me & Bobby McGee. After the treacherous territory we've been navigated through, this mid-station serves as a welcome respite.

However, the boys (and girl) don't allow much of a break as they then launch back into an Other One so menacing that it seems impossible to keep up with them. Señor Garcia is clearly firing on all cylinders as the band mercifully helps him complete the journey. The conclusion of The Other One reaches the point where a Cryptical Envelopment would usually fit. In fact, the band had just played it in Waterbury a few days before. Instead, the sail into one of the most meaningful Wharf Rats ever performed. Nine short years ago, my first DeadBase placed this rendition at the top of the heap. I couldn't agree more. I dare any other version (4/28/71, 5/19/74, 5/7/77, 7/8/78, 6/24/84...) to climb into the ring. Jerry's vocals never sounded sweeter and Bobby's rhythm efforts, which are outstanding throughout this show, serve as the perfect backdrop. Jerry's picking shakes off the shackles and gives this one a nice rebellious quality. Fiery and fuzzy, this Garcia-induced explosion eventually settles into a polite conclusion. The tape in circulation appropriately ends here. But goin' out like a lamb it ain't. This show leaves you looking like the passengers sliding off the 747 in "Airplane!" — exhausted, disheveled, exhilarated. All thanks to the best ride of your life.

10-09-72 Winterland - Mike Dolgushkin

This was the night that Grace Slick came out at the beginning of the second set and wailed over the microphone while the Dead fooled around behind her. It took me a while to realize who she was. Musically, the Dead were fantastic that night. Playing In The Band and The Other One were hot, and this was apparently the first time they did Box Of Rain live, even though I hadn't seen them enough to realize that.

10-21-72 Vanderbuilt U. - Bernie Bildman

This was a free outdoor show (for the public). The band played under a circus-type tent, and the entire central area of the campus was used for the crowd. This was my second show, and it was VERY intense, featuring The Other One. Garcia talked freely from the stage and backstage area to the crowd. This show was advertised by and put on by the student entertainment council with money left over from their budget. Fans came from all over the Southeast.

10-21-72 Vanderbuilt U. - James Sallis

When the "Skull and Roses" album came out with an invitaion for Deadheads to write in, I am sure that I was one of the first to send in a letter. About a year later I received a notice that the Dead were going to play a free concert in Nashville. Those few of us in the Deep South who wanted to see a Grateful Dead concert had very few opportunities to do so without driving for days, so my friends and I were only too happy to drive 400 miles for such a treat. We arrived in town the night before and some kind Vandy students let us stay in their dorm rooms. When we got up the day of the show, the weather was dreary and cold. Praying that it would not rain we went down to the concert site and staked out a good spot. The stage was set up at the foot of a gently sloping field surrounded by trees right in the middle of Vanderbilt University. The backdrop was an ancient brown-brick building with gables, covered with lots of ivy.

The clouds produced a little mist as we sat and waited for the show, and this dampened us body and soul. About 1:30 the clouds began to break up, and by showtime it was gloriously sunny and warm. To me, this personified the magic created by the Dead and their colorful legion of fellow travelers. A very tranquil crowd had gathered for the afternoon's proceedings, and the appearance of the sun signaled that it was time for the show to begin.

The show started out with four solid rockers that got this Southern crowd hopping. After Bertha, Me & My Uncle, Deal, and Beat It On Down The Line, I caught my breath enough to notice that there were some new people on stage. Who is that girl swaying around up there, and who is playing keyboards? Nobody around me seemed to know, but the show was moving along just fine. The band seemed relaxed, and they were taking their time with the songs, making sure they were really in the groove before starting to sing. The crowd really responded to Tennesee Jed, and Playin In The Band closed out a great first set.

The second set kicked off with three more rockers that got us all back on our feet. The Truckin> Other One> Morning Dew segment took the crowd on a trip through many moods and emotions, and they ended with a scorching Sugar Magnolia. Luckily, they had enough energy left after a long, hard-driving show for Johnny B. Goode as an encore. The thought I had after this show was that despite some weak vocals, a few missed guitar notes, and a couple of new players who were still trying to find their niche in the band, you could always count on the Grateful Dead to give you their best effort to put on a high-quality concert.

During the last couple of songs the sky was beginning to get cloudy again, and by the end of the encore it was overcast and cold again. Another amazing Grateful Dead day. Y'all come back to see us real soon.

11-17-72 Wichita - Peter Lavezzoli

It is very surprising that nobody has yet reviewed any of the November 1972 shows for DeadBase, as this was as impressive a period as August or September. Beginning with Kansas City, particularly 11-13, and moving from Oklahoma City into Kansas, culminating with the legendary five-show run in Texas, November is one of the peaks of 1972 Dead. Playing in the Band reached a zenith during these shows, as evidenced from three consecutive landmark versions from 11-18, 11-19, and 11-22. Dark Star and Other One also reached new heights of improvisation. Despite the many highlights of the Texas run, the most impressive whole show from this period is 11-17 Wichita, one of those rare cases where every song is played to its full potential. The entire band is energized, but Garcia especially is on fire. Even first set pieces shine: Me & My Uncle, Tennessee Jed, BT Wind, are all played with incredible gusto. Bird Song is another masterpiece, with Garcia's guitar getting just the right sweetness of tone that still manages to cut through. The jams in Bird Song soar with enthusiasm. Jack Straw in Wichita gets a big cheer as one would expect. Then we move through more scorching versions of Don't Ease, BIODTL, pretty much the entire setlist. China Cat>Rider is well developed in the transition jam, as compared with others from late 1972. Around and Around is one of the most energetic versions ever played, very unusual for a first set as opposed to a closer! Casey Jones caps the set in style.

Garcia continues the trend by opening the second set with a fiery Cumberland Blues that gets the band and audience limbered up at the outset. Keith is sizzling on piano, and Kreutzmann and Lesh are running like a well-oiled machine. The vocal harmonies are strong and clear. The special chemistry of the band on this night continues to show. El Paso is given a proper treatment, and then we have one of the finest versions of He's Gone. This version is stand-alone, with Donna Jean joining the band for some extended gospel harmonies at the end before Garcia moves into a robust instrumental jam that only comes to a stop after it has been fully explored. This seems to work well, because rather than segueing into it, the band starts Truckin with a fresh burst of energy.

The real prize of this fine show is the jam of Truckin> Other One> Brokedown. Truckin is given the enthusiastic treatment it deserves, before the jam slowly evolves into something much more jazz-flavored and otherworldly. Rather than the trademark bass intro to Other One, the Dead slowly arrive there by weaving their way through many different instrumental vistas that vary in mood and intensity. Really, this can only be labeled as "Jam," because the music becomes so formless that there is no other way to define it. Without the formal introduction, suddenly we find that they have crept into the Other One without our noticing it. The verse is sung, and then it's back to a more freeform mode of playing, again quite different from standard Other One jamming in a way that can only be identified as "Jam." Keith gets an extended section of jazz-inspired piano improvisation, sounding very much like McCoy Tyner. Garcia creates a brain-fry meltdown sequence that builds for a good while before actually reaching the point of no return.

Eventually we find ourselves back in Other One for the second verse, after which the band immediately drops down into a gorgeous Brokedown Palace, a surprising yet outstanding choice that should have been done more often. This Brokedown is played and sung flawlessly. After this, it's nothing but rock and roll, with a blistering Sugar Magnolia that is another highlight of this show. Then we get a stand-alone Uncle John that brings the energy to another peak before the band leaves the stage. As they return and encore with Johnny B. Goode, Garcia and Weir are both going full tilt with many screams and howls during the final choruses. Upon hitting the final chord, Weir lets out a final screech and that's all folks. No pussyfooting here.

12-10-72 Winterland — Mike Dolgushkin

In my review of December 12 in Deadbase VI I expressed my desire to obtain a "pristine soundboard" of 12/10. Well, pristine it's not, but a very good board tape of the middle of this show has been circulating. In a year filled with stellar versions of Playing in the Band and The Other One the renditions from this night easily meet their competition. The deep space in The Other One is as spooky as it gets.

12-12-72 Winterland - Mike Dolgushkin

The show on the 11th is well known since it's in wide circulation on tape, but I wish that a good quality tape of the 12th would surface. (A low-quality audience tape apparently exists.) This closing night of a three-show run wasn't outrageously spacy but did show the Dead at its rockin' best. The entire band was dressed in their Nudie outfits, don't believe the stories you hear about this having happened only once. In fact, the opening Rowan Bros. one-upped the Dead by taking the stage in total darkness wearing these...well, whatever they were they lit up in the dark. Weird.

12-31-72 Winterland - Bernie Bildman

This was my first SF show (and the first of many visits to this magnificent city). Somehow I ended up backstage, talking to Garcia, who had on a cowboy-style sequined Nudie suit (it turns out it was on a dare with Weir, who also wore one). This was a very intense show with David Crosby, standing in the background shadows, playing on a few songs. I distinctly remember a small girl coming out of the wings before the encore, whispering something into Garcia's ear (he had to stoop to hear her), who then moves right into Uncle John's Band as if she had asked him to do it. Once the band is swaying gently thru the song, same girl (who by now obviously looks like a daughter of SOMEONE onstage) comes onstage again and twirls/dances her way through the entire number, absolutely transcendent. For the first time I realize something SPECIAL is taking place in my life.

12-31-72 Winterland - Gary Ross

The Trucking> Other One from this show has a kind of fluid interstellar momentum that to my ear has never been equalled before or since. I have never heard a jam more evocative of "deep space" than this one, and after 17 years it remains at the top of my personal list of the the greatest Dead jams of all time.

As I recall, we were all really worked up for this New Year's show to see if the Dead could top the incredible Winterland shows they had just played on December 10, 11, and 12. In those days there was a strong sense of new ground being broken at Dead shows, and that was certainly the case on the 31st.

I particularly remember sitting in the seats directly behind the stage with a movie camera and a bottle of champagne (security was a lot looser back then), staring down onto Billy's drum kit and watching Jerry's lips move in time with the exotic new language pouring out of his guitar during the jam.

The whole first set of this show crackles with energy. Mexicali and Box of Rain are standouts, and the Playin is one of their best short versions. The big second set jam blew us all into outer space — and some of us have remained there to this day.

02-09-73 Maples Pavilion - Phil DeGuere

Stanford University is another spot where the Dead really step out, for me, and this particular night was a scorcher. It was howling wind and rain outside. Inside, the band had a slightly rocky first set, including an off-key Row Jimmy, Loose Lucy (with a large number of unrecorded verses), and then uncorked a Playin In The Band that let everyone know the second set was sure to be serious.

The second set achieved critical mass and just built in intensity until, during Truckin, the floor started to move. No, it wasn't the drugs kicking in — Maples is a basketball pavilion with a floating floor and ten or so thousand of us dancing up and down in rhythm together started the floor rocking on its springs. The stage started bobbing up and down like a boat on the ocean, and the p.a. scaffolding started swaying back and forth like palm trees in a high wind. Naturally, as one by one we became aware of what was happening, everyone just jumped up and down harder, playing with the phenomenon till at one point the guys in the band were looking at the swaying p.a., each other, and wondering if they should bolt from the stage. They didn't and everyone got out safely an hour or so later. I managed to get a tape of this show from a board master Bear recorded at the time, and although there are musical flaws in the first set, the tape remains one of my very favorites.

02-17-73 St. Paul - John J. Wood

This '73 show is notable for the once-only triad of Here Comes Sunshine> China Cat> Rider, the first two entries composing an amazingly seamless transition that warrants question on why that pairing wasn't explored further at that time. For my personal "songs to revive" list, Here Comes Sunshine is one of the top candidates: With some careful updating on the lyrics and arrangement, the entry could fare well in the Dead's current lineup, with a fresh new potential.

After the final reprise, the band explores the Sunshine theme, until Jerry slyly inserts the first notes of China Cat, which the band flawlessly picks up on cue. Even after a number of listens, the transition remains amazingly fresh and unique, with a smooth dexterity that exemplifies the spontaneity the Dead are so noted for.

02-21, 22-73 Assembly Hall - Alan Beckman

This was the first of two shows at U of I Assembly Hall. I was a sophomore at the time, my friends and I had somehow gotten advance notice of the shows, and we decided that we would be first in line for tickets. At that time, U of I had two lines for events at the assembly hall: one for small-quantity ticket purchases and the other for block purchases of larger quantities (usually for frats/sororities that wanted to get 50 seats together, for example). We were lucky enough to get the first spot in BOTH lines.

They way it worked, the first person or group had to have someone there at all times to keep their place in line and to keep a list of everyone else that was in line. So my friends and I all got our turns to pull night-duty at the Assembly Hall in January, 1973. Those nights were a truly exceptional memory for me - as the word spread about the shows and folks came by to see if a line was started, we got to meet virtually every Deadhead in town and the surrounding area. We'd be out there in the freezing cold (it can get very cold in the winter in Cham-Bana) and people would bring by hot chocolate, tea, blankets and sleeping bags, etc (LOTS and LOTS of etc, as I recall). We'd party all night with whoever came by, and we'd hold a roll call every day at 6:00 PM. "Be there, or your name's off the list," that's how it worked. This went on every day for about a month until the day came for tickets to go on sale.

I don't recall how big the venue was for the shows - the Dead insisted that they close off about 2/3 of the Assembly Hall so only the area in front of the stage was open for seating - but our immediate group occupied the first 10 rows or so both nights, and friends of friends had much of the rest of the floor.

We decided that the first night would have to be a special event, and what could be more fitting for a special event than top hats and tails for everyone? We went to the local Stallone's Formal Wear on Green Street and told the guy that we wanted to rent something on the order of 20 outfits - the whole nine yards: top hat, tails, spats, canes, capes with red silk lining, etc. They had to search every Stallones in northern Illinois, but they eventually came up with them. I don't know if we turned a few heads as we all came in at once the first night, but I know for a fact that WE had a blast.

At one point, my friend Chuck threw his hat up on stage for Jerry, who was right in front of us (stage right), but he wouldn't put it on. Bobby and Phil came over to look at it lying there on the stage, and they stood around it laughing a little, Bobby said something funny and pushed it back over to Chuck with his foot. Later that night, after the show was over and we were among the last to leave the auditorium, a janitor came over and said "I just wanted to let you know you boys looked really SHARP tonight!"

We were pumped, that feeling you get after a Dead show and you've been on your feet all night, you're hoarse from screaming your head off all night, the music's still ringing in your ears, and you just want that feeling to go on forever.

The second night, I had front row center (right on the aisle) and we still had the first 10 rows or so filled. I heard tapes of that show and I swear I can hear us yelling out between songs. I've only been to about a dozen Dead shows, but these particular shows were among the best times I had at one. I think I may have preferred seeing them at the Fox Theater in St. Louis when Jerry played pedal steel for the New Riders, because of the exquisite venue and Pigpen was still with them, but nothing will replace those memories of seeing them in Champaign!

02-22-73 Champaign-Urbana - John W. Scott

A Dark Star> Eyes Of The World from 1973 — need I say more? This show features the inimitable Philip Lesh. Tapes often contain only 45 minutes to an hour of the show, centering around these two songs with Half Step sometimes appearing on the second side. The bass-centered jam before the lyrics in Dark Star is wonderful, and Phil and Jerry build a strong rapport as they wander from the main theme. Uneven vocals in the fifth playing of Eyes Of The World are atoned for by the instrumental collaborations of Garcia and Lesh. Given the improvisational strengths of Eyes, it is easy to see how the Dead had the confidence to introduce this song in a second set position, connecting it to heavy hitting favorites such as Dark Star and Truckin.

02-28-73 Salt Palace - John W. Scott

A tape for Philophiles. Truckin leads to another great circa '73 bass solo, which is still a mere shadow of the master tones yet to come. Throughout the Other One> Eyes jam Phil is omnipresent. These last two songs also make a perfect companion side to the above mentioned 02/22/73 show.

03-22-73 Utica - Michael J. Rogers

Late March was cold and Central New York was still covered with snow but it was sunny out. The Utica War Memorial is your typical sterile hockey arena with bleacher-type seats. These arenas dot central New York. It seems that they were designed by the same architect so you'd feel at home whether you were in Utica, Syracuse, Binghamton, or Rochester.

Our first impression on walking into the arena was the wall of sound. Stretching from the stage to the ceiling, none of us had ever seen such an array of speakers, amplifiers and scaffolding to hold everything together. Even though there were hundreds of speakers, the sound never blew us out of the place. This was also the first concert we'd been to where you could hear the vocals and the instruments!

The first set started with a punchy, rockin' Promised Land that was marred by the only PA problems of the night. The TLEO was bouncy and fast-paced by today's standards. Probably the best song of the set was a five-count Beat It On Down The Line. It sounded like Donna was singing lead throughout, which made up for an unimpressive You Ain't Woman Enough later in the set. The playing was strong, tight, and Keith's piano playing impressed me even though I was expecting to hear Pigpen. We didn't know that he had died a couple of weeks prior to this show. I was pleased to hear Box Of Rain. It was a twangy, countryish version spiced with some nice riffs from Jerry to complement Phil's nasal, but slightly offkey, vocals.

The highlight of the second set is the jam out of Truckin into the Other One. Phil sounded hot throughout the jam and then thundered into the Other One intro. The band went out of the first verse into a lengthy jam laced with feedback before going into the last verse. The last verse ended and the Dead brought us back to earth with a sweetly played China Doll.

The Thursday night in this cold city came to a close with a hot, rockin' Saturday Night that shook the rafters.

03-24-73 The Spectrum - John W. Scott

A show of contradictions: an incredibly long jam out of Truckin (He's Gone and Truckin take up 45 minutes of tape) and an incredibly short Dark Star. Get this one for the jam.

05-20-73 U.C.S.B. Stadium - Louis Woodbury

This was the first three-set show I saw and my first road trip for a Dead show. I got another couple of first-timers to go along too and they never went back to their same old used-to-be after that. This was also the last time I saw the New Riders open for the Dead. I left feeling thoroughly satiated after hearing more of the new tunes in an incredible 8-hour show.

Jerry was trying stage left for a while and during the China Cat> Know You Rider jam one of the speaker boxes fell off the top of the P.A. stack and landed just a few feet from him. He never seemed to miss a note but the stage crew was all over the system immediately checking out the integrity & locking it all down really well. Amongst all the other great tunes that day I have a great memory of an Eyes of the World morphing into Stella Blue as the sun was sinking in the west.

05-26-73 Kezar Stadium - Mike Dolgushkin

This show, featuring Waylon Jennings and NRPS, was originally scheduled for two nights at the Cow Palace, May 22 and 23. I believe we bought tickets for the 22nd. The shows were billed as "Dancing on the Green," but I think that what they were planning on doing was spreading astroturf around inside the Cow Palace. When the shows got changed to one day at Kezar, the billing was changed to "Dancing on the Outdoor Green" along with the Led Zeppelin show that took place at Kezar a week later. Led Zep played so loud that except for the 1975 SNACK benefit there were no more concerts at Kezar. Bill Graham then moved his outdoor extravaganzas to the more remote locale of Oakland Stadium, starting with a Leon Russell show on August 5, 1973. This show was billed as "Dancing on the Outdoor Green #3" but by the third week of advertising it was changed to "Day on the Green #3." I guess someone at BGP wanted to downplay the dancing aspect. Anyway, as you can see, the famous "Day on the Green" series started with the Grateful Dead at Kezar Stadium.

We entered Haight-Ashbury's own neighborhood stadium and headed for the field, spotting Allen Ginsberg on the way in. What a place to see a show! Kezar is a small stadium, home to the 49ers before they became Super Bowl champions. The Haight borders two sides of it, Golden Gate Park borders the other two sides. Polytechnic High School was across Frederick Street until recently, and during the entire show people were standing on Poly's roof, and the roofs of adjacent flats watching the show.

The new Riders came on first and played a smoking set. They were augmented by Keith Godchaux on piano and a previously unknown (to me) harmonica player named Matthew Kelly. The Riders went off and after a short break Waylon Jennings and the Waylers came on. They played a very relaxed set of country music, which was, in retrospect, just what we needed before the Dead's onslaught.

The Dead hit the stage at 2 PM. They opened the first set with Promised Land and did some standard songs fairly well until they did the first of the new songs — Row Jimmy. Things seemed to kick in after that. Looks Like Rain was REAL nice, They Love Each Other followed (another familiar song), and they closed the first set with Playing In The Band, which included licks reminiscent of the Ace album. The second set opened with Here Comes Sunshine, the jam in the middle reminding me of Dancin. You Ain't Woman Enough was a big surprise, as I'd never seen Donna sing solo before. Box Of Rain was real nice, a smokin' China Cat> Rider followed, and it was good to hear Bertha in a different position than first song, first set.

The Dead took another break at 5 PM to try to deal with their recurring equipment problems. The band opened their third set with Half Step. Me and My Uncle followed and then one of the all-time great jams followed. He's Gone itself came off good enough but in the jam that followed Jerry was absolutely bubbling. He's Gone went into Truckin which led into The Other One Phil took a solo that was a song in itself, so after The Other One's vocals the Dead jammed around a little, went into a spin and wound up back in prehistoric times. They built up to the Tiger, hit the beginning, and ROARED. My friend Steve thought that it sounded like millions of rats pouring out of the speakers. The Tiger hit a climactic finish, the music dissolved and what followed sounded like the band had landed on Pluto. This was not the first time that they had done this particular jam that year but it was impressive nonetheless.

After a few minutes of "Pluto Space" the Dead broke into my first Eyes of the World. I liked the song itself, during the jam I kept thinking that they might go back into The Other One. At the end of all this, they slowed down into what I thought was going to be my first Morning Dew but it turned out to be my first China Doll. A longer than usual Sugar Magnolia followed, and the Dead encored with Casey Jones.

For about a week after you could tell who'd been to the show because in order to face the stage you had to face into the sun. I'd see someone who's skin was peeling off his or her face and I'd think, "She or he went to Kezar."

The old Kezar Stadium is now gone.

06-09-73 R. F. K. Stadium - John Chojnowski

My friends Bear, Dennis and I were in town scouting beaver and had no idea what was going on in RFK.

My buddies were drinking heavily on the hills over looking the Potomac while I found some interesting folk there covering the shows for the Philly Daily News. We shared some wine and other things as we bunked in for the night.

The first of three astonishing experiences took place Saturday morning. My new friends told me to "listen" to D.C. waking up. From the hills at RFK the many noises began softly and escalated to a loud roar. Truly incredible!

My comparades and I eventually got up and figured we would go inside to see why so many had gathered. We did not have tickets but found very little resistance in getting in, there were unattended gate openings.

We assembled high in the mezzanine and hung out. Doug Sahm opened but his music was like listening to Sleepy Hollow, a WXPN show.

My traveling companions were so laid back but I became anxious. My memory that day opens a Johari Window that I shall never forget.

I shall still bet anything the Dead played Wake Up Little Suzie but I can not find any such written notation.

Then the second of my astonishing experiences happened: I was walking about the Stadium when I noticed the entire crowd in physical rhythm to Tennessee Jed. Truly amazing!

My third indoctrination was that it was incredibly hot and humid that day and there were signs posted all over not to swim in the polluted Potomac but there were individuals on the field (I had wandered up to the stage) that were wiping down the sweaty bodies with sponges of cool water. That really blew my mind.

Other memories include a young lady handing a bunch of roses to Jerry who was in pigtails. The music did me in and I have been hooked ever since.

06-09-73 & 06-10-73 RFK - Bernie Bildman

Both the weather and the shows were Hot as Hades, a steamer bath. The Dead played with the Allmans, Doug Sahm the first day and Wet Willie, Allmans the second. We were upset cause the Dead came on before the Allmans on the first day, but in retrospect we realized that what had happened was that it wasn't two shows on two days, but rather one show over a two-day period, with the Dead opening, preceding the Allmans, and CLOSING after them on the second day/nite. The shows started around noon each day; the Dead entered on the 9th around 3 or 4 pm, then the Allmans at about 7pm. On the 10th, it was cloudy and looked like rain, but by the time the Dead took the stage — Owsley was once again seen walking the grounds in his tie-dye tank top — it was crystal clear out, with the sun setting at one end of the stadium as a full moon rose simultaneously... a cosmic event to be sure. It felt like we were on a space ship, with the darkness advancing, making the WALL of SOUND flashing amp and instrument digital lights blinking seem like we were taking off. The Dead started at 7 PM and didn't leave the stage until almost 2:30 AM, following many songs/jams with members of the Allmans and Merl Saunders. Dicky Betts had to be egged on by Garcia. He seemed rather intimidated by the VERY intense psychedelic energy swirling about the site, to say nothing about being on the same stage with a band that was beyond belief by this time. We slept outside the stadium by a river, stream that swings around it. It was a lovely time!

06-10-73 R. F. K. Stadium - John W. Scott

This is one of those momentous concerts that transcends the normal Grateful Dead parameters. This is true throughout the concert, but is especially so in the third set with some very special guests.

The opening Morning Dew serves notice that this is no mortal concert to be allowed to slip into harmless happy memory. The rest of the set is excellent, as are many from this period. Wave That Flag rocks along at a brisk pace. Box Of Rain is also upbeat, with unusually strong percussion followed by a a bouncy They Love Each Other. A pattern is emerging. The Dead are obviously in a good mood. Bird Song starts out laidback as the Dead take their time to weave this song. The delicate jam is worth the effort. The climax of the set is a long space and bass Playin with a glorious outdoor quality. Somehow, with Morning Dew to open and Playin to close this just doesn't seem like a first set.

A gorgeous Eyes Of The World opens the second set — they just don't build them like this anymore. This song is a confluence of jams and spaces spanning twenty minutes, and each of them is stunning. The mood turns blue for a beautiful Stella and then bounces back with Big River. Here Comes Sunshine picks up where Eyes left off, with a tasty wandering jam — yet another truly superior version. Dark Star is one of those nice jazz and space versions from 1973 with lots of Phil throughout. After a nice long introduction we get a bass solo — Jerry joins in for a duet and a jam is born — then back into Dark Star for the first and only verse. Wonderful. A hot Truckin and Sugar Magnolia with a Bobby screech close the set. It would be presumptuous not to be sated after such a performance.

After an already impressive concert we get a third set that all but eclipses the music that preceded it. As the Allman Brothers Band shared the bill for both these concerts, it was only natural that Dickey Betts and Greg Allman would join the Dead for a few songs. Merl Saunders is also on hand and joins in as well. The resulting fusion of musical styles is a joy, one that should have been repeated frequently. It Takes A Lot To Laugh, It Takes A Train To Cry is an interesting no-man's land for them to start this delicate musical relationship. It is slow and steady, allowing the musicians to flex their muscles and warm up.

That's Alright Mama is a major highlight for me. The variety of superb guitar work on this song is outstanding as Jerry and Dickey trade leads. The guests fit in so well that is is hard to imagine that they are not a normal part of the Grateful Dead sound. Promised Land is a little unsurprising, giving us a bit of a breather before we are overwhelmed again. The NFA jam is fantastic, the styles melt and flow into such a wonderful fabric. Jerry even toys with Mountain Jam before GDTRFB. The keyboards as well as the guitars and bass help place both these songs among the best-jammed versions ever. This is definitely one for the history books.

06-22-73 Vancouver - John W. Scott

This is an excellent all-around show. A solid first set ends with a wonderfully long, and spacey Playin In The Band. Given meandering versions like this and modern-day counterparts, I am increasingly of the opinion that Playin is our closest remaining tie to the days of Dark Star.

The second set starts with one of my favorite versions of Here Comes Sunshine, with sterling instrumentals and passable vocals. The long jam between Truckin and The Other One is particularly noteworthy, containing a Nobody's Fault Jam and a bass solo. Phil is strong both in spirit and in the mix throughout, making this tape yet another "must have" for his aficionados.

06-30-73 Universal Ampitheatre - Fred Heutte

This is surely one of the unrecognized gems from this era, although it has a very low profile in collector circles (unlike 05/26/73 Kezar and 06/10/73 RFK with the Allman Brothers). The copy I have is apparently an audience tape, a fairly rare find for the time. It is certainly "live" with whistling and cutting up by the crowd near the recording setup, and some joker keeps yelling for songs like Loose Lucy to the merriment of his pals.

The first set has some interesting moments, including an early and somewhat crude Bird Song and a galloping Playing In The Band, with the audience clapping along. But it's the stunning second set that makes this one shine. A discordant and relatively brief Dark Star suddenly transitions into an Eyes of the World that just never seems to quit. For more than 20 minutes, just when you'd expect an end to the jamming, Garcia heads off in yet another unusual direction, his sparkling scales propelled by Lesh and Kreutzmann in perfect swingtime tempo. This is so much fun that at one point Phil yells, "Wake up, kid!" to somebody who must have been nodding off. The Eyes finally slides to a halt and, with a nice flourish, goes into a fine Stella Blue.

06-30, 07-01-73 Universal Amph. - Louis Woodbury

These were the first back-to-back shows I saw and realized even more profoundly that they really did try to make each and every show unique and different.

On Saturday night, one of the crew lit a fireworks fountain up on one of the P.A. towers creating a moment of panic for some folks who thought it was an electrical fire but Garcia calmed 'em down with a simple, "Don't worry folks, it's only the movies". Bird Song was a tune that I had kind of enjoyed as a studio recording before, but after hearing the extended jam they did with it that night, I was blown away.

One of the really cool things about this night was winding up with last-minute front row seats which made it possible to see the interplay amongst the band going on during the show. We were sitting right below Keith's piano. Donna seemed to be enjoying herself and sounded really quite good that night. Phil and Keith hard to see behind the grand piano but Garcia had a great faraway look in mid-jam during Bird Song. Bob had picked out a young long-haired beauty a couple of seats to my left to sing to during his tunes. Bob and Garcia faced off for the final crescendo of One More Saturday Night and as it hit it's peak, Garcia made a bug-eyed face and stuck out his toungue as if to say "Enough already!"

Also on Saturday night there was one of those magical synergistic moments during Black Peter that made the hair stand up on the back of my neck. The Universal Amphitheater was for its' first few years an open-air outdoor venue that has since been encapsulated with a roof that allows year-round use. That Saturday was one of those stiflingly hot valley nights with no breeze at all. Everyone had been sweating all through the first set in that hot still air. Then the band started into a particularly heartfelt Black Peter. When they came to the line "Just then the wind came squalling through the door..." a cool breeze wafted through the amphitheater that elicited a spontaneous gasp from the crowd and it seemed like the rest of the evening was relatively cool and breezy !

Bobby had recently cut off his ponytail which some observant character pointed out to him apparently thinking he hadn't noticed yet, which he acknowledged with "That's a fact" before launching into a hot Greatest Story. I suspect this may have been the same guy a few rows back who kept yelling in vain for Truckin'. Later in the show, he was sounding too wasted to keep yelling for it and faintly pleaded, "will somebody yell Truckin' for me ?"

The Sunday show included a really nice jam between China Cat> Know You Rider that sounded almost like it might turn into Uncle John's Band... but didn't. They did this only a few times in early '73 and '74 but one finally did turn up on Dick's Picks 12. Many thanks to Dick Latvala for all he did to get this great stuff out of the vaults.

In an interesting footnote to these shows, the Official Grand Opening of this brand new venue on the Universal Studios backlot was the following weekend with a week-long series of Frank Sinatra shows but the Dead gave it the real shakedown acid test first.

07-27-73 Watkins Glen Sound Check - Dick Latvala

The most people ever to see a musical event (750,000 by some estimates) came sloshing through the mud and debris on 07/28/73 to see The Band, Allman Brothers, and the Grateful Dead. The day before the Dead did a sound check for the many thousands who came early and played for over two hours!

The first set has some rousing playing on Mexicali Blues and especially on Bird Song. Tennessee Jed is even above average, but Mississippi Half Step and Me & My Uncle are uneventful. Next we get another major treat — about thirty minutes of improvisational material that I have never heard elsewhere! This is very extra special and highly unique, constituting an example of what I call "Primal Dead."

This is another tape that one should go out of his or her way to obtain. It is an audience, but quite listenable.

09-11, 12-73 William & Mary - Bernie Bildman

Lesh to this day talks about these shows and his bass playing here. The first night was wonderful. Garcia tunes his guitar and talks with anyone who wants to outside the backstage door in the daylight before the sound check. The band is as loose as I've ever seen them. After the first show, Lesh comes on stage and announces that they have an open nite tomorrow, why don't we all come back for a $4.00 cover charge with no seats this time and we'll do it again. The next night there is a smaller crowd, and we literally dance and twirl around a half empty gym-type hall to the tune of Eyes Of The World; I was definitely hooked by now, for Life!

10-19-73 Oklahoma City - Joe T. Fountain

All I have of this show is what David Gans played on the Grateful Dead Hour back in June 1993 (Show #245). He played Dark Star> Morning Dew, and then, after a commercial, Sugar Magnolia. It is my favorite tape now and makes me wonder about the whole show. Listening to the Dark Star, it's amazing in its "improvised structure." Now I know that sounds like a oxymoron, but that is what comes to mind for me. This Dark Star of course is improvised, but seems almost to have a structured form, resembling a jazz symphony.

At some points during the performance, Billy sounds like he is leading the band. A drummer, if he wants to, can really screw up a band by changing the tempo either in a subtle or radical way. For a keen example of that, check out Pete Best's drumming on the June 6th, 1962 version of Love Me Do, contained on the Beatles' Anthology 1. No wonder George Martin insisted that someone else sit in on drums after that, eventually prompting Best's dismissal and Ringo becoming the luckiest man in show business.

But in Billy's case, his superb work on Dark Star is breathtaking. He was In The Zone. Jerry and Phil also shine as well. The band is extremely tight as they glide into one of the best Morning Dews ever. The emotion in Jerry's playing and singing is evident throughout as the song builds to a close. Not one note is wasted.

The Sugar Magnolia that followed saw Bob clearly energized by what came before. It's one of the best versions ever. A great end to one of the best GD Hours. Time to enshrine this show on a Dick's Picks!!

10-27-73 Indianapolis - Bernie Bildman

I remember this one for two reasons. First the band stayed at the same hotel we did and we had breakfast with Keith and Donna (who just happened to hear we were from Alabama). Second, during Greatest Story Ever Told a huge (and I mean HUGE) person climbed on the stage and stood about five feet in front of Donna with his arms outstretched sideways. The roadies didn't know what to do and there was no sign of violence, so they just let him stay there for a few moments, then ever so gently led him off, as Donna took a big sigh of relief. The crowd erupted with a huge release of nervous energy and from that point on it was literally dynamite. This place was set up to be a skating rink and they had asbestos slabs placed over the ice. It was freezing the closer you got to the floor, so everyone had blankets laid out, and somewhere down the line into the show someone's blanket started smoldering. We never found out whose it was but it lasted the whole show. It was a riot and a half.

10-27-73 Indianapolis - Jerry Eagan

My friend and I talked our way into the back door. Wandering around, we helped ourselves to the Heineken's that was in some large tubs filled with brew and ice. No one really gave us any static. On stage, the boys — this time including Donna Godchaux and her hubby — were doing a sound check. They were unloading some of that fine fine stuff off Wake of The Flood. We sat and listened. And when they were done, the boys (and girl) started coming off the stage. Most of them were uninterested — just two more flaky "heads" who had found their way into the backstage scene. Bob Weir stood atop the stage and kind of peered down on us ... same for Jerry.

But we summoned up the courage to say, "Hey, Jerry, have you got a minute?" And by God, he did. He came down and sat beside us and we talked for a few minutes. What is your favorite song? Don't have one. Too hard to say. There are too many for me to say. Depends on the situation. Will you play "Alligator" — (I was totally fried/obsessed with hearing Alligator — as I had been at the 69 shows). No, doubt it. They didn't play it anymore. What kind of music do YOU listen to, when you're listening to music? All kinds. Reggae (early influences that were to seep into Shakedown Street); rock (he probably mentioned some people and bands but I can't remember); and some other questions equally stupid. I'm sure that he was bored out of his skull and had been asked these before... yet... and this was confirmed by something I read in one of his interviews... he did seem to appreciate us.

He seemed to understand or appreciate that we really were deadicated fans and really cared about him and the band, and he was giving us some time. I think he said in this one interview that as long as the energy was containable, and he kept on the move, he could deal with fans and groupies back stage. The whole trip from his point of view was something he could handle as long as he didn't get too wound up and connected with people like my friend and I. And if he did, he was incredibly respectful, incredibly gentle and quiet and kind. I weep sometimes thinking about that. And that is where my heart goes out to him.... being an introvert myself ... knowing that all that extraverted exposure was slowly killing him. Cause some of the other band members really didn't seem to want to be bothered. Weir, for instance, was later spotted that night snorting up in the bathroom (we had both gone back there — the Heineken's, y'know?).

The beer was free, and I think we could have stayed "behind the lines," so to speak, but my future wife and her sister and brother were out front, so my friend and I slipped through the crowd entering the Coliseum and found them, and got a place on the floor — the one that a previous reviewer said got colder as you sat on it longer and longer. We got up and stood to hear the music, which was a dream to hear. Such a mix of old favorites as well as some new stuff. And the stuff I'd heard during sound check — Half Step — was so sweet because I'd never heard it before. The set lists ran on with so many of my personal favorites that I just kept shaking my head in gratitude as the boys wound their way through them all. Sugaree, Jack Straw, Greatest, Loose Lucy, BIODTL, China/Rider, just in the first set. The second opened with Me and My Uncle, not necessarily one of my favs, but then slipped over to Bertha, Me and Bobby McGee, Playin into Half Step into Big River into - you got it, one segue into another until they took a break after a sweet, sweet Stella Blue, one of the softer, gentler versions I'd ever heard. Sugar Magnolia ended the second set, and then an Uncle John's Band, again, just what the doctor ordered.

The idea of staying back stage and watching/listening to a whole show, drinking, maybe getting turned on from somebody in the Dead crew was alluring. Garcia had been so great. There was a sense, though, of some aloofness among some of the other band members, but what the hell, they didn't have to love us or anything. It's just that Jerry was really real. He really made us feel like he was present for us. And so... yes, Jerry made choices about heroin and smoking and chilli dogs — as "we all do." True, true. But, I'm Grateful I made my own choice to stop using. That was in 1982 — nine more years after this show. Had to stop "doing" Dead music for SEVEN of the first fifteen years sober and clean, the Dead were such a powerful drug and alcohol connection for me. But that, too, was worth it. Cause when I resumed hearing/seeing them, in 1990, at Cardinal Stadium, in Louisville, I understood that the magic wasn't just from the drugs and alcohol alone. It was truly a beautiful thing that was there, Acid, grass, hash, psilocybin, alcohol, or not. The Grateful Dead were for real.

My brother Greg and I arrived at Winterland at about 11 AM. Believe it or not, there were about seven people in line, nobody was hanging out but that's the way things were in those days.

While we were still out there the roadies band — "Sparky and the Ass Bites from Hell" — started playing. About 4:30 we got into Winterland and got treated to some music we'd never heard before. That was fun! We hit the floor and during the hours before the Dead came on we got treated to a tape of a soundcheck: The Other One into Sweet Inspiration with Donna singing vocals, no less! I wish I knew where and when that came from.

Eventually the Dead hit the stage, including a newly cleanshaven Jerry Garcia. The PA that night was a rough version of the "Wall of Sound" with the speakers set up vertically on the corners of the stage. Bertha opened, from that song alone I could hear how much tighter they were than at previous shows. The rest of the set carried on in the same vein — standard material played exceptionally well, in fact, better than I'd ever heard it. Until Weather Report Suite. I'd heard it on the record but not live, this version practically drilled me into the ground. Break time.

Phil was acting particularly weird that night. Not only was he paying rapt attention to the fireworks that Boots was setting off in back of the amps, but he was also staring at his oscilloscope for a good part of the evening. Phil was also making comments such as, "We're the electronic spiders again. Welcome to the city of the future." Okay.

The second set started with Playing In The Band. Since Playin had never really gone into anything I was not prepared for it going into Uncle John's Band. By the time they slipped into Morning Dew I'd figured out what they were trying to do. I was right, Dew went back into Uncle John's and back into Playin. They stopped, and Big River came next a somehow appropriate choice, then came Stella Blue, the first time I'd heard it since my first show. After some deliberation Truckin started. I expected it to go into The Other One since that was always what Truckin did during my previous live Dead experiences. But no, they fooled me this time and went into Wharf Rat. It was good and hot and went into Sugar Magnolia to close the set. Saturday Night was the first encore and Casey Jones the second.

11-11-73 Winterland - John W. Scott

This show has a number of excellent songs. A flawless Weather Report Suite culminates in an excellent jam to close Let It Grow. Big River cooks with some of Jerry's best leads ever on that song. The centerpiece for this show, however, is a wonderful rendition of Dark Star that has become one of my favorites.

On February 13, 1970 the Dead played a beautiful, lilting Dark Star, a perfect crystal to be treasured for its clarity and simplicity. On this night the Dead played a different song: the thinking person's Dark Star. This song demands much attention as it wanders on and on, exploring many beautiful, unusual themes. There are a full fifteen minutes of introduction before the lyrics start (an absolute time is impossible as my tape flips here — ouch!). Indeed, the lyrics have little to do with the song's success as the Dead only sing one verse. The improvisational material throughout the song is inventive and extensive. The jam preceding Eyes Of The World contains one of my favorite themes, and is well worth the price of admission.

Although Dark Star is always a tough act to follow, this version of Eyes Of The World rises, effortlessly, to the occasion. These two songs consume more than 45 minutes of tape. The transition into China Doll is so beautiful that the earlier flip imposed on my tape no longer seems quite so horrendous.

11-14-73 San Diego Sports Arena — Gary Ross

This show is cut from the same cloth as the more famous Winterland and UCLA shows on either side of it. The first set is highlighted by an exceptionally good Here Comes Sunshine, the second by a long and tangled Other One filled to bursting with inventive motifs and transitions. Classic '73 space throughout!

11-17-73 Pauley Pavilion - John W. Scott

Although I am already guilty of contributing to the overemphasis on 1973, I cannot let this show pass without comment. I know of four concerts where The Dead played Playin> Uncle John's Band> Morning Dew> Uncle John's Band> Playin: one long seamless jam designed in heaven. This one is fantastic. Not only is each song played perfectly, but their relation is unparalleled. The transition from Morning Dew back into Uncle John's Band is so beautiful that it brought tears to my eyes on my drive home this evening. Heavy analytical attempts could only fall short. If you don't have it, get it.

The only other version of this combination I have is the 11/10/73 Winterland show. Although this rendition is slightly shorter and the transitions are not quite as smooth, the jams are great with different strengths and the result is equally impressive.

11-25-73 Feyline Field, Tempe - Jeffery Bryant

Living in Tuscon at this time was kind of remote for the music scene and even more remote for the Dead scene. This was my second show and I was eager to hear Wake Of The Flood material and, of course, anything from the European tour the year before.

It rained the entire weekend. It was Thanksgiving and this show was a great way to end a wonderful four days of holiday.

All the way to Tempe it poured rain and we just knew it was going to be refund city by the time we arrived. To our amazement, the Wall of Sound was being erected as we pulled up (about 10 AM). The show was scheduled for noon.

The stadium was very small and situated right on Interstate 10. The speaker columns towered higher than the tiers of seats opposite them. Steve and his crew set it all up, covered it over with plastic and disappeared as the rain continued.

Finally, around 2:30 PM, after a break in the storm, we get a sign of performance. There is a large overstuffed chair on stage for Donna who is 6-7 months pregnant with Zion, and she uses it!

The first set started and I was as impressed as I was at my first show. Very full sound. The audience seemed somewhat in shock at the vastness of the sound, the immense system totally overpowered the small baseball field. In my estimation there were only about 3-4 thousand in attendance.

The highlight of the show was the Eyes of the World into the Weather Report Suite. Great jams, intense sound, as our little baseball stadium came alive for the rained-out crowd of mostly college and local (Phoenix) Heads. The Sugar Magnolia into Going Down the Road into One More Saturday Night (it was Sunday) was great, but as the sun went down, breaking through the grey arena of desert sky, I distinctly remember Bobby saying to everyone, "Dig the sunset folks" and they did an absolutely warm and wonderful We Bid You Goodnight as the sun made its exit. It rained all the long ride back to Tucson, but we were happy.

A very small audience in a rare play area for the time. I would love and welcome a soundboard tape of this rare and excellent show.

12-02-73 Boston Music Hall - Dick Latvala

This is another of those special shows where something goes down that leaves you trembling with excitement. In the second-set jam after Playin In The Band, there is a section that contains one of the best "brain-fries" or "meltdowns" I have ever heard. What follows is a deliberate and purposeful building on a riff that goes on and on, characteristic of several shows in 1973 and 1974, but, that really hasn't been heard again.

He's Gone and Stella Blue each contribute to the overall uniqueness and power of the second set. (The first set was pretty average, except for a nice closing of Big River, Deal, and Weather Report Suite.) Sugar Magnolia is another special moment that has an unusual style of attack by Garcia. Morning Dew is the encore and is a riveting and strong end to one of the more famous shows from 1973.

12-02-73 Boston Music Hall - John W. Scott

What sets this show aside in my mind is a wonderful jam in the second set. When a beautiful Playin dissolves completely into space, the phoenix that finally rises out of the ashes we used to call "Heaven Help" jam. Tentatively identified as "Your Mind Has Left Your Body" from "Baron Von Tollbooth and the Chrome Nun," this is one of my favorite instrumentals. Labels aside, this version is fantastic — exceptionally long and clear with intense guitar work from Jerry. They eventually bend it into a short jazzy theme, which in turn drifts into He's Gone. Other highlights include a nice slow Wharf Rat with some forceful bass, a tasty Half Step> Playin and a short Nobody's Fault tease after Truckin.

12-06-73 Cleveland - Dave Cubbedge

On Thanksgiving day, 1973, my family ate turkey dinner at the home of some very close friends who had a son my age that Skip and I hung around with frequently. His name is Alan Otwell. To our surprise, after dessert a special gift was given to us... tickets to the Grateful Dead at Public Hall in Cleveland on Thursday, December 6, 1973! One week away and we couldn't wait!

As the day drew near we prepared ourselves. Skip and I had had some discussions throughout this period (being musicians both and audio freaks) about how many concerts we had attended where we had wished a live recording existed. Too much good music hanging around way out in space where only extra-terrestials could listen (provided they had ears). So Skip went out and bought a portable Sony stereo cassette tape recorder, which included a "stereo" microphone, carrying case and strap. Armed with extra batteries and blank tape galore we were ready to capture the Dead on tape! Except for one unpredictable thing...

You see, the Teamsters were having a fit about a new diesel gas tax and to show their dissatisfaction, truckers began clogging the interstates throughout Ohio and the Midwest. Literally stopping together side by side on the major roads! The Turnpike was impassable, as was I-71 between Cleveland and Columbus. We awoke on Thursday not knowing if we could even get to Cleveland from Toledo! Of course, the next thing to worry about was the concert. Had it been canceled due to the Dead's trucks being stuck somewhere outside of Mansfield? No, after a call to the hall, it would go on despite some delays. So it was then decided to take back roads entirely, which about tripled our travel time. We eventually arrived safe and sound at my Alan's fraternity house door just in time to head to Public Hall.

I remember it was fairly cold outside and there was some snow around. I wore a long navy blue coat and was thus designated the tape deck carrier. There was a big crowd of expectant Deadheads waiting for the doors to open. It was a long wait and the concert start time of 8:00 PM came and went. Finally at 8:20, there was a rush as the doors were opened, but my main concern was to just get in without getting busted, so I grabbed my ticket and headed towards the door. There was a rent-a-cop looking people over as we hade our way through the turnstiles, but to my amazement, I got in untouched!

Our seats were in the upper deck on the Keith side of the stage. We set the rig up, but kept a coat over the microphone to calm our paranoia. At the stage, I remember seeing the roadies still setting up the huge PA system, which was comprised of a good part of the "Wall of Sound." Keith's piano was being tuned directly in front and below us. The massive long hall filled up and at 9:00 the lights went dim. Tape rolling! As the band walked onto the stage, which was drenched in blue/green light, something was different... Donna wasn't there and Jerry had shaved his beard!!

Bertha was the opener followed by a long tune-up/PA adjustment period and then Mexicali Blues. Between each song there was a fairly lengthy adjustment period, maybe a little more than usual due to the rush in setting up. Next came Loser and Black-Throated Wind and then a song none of us had heard before, but dug, and that was a bouncy They Love Each Other. Somewhere in between songs, Bobby told us that Donna was at home getting fat and round. Beat It On Down the Line, Deal, El Paso, and Row Jimmy came next and the sound was getting better all the time (even audible on our amateur tapes). A real good Greatest Story (where the jam still leaves me feeling like I'm floating in air) followed by a hot China Cat... Rider. This version has a different jam melody before the Rider that I have not heard on any other tape. Unfortunately, we lost most of the Rider by not flipping the tape. We did get the last song of the first set, another we had never heard the band do, Around & Around, and it really kicked ass and left us screaming for more!

After forty minutes or so, the Dead came back out opening the second set with Ramble On Rose. During this song some head walked by our microphone, selling "uppers, downers." Bobby does Me & My Uncle and then the hottest version of Here Comes Sunshine I have ever heard and the longest also! Big River follows and then a tune-up period... no, this is Dark Star!!! What comes next is forty minutes of the best improvisational music, everything from delicate liquid melodies played with a wah-wah to Phil dropping chord-bombs on Cleveland. During one of the more quiet parts, you can hear the woman behind us scolding the people who were yelling for the band to "play something." "Shut up you babies," came her terse reply!

Finally, Bobby found the opening chords to the new song, Eyes of the World. This is a fine version also, the early one with the discordant jam in the middle, the fight between good and evil, always coming back up positive. Then a very gentle Stella Blue, which even when new sounded like they had been playing it for years. They ended the night with Sugar Magnolia, a very rousing version and there was no encore despite the crowd screaming for ten minutes. Time was up, it was 12:00 and the curfew was on.

We gathered up our stuff and headed out into the cold. We drove back to the frat house and put the tape into the machine. It worked, not too bad at all. Early on, Keith's piano was a little overbearing in the PA, but it certainly is not the worst Dead tape I have. And it is the only one of this show I have seen anywhere.

So that is my story of December 6th, 1973. I went on to catch more shows throughout the next twenty-five years, although I had put the scene on the back burner recently due to life stuff such as kids, job, my own musical endeavors, etc.. Jerry's death motivated me to go back again and listen to the music I love so much and to be thankful that I had those great days with the Dead.

12-10-73 Charlotte - Richard Pipes

It was very different being a Deadhead in the South back then. We were very few and there was a definite comraderie among us. Often one had to travel very long distances just to see the band. In 1973 I traveled from Chapel Hill to Baltimore, Washington DC, William & Mary College at Williamsburg (twice), to Duke, and to Charlotte with only the Duke show being what I'd call convenient. We felt like we were on a pilgrimage or something (maybe someday I'll send a review of the RFK stadium show of 6/9/73.). It was hard just having long hair here then, much less being a Deadhead, but at least you knew that people who were into the band were sincere and not just being stylish as many are today.

The weekend began actually on Saturday, December 8th, when the Dead played Cameron Indoor Stadium at Duke. In those days the Dead were not nearly as popular as today and they rarely played in the South. They had played an outdoor gig at Duke in 1971 and seemed to have liked it because they came back a couple of years later. I went over to Durham from Chapel Hill (where I was a student) early in the afternoon. My friend Kenny Klafter had lucked into the job of helping carry speaker boxes. He was through toting boxes by lunchtime and met me and another friend, also named Ken, and took us inside Cameron where, up on stage, Garcia was holding court with about 10 or 12 hippies around him. Kenny introduced us to him and we got to shake his hand and chat for a minute (I was so overcome I can't remember a word we said). When the security people began to clear the place for the soundcheck, Ken and I ducked under the bleachers (Cameron is just an old-fashioned gym) and hid in a maintenance closet. When the soundcheck started, we came out and walked down front and listened while the Dead played a couple of tunes just for us (until somebody came along and asked us nicely just what the hell we were doing there and showed us the door).

The Duke show that night was truly inspired. I saw 26 shows over 22 years and this was undeniably the best. A glance at the songlist will confirm the strength of their sets, and they rocked harder than I've ever heard. Phil did an amazing solo. The last three songs were "Uncle John's Band," "Johnny B. Goode," and the encore "One More Saturday Night." The place was packed, hot, sweaty—perfect, I'd say.

The Charlotte show was two days later on Monday, the 10th. The old Charlotte Coliseum (now known as the Independence Arena) is the second largest unsupported dome in the world (after St. Peter's Cathedral in Rome). A friend knew a lady from his church who worked in the box office and we were able to reserve the entire 3rd and 4th rows for our friends. My carload got there about an hour early, just as the doors opened. No rush or crowds. When we went in, to our amazement the mammoth sound system which at Duke and other gigs that fall had been set up on wings on each side of the stage was towering up behind the stage in a wall. Garcia was on stage right, noodling away seemingly at random. On the opposite side of the stage, Phil was hitting huge resounding notes, listening intently, and then pointing to individual speaker boxes. Above on the scaffolding, a soundman would go to that speaker, stick his head in it and nod that it was indeed blown. He would pull the box and someone below would hoist another up to replace it. This went on for awhile, with Jerry and Phil completely ignoring each other.

Finally, Phil quit and came over to where we were standing by the stage. He sat down, opened a Heineken, and started talking to us. He explained that the floor of the Coliseum was too narrow to allow the wings for the sound system, so they had decided to try it up behind. He said that he didn't know why but that they liked it better that way. When asked about the Duke show, he said, "Wow, Duke... we could kiss those people's feets, man!" Said that it was one of their best times ever and seemed to mean it. Someone asked him to play some particular song that night, to which I interjected that they should play whatever they wanted to since that was what was right for the moment. He said, "Yeah, but everybody wants to hear their favorite song." Just then a Charlotte police captain came up and told him to take the beer backstage. Phil replied with a wink, "But Ossifer, how can I pick up chicks if I'm back there?" The policeman just laughed and said, "Well, that's not my problem, son, I only know that if you don't take that beer backstage, I'll have to put you in jail." Phil leapt up with alacrity and told us, "See you later!"

We took our seats in the 3rd & 4th rows and proceeded to wait for everyone else. The old Coliseum held about 12,000 people when full. Even though the previous Duke show had been packed, the Charlotte crowd only filled about half of the Coliseum — the entire floor and up to the first level, mostly. The band was much more laid back than at Duke, but still playing very well. As at Duke, I had carried a pad & pen to write down a song list, the first person I ever knew to do so. I knew I'd never be able to remember exactly what they had played if I didn't. I used to get such funny looks from people in the crowd ("What's he doing? Is he with the FBI? Is he a narc?" — should have confiscated their stashes!).

The first set opened with "Bertha." About halfway through the set they played a scorching version of "Don't Ease Me In," which we didn't think they played much any more. Two of my friends, Mike and Butch, were so inspired that they got up and trucked, low and close like the R. Crumb comix guys, down the aisle and around the front of the stage, causing Garcia to point and laugh. They finished the first set with one of those special "Playin' In the Band"s that 1973 was famous for.

We were close enough to shout to the band and be heard. At the beginning of the second set, they seemed to be having a hard time deciding what to play. At that time "Promised Land" had not been released anywhere yet — in fact, they had only been playing it for a year or so. I yelled "Jet to the Promised Land!" and some of my buddies chimed in "Yeah, Promised Land!" They grinned and played it. When the song was over we yelled "Thank you!" to which Phil responded, "Thank YOU, faithful few." We were in heaven. The big jam was "Truckin'> Nobody's Fault But Mine> Eyes of the World> Jam> Brokedown Palace," and it was excellent. Then "China Cat> I Know You Rider" in the middle of the second set, followed by "Sugar Magnolia> Goin' Down the Road, Feelin' Bad> Sunshine Daydream." Rockin' almost as hard as Duke.

Godcheaux's piano speakers were at the center of the PA tower, their round appearance suggesting an oncoming train. The Dead played "Casey Jones" for an encore, and when they did, a cleverly placed smoke machine on top of the piano speakers began belching puffs of smoke in time to the music. The band looked up as ashes fell about them, laughing and pointing. It was a tremendous ending to a wonderful show. As we walked out of the Coliseum into the night, it was snowing, a very rare event for Carolina in December.

12-12-73 Omni soundcheck - Ross Warner

Like most recordings of its ilk, this soundcheck has some rough spots, but some real highlights as well. It begins with Jerry leading two blues-infused arrangements, Rip It Up and Blue Suede Shoes. These renditions didn't put Elvis' comeback in Hawaii in jeopardy, but they weren't too shabby, either. One can immediately detect that these weren't two songs the band wasn't going to play anytime soon. In the spots where Jerry would normally be adding some spicy licks, he laid off. The real "find" on this tape is Jerry showing Keith the cord changes in Peggy-O, which would be performed for the first time that evening. On this one, Jerry is particularly active. His vocals are like silk, and the band seems ready to unveil their new plaything. After the song finishes, Keith tinkers around, trying to retain what he's just learned. Jack Straw and Cumberland Blues both get some nice treatments. After the opening verse, Bobby proudly announces "Good morning!" Cumberland breaks down, but the band gives it a second start and kicks in before Bobby's verse. The tape ends with 30 Days In The Hole which is intriguing to hear. If you've got about 35 minutes free on a first set somewhere in your collection, look this one up.

Body:As 1974 is my favorite year for Grateful Dead tapes, I always enjoy listening to the 45 minutes I have from this soundcheck. The recording in circulation is extremely clear. Although it's clear that the band is only functioning at partial capability, it's interesting to hear them functioning without a crowd in front of them. The band practices two "new" tunes, U.S. Blues and It Must Have Been The Roses The above-referenced tunes are played in different sections, as the band is still working on the arrangements. The former has new lyrics and the latter is played a bit faster than its 1974 successors. There are few minute differences in the lyrics, with a "ribbon" for a "crimson" or a "must have" for a "maybe" here and there. Also included is a sharp Let It Grow and two attempts at They Love Each Other. Both run-throughs show the song played at an intermediate tempt when compared to its '73 and '76 counterparts. This was before the band added in the Mill Valley rehearsal and Lindley Meadows versions.

The real gem of the tape, however, is Attics Of My Life. The song is simply awesome with the '74 Phil-laden harmonies. The marriage of this tune and the inspired group vocals is a match made in heaven. Unfortunately during the only recorded performance of the year, the band is having some technical difficulties and are shouting out directions to the crew during the song. Phil asks "who's working the damn monitors?" Even when there's no one there, the Grateful Dead have equipment problems. But the song is still my favorite from the tape. After the "wings to fly" crescendo the song abruptly ends because Jerry has some problems with his levels.

To close, the band plays a free-from jam that evolves from what would eventually become the middle of Estimated Prophet. This is before the days of the wah-wah pedal, it's a real treat to hear this theme jammed out in its embryonic phase. However, just as Jerry gets his sea legs and starts to take off, my copy cuts. But as one of the few multiple-song soundchecks documented in DeadBase, I'm sure there are copies available in circulation. Make sure you get one.

12-31-73 Allman Brothers, Cow Palace - John W. Scott

This was one of those unfortunate years not graced by a New Year's Eve Dead show. There was, however, in San Francisco, a very respectable substitution. Bill Graham threw a wonderful NYE bash at the Cow Palace with the Allman Brothers Band that could teach the Dead a thing or two. It is doubly fortunate that both Jerry and Bill were in attendance to observe and even participate. Parts of this show were carried on a live nationwide FM broadcast. KPFA was intelligent enough to carry the whole show; consequently, there are some great tapes (it fills three cassettes) of this concert.

This is an incredible concert featuring intense, moving blues. As with the Grateful Dead, the first set is used to warm up, but also includes some exemplary music. This is definitely a dance band: One Way Out rocks — you have to move to this song. Stormy Monday is beautiful slow blues. Elizabeth Reed has a nice jazzy feel, and provides the same sorts of opportunities for jamming that Playin does for the Dead.

The Allman Brothers greet the New Year with Statesboro Blues, a hot start to a set that is all one could ask for of an annual celebration. One of the better segments of the evening brgins with a beautiful Jessica — a joyous wonder that doesn't need words to make me glow inside. Next up is Les Brers. Who would think that a band from Macon, Georgia would write a song with built-in space? This song has a similar function to the Other One, complete with a drum solo in the middle, and is equally effective. When I hear all the excellent instrumental songs that the Allman Brothers do, I wonder if the Dead shouldn't introduce some into their repertoire. When Les Bres is finally spent the Allman Brothers plow into a long, well-jammed Whipping Post.

The obvious highlight of the evening, however, is when Jerry, Bill and Boz Scaggs join in for a long run of blues. Hey Bo Diddley is particularly fun, with Boz playing with the lyrics and a variety of tasty leads from two masters. During the jam, when Dickey Betts is playing rhythm, Jerry and Billy are playing so strong that the band sounds like the Grateful Dead about to go into GDTRFB. This entire run in so powerful that it matches any Grateful Dead New Year's celebration. I heartily recommend this show to any aficionado of live recordings.

We entered Winterland, made our way to the left side of the balcony, and found good seats immediately to the left of the stage in the front row. At about showtime Phil came to fool around with his bass (as he often did then). He signaled to the crowd that the show would start in forty minutes. Roughly forty minutes later the band came on. Uncle Bill stepped up to a microphone and said, "Sorry about the delay, one of the musicians had a social engagement (Billy stood up). So, without any further ado, would you please welcome the great, great Grateful Dead." They charged into Around and Around. Good opener. Next came a shock: Dire Wolf, which I'd never seen them play. They got better and better with each song exploding in the middle of the set with a great Here Comes Sunshine. Unfortunately, they never played the song again. Soon after came Ship of Fools, the only one of the new songs to be played that night, and we got a Promised Land> Bertha> Greatest Story to close.

After the energetic closing to the first set, they took a somewhat different tack and opened the second set with Row Jimmy. Things started moving again with Weather Report into Stella Blue and then came waves and waves of energy — Big River, Ramble On Rose, and Me & My Uncle. Jam time. He's Gone started it slowly and surely with Phil providing vocal harmonies. A pretty jam followed, then switched into Truckin. They were wailin' now. Truckin went into a lengthy jam that soon became a rare Billy Kreutzmann drum solo. (Billy was just not taking solos that much then.) Well, there was only one song that could lead into and we got it — The Other One.

The Other One was structured quite differently back then, normally only the "Spanish Lady" verse was sung, the space would be contained somewhere within the song but you could never be sure where. This time it came before the vocals, the main theme from Slipknot was done and gradually they hit a place where only Jerry and Bob were on stage — VERY unusual. By and by the rest of the band came back, The Other One appeared again and after the vocals they slipped into Eyes of the World. I thought it was excellent. Eyes led into its customary Phil-led jam which was breathtaking and at the end they stopped. One More Saturday Night ended the set. Encore one was Casey Jones (ho-hum) but encore two had Johnny B. Goode go into We Bid you Goodnight. What a thrill, although I wish I'd have gone the next night and caught the Dark Star and Baby Blue.

02-24-74 Winterland Arena - John W. Scott

There is a gorgeous ninety-minute soundboard show with lots of full bass in general circulation. This tape, not surprisingly, is centered around the Dark Star> Morning Dew in the second set. The bad news is that the flip comes during Morning Dew. The good news is that Morning Dew starts fresh on the other side. While this cut was not mandatory (Dark Star and Dew take up forty minutes) it is not as bad as it may sound. The Dark Star is long (~27 minutes) and well jammed. Twelve meandering minutes elapse before the first and only verse. After the verse there are some lovely involved jams and some pretty spaces, with a short Spanish quote thrown in for good measure. After such a beautiful diversion, why return for the second verse? Instead, out of Space, the Dead suddenly sweep us into Morning Dew, clean, beautiful, and full of bass — how could anyone ask for more?

05-12-74 Reno - Mike Dolgushkin

The jam is unusual and very well played (especially since they blew up most of the PA earlier in the show). Truckin goes into a good Nobody's Jam and after the space they take off into a jam that I call "Slow Seven" followed by the Mind Left Body Jam.

05-21-74 Seattle - John W. Scott

With the help of some hefty internal space this version of Playin In The Band manages to span a full forty-five minutes. Through lots of different spaces and places, the length says it all. Get it.

05-25-74 U.C. Santa Barbara - Gary Ross

This simply has to be one of the greatest Dead jams of all time. The Truckin> Let It Grow jam is so inspired, so utterly breathtaking as to defy description. It crackles with the blazing intensity of a thousand suns. The Grateful Dead at the peak of their powers.

05-25-74 U.C. Santa Barbara - Mike Dolgushkin

This is an unusually energetic show for this time. It was hotter than hell outside, and for some reason Jerry was wearing a turtleneck sweater with the sleeves rolled up. I'd be hard pressed to find a better China Cat> Rider than this one. The whole band, especially Jerry, WAILS. Truckin keeps things going in the same vein, leading into a jam reminiscent of Playin but containing chord sequences that sound like the mountains around Santa Barbara. That goes into a short, happy sounding Space which leads into Let it Grow.

06-08-74 Oakland Stadium - Mike Dolgushkin

Yes, it was hot outside, we had to wait forever for the Beach Boys to show up, and the Dead's guitars kept going out of tune, but Playing In The Band was one of the most amazing experiences of my life. When it started I expected a repeat of the 11/10/73 and 03/23/74 jams, but I was pleasantly surprised to hear it gradually dissolve into total weirdness. Jerry hinted at the "Tiger" for a long time, and when they finally did it, it was the best I've ever heard. That went into a short feedback, leading into a strange, atonal jazz jam. The Eyes that followed Playin was good except for when they tried to take it into China Doll and couldn't, since they'd gone out of tune. Shows like this make me realize how much I miss the Dead's "jazz" days.

06-08-74 Oakland Stadium, Gary Ross

The great thing about the big '74 Dead jams is the way the band totally loses its identity as a bunch of hippies from Marin and turns itself (and the audience) into dinosaurs, galaxies, hurricanes, whirlpools, amoebas... Take, for instance, the Playin jam from the Day on the Green show with the Beach Boys (!). About two minutes into the jam, Garcia is already so far gone into his prehistoric condor jag that the rest of the band has no choice but to "boldly go where no man has gone before." So, what started out as a nice outdoor-fun-festival-picnic-type event has suddenly become some kind of howling cosmic frontier back about 400 million years ago.

When these guys get onto automatic pilot and just let it rip, every once in awhile they catch a VERY big wave, and that's exactly what happens here. (Check out the photo of Phil at this show on page 66 of DeadBase III — that says it all!). Don't expect to comprehend this jam fully the very first time you hear it. Several listenings in a shamanistic frame of mind might be helpful.

This is unquestionably one of the most powerful Playin jams in history. It culminates in a colossal giant-soundsystem roar that is probably still rattling windows at the center of the galaxy. All of this sandwiched in between a rip-roaring first set and tremendous versions of Wharf Rat and Eyes of the World make this one of the very best Dead shows of all time.

06-16-74 Des Moines, Iowa - John J. Wood

I only have a 90-minute soundboard tape, and DeadBase claims the list may be incomplete and not in correct order. That's too bad: based on the tapes, this show deserves better research. Thankfully, fine soundboards are available, even though the mix is rather hollow in some spots.

There are numerous highlights. Most notable is the grooving Eyes> Big River run, with a masterful segue led by Jerry and Bob. The Eyes is typical of the excellent versions played in '73 and '74 (as far as I am concerned, the Eyes of the 80's just don't hold up in comparison to these gems). Jerry's solos are blissful, as he plays with the feel and passion of the true virtuoso that he is. Phil's bass runs also add the essence that is so wonderfully typical of many versions of this time. Bob's rhythm work is very spry, and very necessary, as he works with Phil and Billy in retaining the funky, freewheeling flow; a flow that is sorely missing on many of the versions played in the 1980's. The feel is totally funky, yet completely exploratory, and the Stronger Than Dirt theme in the jam (typical at that time) is played with complete confidence, yet retains that completely loose aura. Big River retains that same funkiness, and this is one of my personal favorite versions. This version is a perfect complement for this Eyes, as Billy picks up the pace, Phil chips in some nimble bass lines, and Jerry rips some crackling leads. Keith's piano work on this mini-run is noteworthy as well.

Also of note is a spacey Playin', which lasts over 20 minutes, and goes to some crazy places. This is a version where I play the tape in my car, and I get lost in the jam, and by the time the version ends, I normally reach the place I want to be... in more ways than one. The spaces the version endears are the principle reasons one can easily get lost here, although it isn't as wacked-out as the great Seattle version of that year.

Other notable songs are a fine, laid-back version of The Race Is On, a casual, organ-filled Deal, and a strong Tennessee Jed. Now, if I can only locate the other portion of the show; primarily, Black Throated Wind, El Paso, and the Truckin'> Nobody's Fault But Mine Jam> Wharf Rat> GDTRFB run. If they are of the same musical quality as my tape, I can't wait to obtain it as soon as possible.

06-16-74 Des Moines - Thomas Flannigan

This was the only Dead concert that ever started early. It was cold and windy as we drove into Des Moines from Chicago. The radio was predicting heavy thunderstorms. We bought our tickets and loped onto the huge fair ground, inspiration for the Inge play "State Fair." Someone announced from the stage that the Dead would start early to try to get it in before the rains came. Everyone was kind of blue. We had left Chicago at 6 A.M. for the 1 PM start.

Bertha, then Mexicali Blues opened, and so did the sky. The heavy black clouds to the West and behind the stage were blown away by the advancing blue sky. The sun came out and the crowd was transformed. We could not believe how much tie-die there really was in Iowa! It ended up a hot, sunny day and the Dead played for four hours. I have never heard the tape, but I distinctly remember an "I've Been Workin' on the Railroad" jam for the prairie audience. A fantastic Wharf Rat came towards the end. The day had been a smash, and we drove all the way back to Chicago, arriving in the middle of the night.

06-18-74 Louisville - John W. Scott

This show is another important addition to any tape collection as it includes one of the Dead's finest improvisations. There are other convincing reasons to own this tape. The first set features a showcase version of Eyes of The World, an impressive feat during a year where excellent versions were all too common. The Weather Report Suite in the second set is equally impressive, including one of the finest renditions of Let It Grow.

In spite of the excellent songs that preceded, a two-part jam is easily the most interesting passage of the evening. After the first verse, a short Other One dissolves into Space with vague hints of the Blues For Allah improvisations of the year to come. As this Space matures the Bill conspires with Keith and a jam is born. Keith starts off with a great jazz flavor, Garcia picks up on the theme, and soon the whole band is bopping together. A quick, but painless, metamorphosis yields the slow blues jam of It's A Sin. Beautiful and inspired, its only sin is to be so short. These two themes are distinct distillations of two major influences on their music, providing impressive displays of jamming in its rawest form.

The Morning Dew encore is wonderful. Phil introduces it with thunderous notes, and yet manages a beautifully tender touch for the quiet passages. He is able to move between these two modes frequently and effortlessly throughout the song.

06-26-74 Providence - Simon Friedman

This is the show that gets my vote as THE great underrated Dead show, deserving wider recognition, availability, and improved recording quality. If this show were circulated as widely and in as good sound quality as, say, 06/18/74 or 08/27/72, I'm sure it would be widely acclaimed as one of the best concerts the band has ever played. I feel very blessed to have a decent audience recording of the second set.

The set begins with very dynamic, punchy versions of US Blues and Me and My Uncle. Then follows several minutes of beautiful haunting space, which leads into what I will unabashedly claim to be the best China> Rider ever. It begins with five minutes of jamming on the opening China Cat riff, something I've never heard anywhere else. The tune itself is bliss-producing, Garcia sounding very confident on both guitar and vocals. The jam into I Know You Rider is a masterpiece, going into some ethereal places before dropping into a superior rendition of the UJB-like jam characteristic of '74 versions, which comes to a sharp climax before going into I Know You Rider.

A cute Beer Barrel Polka introduces a fiery version of Truckin, which leads into an unbelievable jam. Garcia's playing is amazingly biting, clear, and quite bluesy. While many Truckin jams from this period are rather wayward, this one is very focused. Eventually it winds its way down to Phil alone. While his solo is but one minute long, it is certainly among his very best, full of heavy, rockin' chords that must have shook the entire arena. As if to tease the audience, he plays the first five notes of the Other One intro it in its entirety. The band jams on the Other One for only a minute or so, at which point, led by Kreutzmann's military beat, they veer off into a first-rate Spanish Jam. It starts off very tight, with Garcia pulling deep wails out of his instrument, then gets looser and faster, threatening to explode into total chaos. After an aborted attempt to re-enter The Other One, the band falls into a rather mellow, reflective space. Strong versions of Wharf Rat and Sugar Magnolia complete the set.

Getting an Eyes encore after so much jamming is almost too much. Although shorter and not as mind-boggling as other '74 versions, the band cruises effortlessly through the complex arrangement, right down to the final chord (where they would normally go into another tune). Here the band delivers an explosive ending characteristic of their more rockin set-closers.

06-28-74 Boston Garden - John W. Scott

Here is another instance of quantity meeting quality as the Dead fill forty-five minutes of tape playing from one (three-part) song. An excellent Weather Report Suite serves as a vehicle for a large body of improvisation, and the Let It Grow is exceptional, providing a solid framework for the jams that follow. Included is a particularly long and tasty Mind Left Body Jam, and even a Dark Star tease. Even though we have already been spoiled by the extensive jams, the nice, bouncy introduction into U.S.Blues makes the inevitable cut on a forty-five minute tape side particularly painful.

06-30-74 Springfield - Simon Friedman

This is the last show of the June 1974 Midwest-East tour, surely one of the highest peaks of the band's entire career. While there are indications that the string of long, intense shows, along with dragging the Wall of Sound around the country had taken its toll, there is plenty of excellent music. The first set contains a generous number of less common tunes from this era. Cumberland Blues is all one could ever ask of this tune: breakneck tempo, unbelievably fluent Garcia soloing, and powerful rhythmic support. This is electric bluegrass-jazz-rock at its finest. Greatest Story is also outstanding. The set ends with a 30-minute tour de force of Playin> UJB> Playin. As usual for '74 versions, Playin wanders into musical territory one can't even imagine.

The second set isn't quite up to the level of the first, the band sounding a bit tired in spots. China> Rider and Truckin do not have nearly the impact of the versions from four nights earlier in Providence. On the other hand, Eyes of the World works out quite nicely. The jam slides into several minutes of deep space and then into Stella Blue, which seems an appropriate choice for this show. The band manages to summon up some final fire for the closing NFA> GDTRFB> Saturday Night.

07-19-74 Fresno - Simon Friedman

Here's yet another '74 show with a long, exciting jam based on Let It Grow. After happening in the usual fast and fluent mode for a while, the rhythm dissolves and the sound seems to disperse from the center. The music hangs out in space for a bit, with seemingly random bursts of sound from each instrument. Phil then brings it back to earth with a slow, heavy beat, leading soon into a wailing, lengthy Spanish Jam. This evolves smoothly into a potent rendition of Eyes of the World with an extra-long Phil solo. Phil is also more out front than usual during the WRS Prelude and Part I, offering creative counterpoint to Weir's vocals.

Also notable about the jam, and other parts of the show is the unusually aggressive, at times even dominant, presence of Keith Godchaux. This was his birthday, and he seems to have risen to the occasion.

07-31-74 Hartford - Rob Bertrando

This show should be in anyone's top 5 of '74, and would be if better tapes were available. Three solid sets and lots of jamming can make everyone happy. Things open with a bang; a fairly standard '74 Scarlet, then a typical group of first set songs, closing with China> Rider and Around. The 59th Street Bridge Song interlude is sort of jammed around rather than played precisely.

The second set is only about an hour long, but does have great versions of Eyes and Weather Report Suite. The third set cooks from start to finish; even such "short" songs as Ramble on Rose are played with an intensity often missing in '72-'74. Between Truckin and Wharf Rat is a long jam with both Mind Left Body and Spanish Jam themes. Uncle John's Band is a great encore; too bad it's not heard there anymore!

08-02-74 & 08-06-74 Roosevelt - Ihor Slabicky

I was backstage at the rained-out concert of August 2, 1974 at Roosevelt Stadium. The band members were eating supper, and Bill Kreutzmann was cutting up his steak with his Buck knife. Around his neck, and around the necks of several others, was a gold skull with a lightening bolt on its forehead. Later, as the showers had not let up, Bob Weir went up to the stage and touched the metal supports. Apparently getting slight shocks, he said he wasn't going up there and getting electrocuted. The show was rescheduled for August 6. The rescheduled show, with the "wall of sound," featuring a "reggae" Uncle John's Band, a superb Eyes of the World, and Phil playing Seastones, more than made up for the rain.

08-04-74 Philadelphia - John Chojnowski

This time I bought tickets and got there early with a friend.

The stage was so that I could lean my elbows and get comfortable. We were set up stage left. Oh oh, Jerry was set up stage right. We had to scramble through the crowd and got set up perfectly. There's nothing quite like scurrying through a crowd with Bertha serenading from this incredible wall of speakers sitting behind the boys and girl.

I got my first taste of true Deadheadnism when I had no clue what song they were playing; Space, when someone told me they never left Playin.

I could not get into Phil & Ned, remember this was only my second show.

A young lady disrobed about three feet away and attempted to get on stage to Jerry. She was persuaded to do otherwise.

Now my dilemma, it was truly great that Bobby played that One Step Back Game because my kidneys were about to explode having been jammed up against the stage. This is my only dissatisfaction over the years of seeing the boys. You can count on having your personal space invaded. Sometimes, you just need your space. That ain't going to happen at a show.

I could no longer hold out and preceded to make my a way to the rest room. I did not make it and passed out. Some kind folk carried me to a hallway and provided me with cool water.

Once rejuvenated I could not push my way back to the stage through these nice, kind, folk. I did the best I could and elevated myself on top of some kind of furniture and listened to the boys and girl belt out Casey Jones. That song should have opened the show because Jerry was screaming and had the entire gathering stationed at that next level.

08-05-74 Philadelphia - Arthur Dent

This may be a mundane tape when compared with the rest of 1974 — no Dark Star, Eyes, Other One, Playin, no thematic jam, no Weather Report perched in an unusual spot — but it is strong by any other rational measure. The Truckin suite is worth the price of admission, and period standards, such as China Cat> Rider are everything they should be.

08-06-74 Roosevelt Stadium - Rob Bertrando

Another of the top 5 of '74, this show is as long as Hartford despite having only two sets — but what sets! Only about 35 minutes into the show they break into a great Eyes, which blasts along for 20 minutes and then stops! — one of the very few stand alone Eyes. During a brief equipment break, Weir and Lesh tell members of the crowd to stay off the speaker towers and the fence; then they head into Promised Land, Deal, and a nearly 40 minute Playin> Scarlet> Playin jam to close the FIRST set!

The second set opens with one of the best Uncle John's Band of the year; kind of a reggae beat behind it. The long jam is enclosed within Sugar Magnolia, and is very well played and enjoyable, but on the other hand is really no better than many other '73 and '74 jams with similar song lists. As a total show, though, this one is very tough to beat.

10-16-74 Winterland - Phil DeGuere

The movie cameras weren't there the first night of the set of shows that gave us "The Grateful Dead Movie." The Dead often call first nights "public rehearsals," but the improvisational feel these shows often have usually make them the best night for me, and it was true in spades for this one. I've never heard a tape to verify if my feelings lasted longer than the evening, but it was hot. Too bad they didn't shoot it.

10-16-74 Winterland - Simon Friedman

The second set begins with a 15-minute jam that has emerged from the Phil & Ned portion of the show, sounding somewhat reminiscent of early Weather Report and early electric Miles Davis. For a while Phil fools around with a riff very similar to what would later appear in Feel Like a Stranger, then comes forth with a muscular, forthright solo. Some Seastones-like space follows, and then Wharf Rat. This flows into a drumless space that features some beautiful, jazzy explorations by Garcia. The atmosphere sounds very informal and homey, much like a solo guitarist stretching out at a coffeehouse. At one point in the jam Garcia and Weir wrap arpeggios around each other, creating a twinkling effect.

The band kicks back into high gear with a slightly sloppy yet still excellent Eyes of the World, the ending of which is unique. At the point where the band would usually go into China Doll or another tune, the music once again heads into a gentle space. With great delicacy and precision, the band brings the music to a single-note close.

The second half of the set is standard fare in comparison.

10-17-74 Winterland - Corry Arnold

The Dead had an enormous sound system in 1974 (supposedly the largest in the world at that time). It had two huge columns of speakers, 48 feet high, stretching across the entire back of the stage. Apparently the system was beset with technical problems, but when it worked it sounded really spectacular, which was rare in those days, at Dead shows or anywhere else. Once at a baseball stadium (6-8-74), I saw Kreutzmann break a stick during a song, and the "click" was audible, even though I was in short centerfield, 200 feet from the stage.

Anyway, besides being very clear, the Dead's monster system was also extremely loud. At this show, the second of "the last five nights," as we called them for the next year, the Dead opened with Promised Land. Keith played on a Yamaha grand piano — a real grand piano, with a raised lid, not an electric piano like he played from 1977 on — and halfway through the song the lid of the piano dropped. There was a moment of anticipation and then an enormous boom. Weir cracked up and couldn't sing, but the band didn't miss a beat. How loud was it? You had to be there.

It's a good thing that Mickey wasn't in the band, or he would have made Keith do it every night.

10-18-74 Winterland Arena - John W. Scott

The centerpiece for this show is the simple three "song" second set, an elegant run of space and improvisation that would have been sullied by tacking on a mortal song. Phil & Ned's duet is joined by the rest of the band members for a full bout of contemplative Space. The chaos coalesces into a jam featuring lots of bass and then, finally, into what was to be the last Dark Star until New Year's Eve, 1978. The resulting Dark Star is very soft and gentle — more jam than space as the Dead have already gotten the anarchy out of their systems. The post-verse jam is a nice jazzy affair, with lots of bass and a hint of some of the improvisations to come in 1975. To finish the song the Dead return to a short bout of the Space from which it was born. Morning Dew rises slowly from the ashes that were recently Dark Star. This version is so methodical at times that it is almost sluggish, providing a truly breathtaking contrast when the crescendo arrives.

I have three copies of this show and each cuts in a different, and annoying place. One copy flips in the great jam after Phil & Ned, another during Dark Star and the third truncates Morning Dew. A trilemma of lesser evils — take your pick.

This was my first attempt at seeing the band two nights in a row. I thought it might be a good idea just in case they never played again. Plus, who knows what songs they would do or who might show up and play, after all, this was the end of an era.

At first the floor wasn't very crowded, The Bear was down there holding a microphone towards the stage and coaxing weird noises from the PA. After about three hours the Dead came out, were introduced by Uncle Bill, and opened with Mississippi Half Step. I could tell at once that this would be a spectacular show. Half Step went on and on and ebbed and flowed before coming to a gentle stop. A respectable Me & My Uncle followed, then came a midtempo Friend Of The Devil, not as fast as before but not as slow as now. Soon after came a great El Paso followed by a good Loose Lucy. That song came off MUCH better live.

Black Throated Wind was next. You could see Bobby's eyes bugging out as he screamed out the ending. Then — a special midset Scarlet Begonias. This one was very long, slowed down from previous renditions, and featured Donna scat singing off of Jerry's leads. VERY interesting. Since Fire didn't exist yet they eventually brought the song to a halt and followed it with To Lay Me Down. This was another song I'd never heard live before and I began thinking that they might never play any of these songs again. The rest of the night had that same kind of energy. Mama Tried was next as if to indicate that they would dust off some classics that hadn't been played recently. I was thrilled. Next — EYES OF THE WORLD! YAY! One of the all time best versions. During the structured part of the jam it was fun to watch Phil use hand signals to cue the changes, after that they went into a less structured jam that went on for a bit before settling into China Doll. Big River came next and it was break time.

During the break Phil and Ned came out. They kept their electronic chicanery short that night, and no other band members joined them. Soon it was second-set time, the band came out and opened with Uncle John's Band, my favorite version ever as the music just flowed out of the speakers. During its break Jerry was radiating energy. He was doing his best to make this the definitive version but also a very heartfelt one. Wow! What's next? Big Railroad Blues. None of us had heard this live before so we were jumping up and down. Jerry's train sounds in the middle were outrageous. The Race is On was next, then came Dolly Parton and Porter Wagoner's Tomorrow is Forever. A pretty vocal duet between Jerry and Donna, the chorus — "Yesterday is gone, but tomorrow is forever" seemed to say, "If we never come back, don't dwell on it." I had a lump in my throat after that. Mexicali came next, then a slow Dire Wolf followed by Sugar Magnolia. Wait a minute, they're not thinking of ending the set, are they? No, instead of Sunshine Daydream they floated into He's Gone. OKAY. He's Gone led into a bluesy jam.

Towards the end of the jam Phil started making signals and the band veered into Truckin but it wasn't Truckin as we usually hear it. They played the basic theme for awhile without singing, then took another turn into the Caution jam. Jerry, Bob, and Phil stood close together on stage and watched each other, with Jerry playing a million miles a minute. They came out of that, Phil took sort of a lead, then Billy took a short solo. A lengthy space followed, sort of dreamy sounding, then back into Truckin, with vocals this time! The jam after Truckin' was comparatively short before easing into Black Peter, another tune I'd never heard live. The jam at the end of it absolutely screamed. They stopped, retuned, and closed the set with — you guessed it — Sunshine Daydream.

When we got to Winterland at about noon the line was about four abreast all the way down the block. By the time we got in the forward balconies were full so we sat in the back. We still had a good view. The band came out, then Weir made an announcement, "Ladies and Gentlemen, the forty-three year-old perfect master, Bill Graham!" Graham strode out dressed in white tails and white top hat and made his introduction, "As it should be on a Sunday night in San Francisco, the Grateful Dead." Immediately, the band launched into Cold Rain and Snow, another live first for me. Then they played Mama Tried again. I guess they got off on it the night before. The rest of the set was extremely well played but the material was sort of standard compared to the night before. Loser, Jack Straw, and China Cat> Rider were particular standouts, and the set came to a roaring finish with Around and Around.

Break time came. The roadies scuffled around stage and soon set up a second drumset. WOW! MICKEY HART'S GONNA PLAY! Once everything was ready Phil and Ned came out. Their jam was longer this time. Jerry came out and joined them and I wondered if this would lead into the second set as had happened several other times. No, they eventually stopped and left the stage but for Mickey's return this was probably more appropriate.

The full band with two drummers came out and commenced the second set with Playing In The Band. This was a very different version, Jerry didn't use his wah-wah right off like he normally did. After a long jam we got the first of TWO Kreutzmann-Hart drum duets. Were they ever getting off! The first duet led into Not Fade Away (complete with Bob Weir screamer ending), which went into the second duet. The Other One came next — a faster, punchier version than they were normally doing, before easing into Wharf Rat. At the end of that song we got a little of the intro to Cryptical Envelopment before going back into Playing. Jerry turned his wah-wah on the song soon ended and it was time for another break.

Everyone expected the third set to open with Dark Star. No such luck — we got Good Lovin' instead, with Mr. Weir on vocals! It had obviously not been rehearsed but was still a decent version, with a long jam featuring some nice Garcia slide work. Things got quiet with Roses, then Mickey returned for a good Promised Land. He left again for Eyes> Stella Blue. Between the songs we got a bit of the Slipknot theme. Mickey came back and a rip-roaring Sugar Magnolia ended the set.

Naturally, the band got called back. Before the first encore of Johnny B. Goode Phil said, "Some of you might remember our old drummer Mickey Hart who's been playing with us tonight," to which Bobby retorted, "Fresh out of the mental institution and with a brand-new beard." He got a towel thrown at him for that one. After Johnny B. Goode they inevitably got called back. Phil said, "God bless you, San Francisco" and we got a very special last encore: Half Step into We Bid you Goodnight. They ended, Bobby said, "See you sometime" and it was all over. Bets were taken after the show as to whether they'd be back in six months or a year. Six months turned out to be closer to the mark.

03-23-75 Kezar - Simon Friedman

1975 was a time of transition for the Grateful Dead, being their time of "retirement." They only played four concerts that year, all in San Francisco. They are unique among Dead tapes, and all are worth owning.

This concert was less than 45 minutes long and consists mostly of an instrumental version of the Blues For Allah suite that would be on the album of the same name. A simplified version of Stronger Than Dirt, with a drum solo, is included in the middle. An encore of Johnny B. Goode provides a stark contrast to the rest of the show.

1975 "Ace's" rehearsals - Ross Warner

This tape is probably the most bizarre in my collection. Due to the discrepancy in sound quality between tracks and the lists in DeadBase IX, my copy seems to be a composite from at least two of the nights. The tape begins with the band taking several cracks at a song with Crosby. Although the instruments are very clear, The vocals are barely audible. It sounds like Crosby is the one singing and the band seems very deliberate in what they are doing. My tape simply said "smokin" for the next selection, so I naturally assumed that this was simply an adjective for the jam that had preceded it. Think again. What follows is the only known Grateful Dead dope smoke out on tape. Jerry, Bobby, Phil and Crosby are clearly audible, as well as another male and female voice. Bobby and Jerry are reminiscing about shooting firecrackers at the Democratic National Convention. Jerry admits that he's a Democrat while Weir is a registered Republican. Then follows about five straight minutes of hacking and laughing after which some one admits that "this stuff is ridiculous." Jerry refers to it as "brain surgeon pot." "You can perform a frontal lobotomy without leaving a scar," the anonymous male voice adds. I can't listen to this tape without laughing my ass off. If you hear something in your first-set filler that fits this description, turn it way up and prepare to do the same.

After this, the band attempts a free-form blues jam, which is not surprisingly a little sluggish. After a few attempts, however, they get it together. Also included is a formative rendition of Lazy Lightning-> Supplication without vocals. The second side begins with a version of Franklin's Tower, which Jerry sings by himself. Donna is absent from all the tracks. This version is not a slow as the one that would appear on "Blues For Allah" and not as quick as the one they would unveil at Winterland. There isn't really a jam to speak of, but Jerry gets a hold of the song before he's through and comments as to how much he likes this new composition. The boys then take a stab at the even more challenging Stronger Than Dirt (Or Milkin The Turkey). Considering the upcoming album was recorded shortly after these rehearsals, the band do es a very impressive job with this complex jam. The ensuing version of They Love Each Other is documented with the "reggae" distinction on both my tape cover and the pages of DeadBase IX. It's definitely more funky than the version from the 2/22/74 soundcheck. and only slightly less than the 9/28/75 arrangement.

My tape concludes with Jerry teaching Bobby the changes in Slipknot! You can really get a sense of the big-brother qualities The Fat Man always exhibited towards Weir. After a few tries, they do a nice job with all the twists and turns.

Due to its discontinuity, this isn't a tape to listen to at a party. But it is nice to hear a band whose every move has been documented on tape in an authentic rehearsal setting. Although I label the word rehearsal in quotes due to the side-splitting chicanery on the first side.

06-17-75 Winterland - David Gans

The announcement said Jerry Garcia and Friends, but with Keith and Donna and Kingfish on the bill we were pretty sure it'd be the whole Dead. And it was! Bill Graham introduced them one by one and then didn't say "Grateful Dead" — he said, "Ladies and gentlemen, Jerry, Bob, Mickey, Bill, Phil, and Keith. For you!" And away they went into... a new song!

It was Crazy Fingers, gentle as haiku. This was a little easier to digest than that lengthy instrumental they'd played at SNACK (with two extra keyboardists), a little more likely to represent the Grateful Dead we could hope to see on tour again some time soon. (Only later did we figure out that the SNACK set encompassed the music they were working on up at Bob's, which didn't yet have lyrics.) When they followed Crazy Fingers with Beat it on Down the Line, we knew there really was still a GD.

Deal, Big River, Fennario, and Me and My Uncle in a Winterland as delirious as New Year's Eve. And then another new thing, an instrumental (the only time we heard Help On The Way without lyrics) that shortly mutated into a riff vaguely reminiscent of an Average White Band song; that piece in turn became Roll Away (Franklin's Tower), as intriguingly modal as the instrumentals that preceded it and as sweet and eloquent as the one that opened the set. "In another time's forgotten space/Your eyes looked from your mother's face." Wow! "If you get confused, listen to the music play"!!! I was in the balcony of heaven that night.

08-13-75 Great American Music Hall - Simon Friedman

This is one of the most commonly available shows, at least in the past, as it was broadcast on FM and put on a bootleg LP. There are many great moments: a classic Help (the first time with vocals)> Slipknot> Franklin's opens the show. The first set ends with a unique Eyes Of The World that is simpler than the

'73-'74 arrangement, but still has Phil and Jerry alternating solos and scales. This moves into the drums and then into Stronger Than Dirt, done in the extremely complex arrangement as it appears on the album.

Most of the second set is not on the bootleg album, but still circulates fairly widely. The Other One is followed by one of only two performances of Sage And Spirit. The show closes with the only live Blues For Allah with vocals.

09-28-75 Golden Gate Park - Mike Dolgushkin

All week long it was rumored that the Dead would join the Jefferson Starship at Lindley Meadows in Golden Gate Park. Of course, there was no way of confirming this. I even called Grateful Dead Records and was told, "Well, they'd like to but they haven't made up their minds yet and blah blah blah blah..." Right. None of this was enough to convince my brother Greg and our friend Randy to go, so I went up myself.

I met up with Marc and Donna and the rest of the Moss Beach gang and hung out with them during the Starship's set, which was quite hot. After this I wandered off and found Gary Ross and company in the middle of the crowd forward of the soundboard. An announcement was made — "We have a lost child. Would little Danny Healy please report to the soundboard." Soon, as rumored, the Grateful Dead took the stage and opened with Help on the Way. Slipknot was long, flowing and lyrical, we couldn't believe this was the opener. Alas, Jerry broke a string, so they had to stop. The show went on in the midst of garbled announcements about a baby being born and Phil Lesh's lecture on the correct pronunciation of Truckin'. One of our party, I forget who, kept saying, "I hope they do They Love Each Other." No way, I thought. Wrong again.

The jam was quite energetic, in fact, the sequence after Truckin' was the loudest I'd yet heard them. The Eleven jam finished well after a disjointed beginning. The Drumz went on a long time, even after the rest of the guys returned to the stage. Phil, with a grin, went up to Mickey and said, "Would you knock it off, already?" Stronger Than Dirt was okay but a little rough, Not Fade Away, however, took the show to a much higher plane as Jerry took the opportunity to see what his new Travis Bean guitar could do. Completely bent blues licks and loud slurring. (As John Cipollina once said — "Wow! You can swear without using four letter words!")

After the show I met up with Ann and Steve and went back to their house in Burlingame. As soon as we got there I called my brother. "I know, I heard. What did they open with?" "Help on the Way." He didn't want to hear any more. We spent the rest of the evening in almost total silence. Occasionally one of us would say "The Dead were so good." They were.

09-28-75 Golden Gate Park - Simon Friedman

This free concert in Golden Gate Park consisted of one 105-minute set. There are interesting comments between songs, including attempts to get a doctor's assistance at a birth. Musically, the show begins with a great Help> Slipknot, with Franklin's Tower played separately later on. A vocally sloppy Truckin that has its charm leads into a unique jam in 11/4, quite different from the tune The Eleven. The post-drums section of Stronger Than Dirt> Not Fade Away> Goin Down The Road is killer.

06-03-76 Portland - John W. Scott

Following a twenty-month hiatus, the Dead return to the road with a vengeance. They debut five songs in winning form (not including the essentially new from Blues For Allah) and revive Dancin In The Streets after a lapse of over 200 shows. This is a confident, even ambitious concert that shows how excited they are to be back. The show is quite long, with the first set filling one cassette and the second set spilling over onto a third. The music is tight and exciting with lots of surprises for this northwest crowd.

New ground is broken immediately as the show opens with a self-assured introductory Might As Well. Even though Cassidy made its debut on 03/23/74, the Dead had not played it in concert since. This laidback version is played with a bit of a back-beat, and is a little rough around the edges. It is still good, however, and provides an interesting insight into the development of this song. Most of the set follows this laidback style, with three notable exceptions; the debut of Lazy Lightning> Supplication steals the set with jams that are sustained well beyond what one would expect from a first effort, and the combination is generally hot; Scarlet has wonderful extended jams that help us forget that we haven't reached the second set yet; and the Dancin revival is superb, filling out this 85-minute first set in winning style.

The second set starts with the respectable debut of Samson. Crazy Fingers is great, and drifts into a slow Wharf Rat, lots of beautiful bass. Let It Grow is a serious highlight, proving that it easily deserves second-set berths where it is allowed to bloom like this. Then again, it is one of the songs that adds real meaning to the first set these days. The Help> Slipknot> Franklin's is long and dreamy, with nice meandering jams, influenced by the versions from 1975, and quite different from the up-tempo versions to follow. This is one of my personal favorites as it is easy to get lost in.

06-03, 04-76 Portland - Don Wolfe and Paul Scotton

The Paramount was an old vaudeville or "silver screen" theater dating to the late Teens or early Twenties. By the time of these shows, the building needed a lot of repairs, with paint peeling and dropping from the ceiling, much of the plumbing and fixtures in need of replacement, carpet frayed and worn. But it was still a classy old theater, the acoustics were fine, and just about everyone had a good view of the stage.

Surprisingly, for such a small place, maybe 1,500 capacity, tickets were pretty easy to come by. In addition to the usual sources, all the big name department stores of Portland all had tickets for sale. By the day of the first show, long-deprived Deadheads were bursting with anticipation. The line to get in quickly wrapped around two sides of the building and soon stretched along the third. The lines to Dead shows could always be fun but this one was especially so; we were all so eager to plug back in.

When the band walked out you could taste the electricity and when they set out with "Might As Well" (not a personal favorite) the crowd not only cheered but all rose up from their seats, flooded the aisles and the orchestra pit in front of the stage, and danced, danced, danced. We all continued dancing through "Cassidy" but most returned to our seats during "Row Jimmy" and just swayed quietly. Thus, quickly, the scene for the two days had been established with our seats as home base and the aisles for serious participation. Everything seemed so fresh and vital, old songs and new, and the crowd, too, but at the same time it was all so familiar and welcome, like meeting up with an old friend.

06-12-76 Boston Music Hall - Jeff Briggs

This was my first Dead show, and I immediately got "On the Bus"!. In retrospect, I am lucky to have witnessed my first show at such an intimate and acoustically superb venue. The Grateful Dead returned from their break in June of 1976, with a tour of theaters in their major strongholds, Portland, Boston, New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco.

To my knowledge, this was the first Grateful Dead mail order. I heard about it from all my deadhead friends and I wrote a letter to the Dead's office and a few weeks later got the info back on what to send in for tickets. It was simple, no 3 by 5 index cards' #10 envelopes, etc. etc. I wish now that I had gotten tickets for the more nights on the tour, but it did sell out, and I was elated to get tickets to my first show for a Saturday night in Boston. Considering that this would be the first series of shows on the East Coast since Roosevelt Stadium nearly two years earlier, I realize now how fortunate I was!

Though this was my first show, I had been hanging out with Deadheads since the fall of 1974. UMass-Amherst was by then a Deadhead stronghold, and I lived in the Pierpont Residence Hall, which was surely one of the more psychedelic dorms on any campus in the country. During the time I lived there, one whole floor wing was kept dark and mostly only black lights or other subdued lighting were in the rooms. A large painting of the cover of Aoxomoxia adorned one wall. Some rooms had the walls between them knocked out and there was always extra people floating in and out of the place. When Dead tour hit, half the dorm left and when the band wasn't around a steady influx of Deadheads made the place interesting. The first dead album I had heard was Europe 72, but at Pierpont I was exposed to a number of different Dead bootleg albums, most brought in by heads from New York or Boston. They mostly seemed to be from 71 or 72 shows. The first bootleg cassettes I saw were later on from this 76 tour.

The Music Hall is located in the Theater District of Boston, just off the common. A good crowd of Deadheads was gathered out front, looking for tickets to this sold out show. I talked to one head who told me he had snuck in to the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday shows, and was going to get in to this one as well. So gate crashing wasn't just a modern phenomenon!

Inside, the crowd was in a real festive mood, sharing their favorite substances with everyone around, milling in the halls and bathrooms, greeting old friends and acting like Deadheads did for thirty years. I immediately sensed that this wasn't an ordinary rock crowd, but was a big, happy, joyous, spiritual family coming together to celebrate life in the music and dance of the Grateful Dead.

The show was just incredible, everything I hoped for and more. The twelve-song first set started off with Samson and Delilah, Row Jimmy, Music Never Stopped, each strongly played, then continued with the first major highlight for me, Brown-Eyed Women. I still like these '76 versions of this song as well as any. Next came Big River, and then one of my all time favorite Jerry tunes, Mission in the Rain. The Dead only played it on this tour, and I never managed to catch it with the JGB so I count myself as real lucky! Looks Like Rain is one of Bobby's best and it was next. Then came a beautiful Friend of the Devil which went straight to the heart. The set closed with Lazy Lightning, (new on this tour) Supplication, High Time and Promised Land. Looking back on it, this might have been the best first set I ever saw.

The second set opened with the Wheel, another song new to the Dead on this tour, but one we were all familiar with from Jerry's first solo album in 1972. There was always much debate among Deadheads about Donna's contribution or lack of to the band. Count me in amongst those who liked Donna, and the Wheel is one song where her efforts greatly enhanced the music. Cassidy came next, a song so pretty that my wife and I named our second daughter after it! Next came a hot Tennessee Jed which jammed on into Let it Grow into the drums, back out into Let it Grow and on into Wharf Rat, all sparklingly played. Then Jerry slowed things down with an all-too-rare Comes A Time (a song I knew as "Empty cup" from bootlegs). This was always one of Jerry's finest ballads and I was incredibly lucky to hear it in my first show. The set ended with a Dancin that had everybody up, and an energetic version of around and around.

This was a fun show for both the audience and the band, which came out and closed it with a multi-song encore: Sugar Magnolia> U S Blues> Sunshine Daydream. Even back then a more than one song encore was rare! Looking back on it, I still can't believe how good my first show was! This is a fine FM broadcast. Get the tape!

06-14-76 Beacon Theatre - John W. Scott

While no single version stands out enough to certify this show as a "must have," the song selection has a collective persuasion of its own. The first set is filled with great songs, and every one is performed very well. Personal favorites include Cold Rain, Row Jimmy, Cassidy, Lazy Lightning, and Playin. The Playin In The Band is particularly long and well jammed.

The second set features an unusual assortment of songs. A long, slow High Time, Music, Crazy Fingers, Dancin> Cosmic Charlie. The Help> Slipknot> Franklin's is unusual in that the Dead take a Space break in the middle of Help On The Way.

06-19-76 Capitol Theatre - Gary Ross

The Playin in the Band that closes the first set of this Capitol Theatre show sounds more like a '73 Dark Star — with two drummers. Definitely a great version.

06-23-76 Tower Theatre - Rich Petlock

This show starts off with Bobby's infamous Yellow Dog story. The first set contains good versions of High Time, Brown-Eyed Woman, and the transition between Lazy Lightning and Supplication has an interesting "different" jam. The second set has a very good Let It Grow, with a hot jam at the end that flows into a very good version of Cosmic Charlie. St. Stephen follows, the first time since 10/31/70 that these two songs were performed in the same show, and it is jammed nicely in and out of a hot long Not Fade Away.

06-28-76 Chicago - Simon Friedman

The second set begins with Eyes of the World, which like other versions from the June 1976 tour is very fast and light. Another distinctive feature of Eyes during this time period is a very long introduction, which is a simplified version of the jam that came after the tune in '73-'74. Phil plays a loose and limber solo soon after the last verse. This is followed by some music that reflects the influence of Mickey Hart, starting with what is probably the first instance of a drums duet containing instruments other than trap drums. The rhythm, melody, and tone sound amazingly like the perking coffee pot in the old Maxwell House commercial! Suddenly the rest of the band jumps in and plays the only Dead version of Happiness is Drumming. This is an instrumental precursor of Fire on the Mountain that appears on Mickey's Diga Rhythm Band album, which was released right around this time. It is given a quite lovely, fluid, and relaxed interpretation. The rest of the set is standard material from this time period.

Given the success of this performance, I wonder how it happened that the Rhythm Devils segment did not become standard for another two years. It is also curious why Happiness is Drumming was shelved for almost a year before it re-emerged as Fire.

06-29-76 Chicago - John W. Scott

Even by itself, Mission makes this tape worth owning. But if further impetus is required one need look no further than the Playin Jam. As this show was broadcast, beautiful tapes are available and should be a part of any substantial collection of live Dead. The Wheel nestled inside is a gem unto itself, more improvisational than the norm this version takes a beautiful song to another level. My copy of this tape has a potentially ugly splice during this critical Wheel jam. I don't know how much is missing, but just in case I would love to hear a complete tape of comparable quality. Sometimes there can be little worse than not knowing, even if you suspect the best.

07-12 -> 18-76 Orpheum - Mike Dolgushkin

The months leading up to the Dead's return to the stage were filled with wild rumors, as was the entire 19.5 month "vacation." After the Golden Gate Park gig we thought we'd had it figured out — the SNACK benefit was right around the Vernal Equinox, the Bob Fried Memorial Boogie was a few days before the Summer Solstice and the Lindley Meadows performance was right after the Autumnal Equinox. (The Great American Music Hall gig was not open to the public, therefore it didn't count.) But no, they fooled us, December 20-21 at Winterland turned out to be the Garcia Band, Kingfish, and Keith and Donna with no set by the full band at all. After that things were pretty quiet until the April 1976 Dead Heads mailing which announced the band's forthcoming return to performing, with details to be announced. The following month BAM's "Dead Ahead" column gave the tour dates on the East Coast for June, also stating that the Dead had no intention of going out without playing the Bay Area first, probably five nights at Winterland the first week of June.

On May 21st the Garcia Band played the Orpheum Theatre on Market Street in San Francisco. Before the show started this guy sitting in back of me said that he'd seen Phil that afternoon and asked him when the Dead would be playing San Francisco. "Tonight" was the only reply. Oh boy! Well, the Garcia Band played the hottest show I've ever seen them do but — no Grateful Dead.

Around the first of June a story started circulating that the Dead would play for free in Union Square. The afternoon of the 4th I even strolled by there — no concert. The weekend came and went with no word on anything. Tuesday I got a call from some friends who said they'd seen the Dead in Portland, Oregon on the 3rd and 4th and they weren't very good. (The tapes sure sound good to me!) They did provide me with songlists — Wow! Cosmic Charlie! Lazy Lightning! Mission In The Rain! Dancin' In The Streets! The Wheel! Amazing.

Well, since the Dead would play Boston the following night there was no chance of any local appearance until after the tour. Later in the month the Sunday Chronicle's "pink section" had an ad for the Dead at the Orpheum on July 12-14 and 16-18. My brother Greg and I decided to go to four shows apiece, between the two of us we'd hit the whole run. So, the next day I went to Ticketron early and got all the tickets I wanted, including second row seats right in front of Jerry for the 13th and 17th. Going by yourself can have its advantages.

The tour came and went, all I heard was that they were "still warming up" and that St. Stephen was played twice in New York. There was apparently also a rumor of a free concert in Golden Gate Park on the fourth of July which I didn't hear. So, the morning of the 13th I anxiously awaited my brother's report of the first night. He raved on and on about it, particularly Help on the Way. He also told me of the little ceremony right before Music Never Stopped. I went to the Orpheum full of anticipation, I settled into my wonderful seat; shortly the band came out blazing! Half Step opened, followed by a HOT Big River. A reworked version of Peggy-O came next, the guy sitting next to me had never heard the song. A little girl standing by the stage kept calling out for Mission in the Rain. My second Cassidy came next, then a long, involved Crazy Fingers. The song contained the same Spanish jam it does now but it was much longer. Phil seemed to take charge at this point, I heard hints of The Other One, but they soon veered into Let It Grow, the first time I saw them do it by itself. Halfway through the song Billy and Mickey did a drum duet followed by a short space, back into Let It Grow into a roaring Might as Well to finish the set.

During the break I ran into my friend James from Athenian School, where I was doing some work at the time. I should mention the fact that while the band was playing people sat in their seats for the most part, affording me a clear view of the stage, something that would never happen today. The second set opened with a lively, bouncing Music Never Stopped followed by Must Have Been the Roses, which hadn't become my unfavorite song of all time yet. Then came "the new song" — If I Had My Way as we called it then. Jerry was spitting out fast flurries of notes. Then, wow, what this? HIGH TIME! Totally unexpected! I wasn't prepared for the instrumental break coming at the beginning of the song, either. An onstage huddle followed, signalling jam time. Jerry strode out by his mike grinning ear to ear, then I heard the first notes of St. Stephen! The crowd reaction was amazing! I thought, "what's coming next? This could go into anything!" In the middle of the song they switched to a Bo Diddley beat and jammed at length. I wondered if it might be Don't Let Go, since Jerry had done it at the Orpheum in May, Well, it soon became Not Fade Away, a slower version than what I was used to. After NFA they went back into Stephen then into a Sugar Magnolia> Stella Blue sandwich. For the encore I had my first exposure to the disco "Dancin' in the Streets" which I absolutely loved, especially the Phil-led dissonant jam towards the end. The Dead can take any form of music and make it their own.

After the show I stayed with my friend Gary Ross. He had a room at the Temple Hotel downtown in the shadow of the Bank of America building at the time. After a day wandering around San Francisco I headed back to the Orpheum. My seat was back under the balcony this time but — surprise — my friend Carl was sitting right next to me! The first set was structured somewhat more normally than the preceding night — up to a point. Promised Land started it off, followed by Sugaree, then came my first Dead rendition of Minglewood (Kingfish had been playing it in '75). Scarlet was next, then more normal short first set songs until Playing in the Band. The vocals let off and the jam started, Jerry's licks sounded rather ominous. My friend Ann had been sitting with me, I was wondering where she was. Billy and Mickey did another duet, then came the intro into my first Wheel, very different from the album version, leading into some deep, deep space, the heaviest space I'd ever heard in a first set. They soon brought it back to Playin', Bobby made the break announcement and the entire crowd gave the band a standing ovation! This was one run of shows where people really listened.

Wow! First set space jams! What are they going to pull out next! Who would have expected the second set to open with Brown-Eyed Women? I sure didn't. After another Samson came my first "new" Friend of the Devil. Another onstage huddle and they played Let It Grow again, with no drums in the middle. That led into a very fast Eyes. After the vocals they played around with the old chord changes a bit before dissolving into a short, bubbly space. Wharf Rat came out of that, this was all like seeing the band for the first time again, the song placement was completely different, the general sound of the band was not like it was before the layoff. Having Mickey back in the band made everything more rhythmic.

After the Wharf Rat came the return of The Other One. Only the first verse was sung, after which Phil took a solo that led neatly into — The Music Never Stopped! What a way to close a second set! The encore was a rip-roaring Johnny B. Goode, after which I stayed at Gary's place again.

The morning of the 17th I again waited for my brother's description of last night's show. I missed Cosmic Charlie! Damn! Oh well, for the 17th I had the same killer seat as the 13th. Since this show is already being reviewed in these pages I'll just mention a couple of things; one, that after Eyes Keith was playing the basic theme of the old Eyes jam, Jerry soon joining in. Also, after the first encore everyone screamed loudly for about ten minutes before the band came out again. The audience didn't stop, so Phil took Bob's mike and said "We'll play when we're ready!" Then — "If you'd all shut up we could tune." Bobby pointed at him and said, "Mr. nice guy." A long Not Fade Away ended the night. Five down, one to go.

My brother and I spent a relaxing overcast day before hitchhiking back to San Francisco. I sat back under the balcony again, the band opened with Half Step again and played a very fine first set, which was not as energetic as the other shows, but listening to the tape you can hear the subtleties. Jerry's playing was more distinct this night than the others. (There were times on the 13th and 17th where I was sitting right in front of him but could barely hear him.) The first set is also notable for the return of Loser.

After the audience celebration to mark the beginning of the second set the band seemed a little taken aback and launched into a slightly off-kilter Might as Well. (On the radio tape before the lights came up there's some interesting onstage conversation. Jerry — "A quarter? Fifty cents?" What?) ANOTHER Samson was next. (At one of the shows, I forget which one, people were calling out requests to which someone yelled "Do anything. Just don't do If I Had My Way!") Then came my first ever Candyman, then jam time. Lazy Lightnin'> Supplication> Let It Grow> Drums> Let It Grow> Space> Other One> St. Stephen> NFA> St. Stephen> The Wheel> Other One> Stella Blue. Whew! That was not easy to keep track of, believe me! After the first verse of the Other One the band got quiet, Phil played the intro to Stella Blue over and over, then right on top of it Jerry played the intro to Stephen, neat as you please. After Sugar Mag came a Johnny B. Goode encore, and the 1976 Orpheum run was over. Welcome back, Grateful Dead!

07-17-76 Orpheum - Rob Bertrando

By Saturday night, the fifth in this series of six concerts, much of the crowd had already been treated to some amazing sights and sounds, but to my mind the best was to arrive on this night. The first set seemed fairly routine until Garcia started to burn during Sugaree, as far as I know the first time it ever took off quite like this (although since then that has almost become the norm). Johnny B. Goode to close the set was truly a shocker and turned out to be a portent.

As the band came out for the second set and started Samson, Donna was nowhere to be seen (or heard!). A beautiful Comes A Time with only Garcia singing segued into a fantastic jazzy jam, which after several minutes moved into a kind of Other One space. After the drums a real Other One hit, moving into a smooth Eyes Of The World. This was followed by another (!) jam with hints of Going Down The Road beginning to work its way in, when out of the blue Garcia cues The Other One with a searing guitar. After a brief verse, the rest of the jam stayed hot to the end. A second encore of Not Fade Away was a great and unexpected treat!

07-18-76 Orpheum - Bernie Bildman

Bill Graham hands out these weird masks, which we all put on at the break. Then the second set starts, and the lights go on with everyone masked and screaming at the Dead... pretty funny!

10-09, 10-76 Oakland Stadium - Mike Dolgushkin

First off, let me clarify a common misconception that's appeared in several sources. At least two books state that the Dead opened the first day and closed the second. WRONG. They opened both shows. I went to the Saturday show with both brothers, it felt good to see the Dead at 11 in the morning as the sun began breaking through the clouds. There were problems with sufficient amplification until Minglewood, from then on it was full steam all the way. Scarlet, Lazy Lightnin'> Supplication, Sugaree: lots and lots if impressive jamming. The second set was all that the song list implies, finely crafted with beautiful transitions. Reportedly the Dead thought this the weaker of the two shows, I don't think that's a fair assessment.

Sunday I went to the show with my buddy Carl and his friend Sphinx. (I don't remember his real name.) Carl had taped Saturday's show using a small, portable cassette recorder, he planned on doing the same that day. As it happened, once we got inside we found ourselves next to a taper from Florida who was recording on a Sony 153 with his mics up on a short pole. Not too obvious. This taper had seen the entire tour, he told us which songs had been broken out. (Saturday's show had been a repeat of the Orpheum.)

The first set was good, it included a few songs that weren't played at the Orpheum. During the middle of Dancin' in the Streets Jerry went up to Bob to suggest going into Wharf Rat. Bob agreed and kept playing, a few minutes later Jerry went back to Bob, pointed at Phil and said, "Well, tell him." During the break a friend of the taper from Florida arrived with a huge wooden cross saying "I want separation on this baby!" The cross was put up and the mics hung off the ends. BAD MOVE. During Brown Eyed Women a big, mean cop and three Coliseum goons showed up and started yelling at the taper from Florida. They hadn't noticed Carl yet, I tried to motion for him to put the recorder down slowly but I couldn't attract his attention without attracting theirs. Finally one of the goons saw what Carl was doing so he and the taper from Florida took a trip to the underside of the stage. Carl fortunately didn't bring his tape recorder along. Once he was under the stage he explained to them that he didn't like the Grateful Dead, he was merely listening to a tape of Pink Floyd until The Who came out. "Oh, yeah? This is a tape of Pink Floyd? Why don't you go get your tape machine and we'll listen to it." Not being a complete idiot Carl split and never went back.

The rest of the show was great but our incident with the authorities sort of put a damper on things. Plus we had to sit through The Who again. Sphinx was our ride home, he wanted to see The Who. He was hanging out elsewhere, so we couldn't talk him out of it.

10-14-76 & 10-15-76 Shrine - Rob Bertrando

These shows really closed out the "comeback" of 1976. The first night didn't really get going until the second-set jam, where we were treated to probably the best Dancin of the year, into a predictably good Wharf Rat, followed by a smooth (!) transition back into the most intense Dancin jam since 1970!

That basically set the scene for Friday night's blowout. Although again starting a little slowly, by Bertha the pace is picking up, and one of the best Sugarees brought down the house. The second set opened with a laidback Eyes, and after a couple of shorter songs the first He's Gone since '74 started the jam. This was followed by a truly intense Other One featuring some roaring bass riffs. By the closing Sugar Magnolia, the Shrine was shaking, the sound crew was dancing, and slapping hands, and it didn't seem that anyone noticed the lack of an encore.

12-31-76 Cow Palace - Mike Dolgushkin

My first New Year's show! Yeehah! Carl and I got there early, of course. Once inside we hit the floor and found out that the Sons of Champlin wouldn't be opening, we got a band called Soundhole instead. Soundhole's bass player was none other than Mario Cipollina, his brother John joined them during their set for some scorching guitar work. Santana followed with this usual high energy set, then came a lengthy break before the Grateful Dead.

The Dead's last gig had been 2 1/2 months previous, reportedly their entire preparation for the New Year's show consisted of a fifteen minute soundcheck. The first set started off a little slow and ragged but soon kicked into high gear. Deal was so hot I thought it would close the set but a breathtaking Playing in the Band came after, full of tempo shifts and space jams that hinted at the Slipknot to come. During the break I was warned not to do certain things as we were in a perilous position. Not being a New Year's veteran I didn't know what was meant by that until the twelve o'clock celebration began and this huge float appeared. In those days they didn't bother clearing a path ahead of time, they just shoved the float right through the crowd. It was up to us to get out of the way. I got picked up off my feet and had no control over where I was going. Not only did I get separated from my friends but I also got separated from the lady I'd been flirting with. The float reached the stage, I assume Uncle Bobo was up there somewhere but I couldn't really see. Then the float had to be sent back through the floor again. I could feel the panic coming through the crowd — "Oh, no, it's coming back!" Up, up and away. The second set was one long swirl.

To whoever's in charge of leaking tapes out of the vault: We NEED the second encore. Please.

12-31-76 Cow Palace - Ross Warner

This show is notable for many reasons. The first installment in what was to become the longest continual Grateful Dead tradition, the performance sparkles from start to end. With a juicy set list and untamed style that separates it from the rest of the preceding year, this FM recording is essential.

Uncle Bobo gets the introductions out of the way and the band launches into The Promised Land. This rendition is so lively that it's obvious that this show isn't to be taken lightly. Next up is a bouncy Bertha that didn't come around here any more in this comeback year. This one's jazzy, but has the inner rage missing from its 1974 counterparts. Mama Tried gives a down-home flavor to the proceedings, but it's really They Love Each Other that gets the blood flowing. The band really comes together during this number. Jerry's travels have a twinkle that warms the heart. Looks Like Rain and Deal are welcome additions, but its the set-closing Playin' In The Band that gives this set its flavor. This version is one of the classics. The jam slows down to the point that it seems like it's going to stall, but then builds some sick momentum. It hauntingly marches along until it swells into chaotic climax that makes for an awesome conclusion. Get it.

Bill gets his wish as the new year is welcomed in with Sugar Magnolia. Even with its set-opening status, this rendition soars. The house ain't comin' down yet, but it hits heights that make it clear good things are to come. A trademark Eyes Of The World follows and this is another version that distinguishes itself from a lackluster year. Just when you think Jerry's backed himself into a corner, he plays his way right out of it. Don't underestimate this one, or it'll kill you. A beautiful Wharf Rat then makes its way out of the on-deck circle. Remorseful, angry and tender all at once.

Out of the ashes, a quick drum solo gives birth to Good Lovin'. The tune had been dusted off in Detroit a few weeks earlier for the first time since the "Farewell Show" of 10/20/74. However, whatever rust had accumulated was left in The Motor City because this version smoked. Jerry's guitar had that "sleepy electricity" that marked so many shows in the comeback year, but also possessed an unrestrained quality not seen since the band last played Winterland. Bobby and Donna growled with an energy that eventually turned New Year's into the Super Bowl of Dead shows. Then, in one of the all-time great transitions, they slipped into Samson. Don't wander off or you'll miss it. This Samson was definitely 1/1/77 and not 12/31/76. Jerry's on a pace that simply emasculates all those docile '76 versions. Even on tape... lord you KNOW they made a fine connection. Just by listening to the inspired vocals, you can see that it's true. When this monster combo finishes up, it's hard to imagine where they could go. But Jerry solves that problem by leading the band into one of the strongest "orphaned" renditions of Scarlet Begonias I have heard on tape. This version definitely has the stuff to stand on its own. The exploratory yet directed musings of The Fat Man's space, is reminiscent of 10/19/74. In the midnight hour, indeed.

Next up is an Around and Around that's a bit slower than the norm. However, the precise execution keeps the bottom dropping out. Jerry somehow keeps it together and his inspired plucking keeps pace with Bobby-O's soulful yelping. Help On The Way gives this set list the feel for something only a cover band could concoct. This version has the intergalactic quality of the Beacon Theatre version from earlier that June. Subsequently, the ensuing Slipknot! becomes more of an exercise in astronomical navigation. Michael Jordan wouldn't know a space jam if it fell on top of him. This one proves why Slipknot! is a jam so good they had to name it. Doug Irwin's "wolf" howls off as the drums sweep over the dusk.

The thunderous skins soon settle into a familiar beat and soon Not Fade Away unfolds. This is another one that gets much more preferential treatment than it received for much of the year. Señor Garcia's guitar work bubbles that makes it hard to believe that it's almost two o'clock in the morning. But sense of time soon becomes an impossibility to discern as The Grateful Dead Orchestra unleashes one of the all-time great renditions of Morning Dew. Jerry's cries have a sweet twang that would evaporate in the years to come. This was only the third version since the 10/18/74 one that was featured in "The Grateful Dead Movie" and you'd better believe it was fresh. By the time the solo starts, it's evident they've nailed it to the wall. Out of the delicate strumming that begins the jam, Jerry unveils a masterpiece that rivals even the Cornell rendition. He escalates his playing to the point, you've got to wonder if he's ever comin' down. By the time he finally puts his exclamation point on this mammoth set, you're not sure he ever did.

The first encore is a One More Saturday Night which does a lot more than just remind all what day they've played into. This spirited anthem would have been a satisfying conclusion, but the band reveals one last surprise — a double shot second encore of Uncle John's Band-> And We Bid You Goodnight, both of which hadn't been heard from since the '74 shows at Winterland. The former is a marriage of tenderness and passion. Jerry, Bobby, and Donna all blend into one sweet siren leaves you smiling from ear to ear. The latter is unique for being the first version with accompanying instruments. Mickey and Billy give this one a backbone that just couldn't be derived from an accapela arrangement. Quite simply, the after dinner mint that serves as the perfect end to the best meal you can ever remember having.

03-18-77 Winterland - Rea Simpson & John Corley

This has to be one of our all-time favorite shows. The great jam in Half Step is the first sign that this is going to be a hot show. Jerry sings a soulful Sugaree; his voice still has it's youthful sweetness in '77. The jam just builds and builds with Keith pounding out triplets on the piano and Jerry reeling off note after note. Phil plays some very neat sounding slide-like bass runs on the intro to Scarlet Begonias. Now comes one of this show's high points; the first live performance of Fire on the Mountain. The segue from Scarlet is mesmerizing even for those of us who have heard this transition many times, so it certainly must have been for the audience that was hearing it for the first time. Donna adds a lot to this passage with her spacey ohs and ahs. Garcia has some trouble with the lyrics of the second verse, but his sense of humor is wonderful. As near as we can tell, he sings:

"Long distance runner with your foot out the door.
Caught in slow motion, fall to the floor.
The quicker you stop, you're ready to pour.
May be mistaken with the words once more.
The closer you get, the more it will take.
There's a thin line beyond which you really can't fake."

The second set includes fine versions of Brown-Eyed Women and Good Lovin. Estimated Prophet is punctuated by Keith's rhythm playing, which resembles an electric washboard. This sounds superb paired with Jerry's "underwater" lead guitar. But the certain highlight of this show is the Terrapin Station. It follows the basic frame work of the LP version, which was yet unreleased and is played to perfection. This is the only time they performed the Terrapin Transit and the instrumental introduction to the At A Siding portions of this song. It gives us a taste of what the album might have sounded like without all the orchestration that was added.

This great Terrapin fades into a drumming session. As the crowd really starts to cheer the drummers start pounding out the rhythm to Not Fade Away. They are soon joined by the two guitarists, then Phil and Keith for a nice long intro. The vocals are very slow and spooky. After the second verse there is a extended jam with some nice slide and searing guitar. The song ends with Donna singing the last chorus very quietly while the band starts into St. Stephen. Bob sings like a madman and Jerry plays some hot Chuck Berry licks on a very good Around & Around. The first part is nice and slow, but then they kick into overdrive and finish up at a furious pace. This one ends with Keith playing boogie woogie on the piano and the band crashing into a throbbing, bluesy conclusion in the grand tradition of The Who.

03-18-77 Winterland - John W. Scott

This is an interesting show with a number of early versions of various songs. The lyrics for Estimated Prophet are slightly different from those that they finally settle on. Following a surprisingly smooth Terrapin is the only live version of Alhambra, making this the closest rendition to that on the album. It is well worth having for both historical and aesthetic reasons.

The Not Fade Away starts out normally, but towards the end the jamming strays from the norm into new territory, then intensifies and we find ourselves in a fiery Caution-style jam. Not Fade Away finishes and then reverses custom by preceding St. Stephen. When a competent St. Stephen is done there is nowhere to go but... Around And Around? An Uncle John's Band encore is a fine cap to a great evening of music.

These shows were my first attempt at seeing an entire Winterland run. Originally only two shows were scheduled but a third night was added about a week ahead of time. And, what a run! The first night has attained legendary status and the other two are no slouches either.

We already have two good reviews of the 18th, so I'll just say a couple of things about it. In regards to Mississippi Half Step and St. Stephen being somewhat different than normal, this is because the boys forgot how they went and fucked them up royally. Remember Jerry's interview in Golden Road where he refers to St. Stephen as their "musical cop?" This is a good example of what he meant — the song has to be done exactly a certain way or else it falls apart completely. That's why they played it again on the 20th, they didn't get it right the first night. Another thing I remember is the guy behind me who laughed his head off during Terrapin.

Saturday's show started with one of the best first sets of all time. The Dead was obviously in a relaxed groove, they let the songs flow right out. Bertha, Loser and Looks Like Rain were all outstanding renditions (as was Ship of Fools the night before) but the set closing jam was not to be believed: Terrapin> Playin'> Samson> Playin'! The level of improvisation far surpassed what one normally expects in a first set, even back then. Maybe that's why the second set was a tad disappointing. Five songs strung together. Well played, but short.

March 20th gets my vote as one of the top five underrated shows in the history of the Dead. All the songs in the first set were played with a tight precision. When it came time for the first set to end and Scarlet Begonias began the Dead decided not to do Fire on the Mountain again and led Scarlet into a maniac jam of Caution-like intensity. If they did Scarlet Begonias like that now I wouldn't care if it went into Fire on the Mountain or not. It's amazing — one of the most fiery jams they've ever played and few people know about it.

The second set was as good. Row Jimmy was done with a smooth tempo rather than its current choppy one, the song is much more effective that way. Jerry dispenses with the slide for the most part and played straight melodic lines instead making for a beautiful and unique rendition. The Promised Land that followed was also unusual, it's one song that could benefit today from a second set spot. St. Stephen signaled the beginning of the jam. Unlike its predecessor two nights earlier this version wailed, the jam in the middle went on practically forever. Where's this going, Not Fade Away? Or somewhere else? We couldn't tell. Forget 5/8/77, THIS is the best Stephen ever! Then — "What would be the answer to the answer man" was followed immediately be a familiar bass run and we found ourselves in The Other One. A searing, scorching performance, Jerry stood absolutely still watching Bob and Phil with a big grin on his face, his fingers doing all the work. A pretty space jam ensued before slipping into Stella Blue. Getting Terrapin for the second encore was perfect, anything less would not have been a fitting cap to this historic run of shows. We melted off into the San Francisco night and visited various houses. Sleep? After that? No way!

05-04-77 Palladium, New York - Gary Ross

This show is worth mentioning for a tremendous, muscular version of Estimated Prophet that will crash through the roof of your skull like a runaway 747.

05-07-77 Boston Garden - Andrew Morcomb

In what may go down as the strongest Dead stand in history, this show has been unfairly overshadowed by the great shows which followed — Cornell and Buffalo. This prejudice is no doubt the result of this show not featuring the powerhouse lineups which would follow in the next two nights; e.g., Cornell's Scarlet> Fire and N. F. A.> St. Stephen> Dew combo. While not discounting the power of the Cornell and Buffalo shows, I will say that the Boston show clearly stands above the Buffalo outing — nearly equaling the musical brilliance of Cornell. Both sets are classic.

The first set opens with a fired-up Bertha. The band is joyous, with Jerry and Donna breaking out in laughing amusement after a slight lyric miscue. Wouldn't it be nice to see the band always having this much fun on stage? After a strong Cassidy, they move into a set closer and opener — a tasty Deal, Jack Straw combo. And then the set really takes off. After a flawless Peggy-o, Minglewood, the band breaks into a beautiful Half Step> Big River couplet. New ground is explored in both pieces. This version of Half Step, while not as long as 9/3/77, is better played and arranged; the principal jam is positioned before the "Across the Rio..." verse, and is highlighted by some of Jerry's most fruitful, cascading melodies. The musical interchange between Jerry and Phil is almost unconscious; their phrasing feeds into each other's as if both instruments were being played by the same mind. Bobby counters the Half Step with an up-tempo Big River, and is truly one of the better versions played. Following, again, a very strong Tennessee Jed, Bobby then tops off this amazing set with the best Music ever played. It carries one to adrenaline peaks never before reached with this song. (And is superior to the much-praised 9/3/77 version.)

The only complaint one can lodge against the second set is that it's too short. It begins with a rare Terrapin opener; the song is still a bit immature, having only been debuted three months back. Samson, Friend of the Devil follow and are both strong '77 versions. The oft' played Estimated> Eyes combination comes next. Phil is his usual omnipresent self during the Eyes tour, really commanding a close-knit but skillfully played version. As in the first set, the second half of Set II is really where the set takes off. Coming out of the Drumz we get the finest Wheel to come along since its debut. This version stands on its own, rather than functioning as a short bridge to other song choices as is so often the case these days. Wheel ends up in a short but sufficiently cosmic Space, which winds into Wharf Rat. This is to my knowledge the best Wharf Rat ever played, period, with two fully explored jams. Bobby closes out the second set with an obvious pick, Around, which is both long and very potent. U.S. Blues encored. It is a testament to the quality of the Dead's '77 performances that this classic show could actually be topped the very next night!

05-08-77 Cornell University - John W. Scott

This show is overrated — though that isn't saying much. If one were to look at the Feedback results, this would appear to be far and away the single best Grateful Dead concert anywhere, any time. Well, it isn't, but it puts on a pretty good imitation. It is certainly one of the most important tapes to come out of the infamous foot locker. This soundboard is so beautiful, crisp, and well mixed with lots of full bass, that it is worth serious effort to obtain. While the unparalleled popularity of the song versions is probably in part due to the appearance of this soundboard in 1987, this concert, at any sound quality, still stands as a crucial tape in anyone's collection.

The first set is long, comfortably filling a 90-minute cassette. Each song is solid, with a couple that are truly exceptional. Somewhere between Lazy Lightning and Supplication the jam finds its groove and plays out beautifully as it wanders into an intense Supplication. Brown-Eyed Women is very strong, with aggressive leads from Jerry. Row Jimmy is slow and sweet, but equally heartfelt. The first set is crowned by an excellent, long Dancin.

The second set starts with arguably the finest "Take A Step Back" ever done. Then the Dead get down to business. Phil is strong throughout Scarlet, transforming the song from a good version, to a very good one; this song sparkles on the board tape. The transition into Fire is beautiful, and Fire itself is, of course, long and hot.

It is the flip side of the second set where the sparks really fly. St. Stephen is good, but Not Fade Away is better — one of those determined versions with long expressive leads where one actually forgets that there are lyrics. Not Fade Away even has a tasty bass feature before the band tumbles back into St. Stephen. Morning Dew is a religious experience — certainly one of the finest moments in Grateful Dead history. It starts out soft and sweet; Jerry's vocals are beautifully tender. The momentum is built slowly and carefully. The pinnacle they build from this foundation is truly breathtaking. Get it.

05-19-77 Fox Theater, Atlanta - Tom Van Sant

This second set contains the prototypical linking of the songs Playin'> Uncle John's Band> The Wheel> China Doll> Playin' Reprise. More than just a fine performance came to light at this show, because these songs have been occurring in pairs and groups ever since.

Though this exact sequence was never repeated, these songs have been linked often in the years since. Playin> China Doll was common in the 80's, and Playin> Uncle John's (or "Playin in the John") has become a standard pairing in the 90s. In fact, 59 of the 102 times Uncle John's was played after this show, it preceded or followed another song from the cycle. The percentage is even higher for China Doll: 38 of 55 (excluding acoustic sets).

Statistics aside, there is something mysterious and otherworldly about this song cycle. Perhaps it has to do with the vision of Robert Hunter, who wrote all the lyrics to each of these songs. The journey begins normally enough, "Playing in the band, daybreak on the land..." but soon the structure dissolves, the space jam begins, and we arrive at a song evoking images of growth and celebration (Uncle John's), one symbolizing maturity and acceptance (The Wheel), and one describing decay and death (China Doll), making the cycle a microcosm of the life cycle itself. In the aftermath the formless space jam returns, and eventually were back to reality, the mundane fact that it's just a bunch of singers and musicians Playing in the Band. But, as we all know, it's more.

05-22-77 Pembroke Pines - Peter Lavezzoli

This show was released as Dick's Picks Volume 3 just months after Garcia's death in 1995. Jerry could not have asked for a finer memorial. This classic May 1977 performance shows Jerry in the best possible light, musically and especially vocally. His voice has never sounded sweeter, and his song selection is all that one could hope for. This is the only Dead show (once the material became divided equally between Jerry and Bobby) where Garcia performs FOUR songs in a row. And what songs they are: Eyes>Wharf Rat>Terrapin>Morning Dew! This is one of Garcia's defining moments, resulting in one of the finest post-retirement GD shows.

The first set opens with triumphant versions of Music Never Stopped and Sugaree, both songs stretched beyond their normal boundaries for the time, and played with an unusual amount of inspiration and precision. Sugaree gives an early indication of where Garcia is headed this night, as he elevates this rendition to dizzying peaks that surpass even the previous version from 5-19. His voice is soulful and expressive, his playing covers the full dynamic range from delicate to explosive. The remainder of the first set benefits from this strong beginning. Every song is played and sung with clarity and energy. Peggy-O is another mid-set highlight, Garcia's solo being especially poignant. El Paso, Minglewood, and FOTD are all graceful and tight. Lazy Lightning>Supplication is another highlight where the band gets to stretch out into some jazz-flavored jamming similar to Playing in the Band. The complex rhythms of the song are negotiated with perfection. Ramble On Rose is another showcase for Garcia's wit and soulfulness. The set ends with one of the definitive "disco" versions of Dancin. Even the dissonant chord changes at the end of the jam are executed effortlessly.

Set two opens with what may be the greatest Help> Slip> Franklin's. In a word, it is perfect. Help on the Way is flawless vocally and instrumentally, and the Slipknot jam hangs together so well, it sounds as if it was composed on paper. Every note from the different players blends together so well, truly a case of musical telepathy. Skeptics need only compare the flow of this version with others from the time, like 5-9-77. This is clearly superior. Franklin's is as joyful here as the Slipknot was dark and brooding. The contrast is brought out very nicely. If you listen carefully towards the end, you will hear Keith playing the piano riff that would be heard years later on Foolish Heart! This H>S>F has stayed with me over the years more than any other version.

The set continues with flawless renditions of Samson, BE Women, Good Lovin, and what may be the definitive Sunrise. I've never heard Donna or the band perform this piece better. Then comes the jam that seals this show's unique fate forever. Estimated>Eyes is everything we look for in this pairing: well developed jams from Estimated, with a smooth and barely noticeable transition into an equally well-developed Eyes. Garcia brings the jam out of Eyes down to almost nothing, and the band drops out and leaves him playing alone. For a couple of minutes, we are treated to a lone Garcia ruminating through some achingly beautiful space themes that almost sound like Dark Star at points. Eventually when he has arrived at the appropriate threshold, he brings in Wharf Rat with the band coming in right behind him. Jerry invests himself fully in this Wharf Rat, and the listener gets the feeling that a story is being told. As Wharf Rat drifts outward, we can hear Garcia softly bringing in the riff that comes midway through Terrapin.

Within seconds the band picks up on the riff, and what we are given is the one and only performance of Terrapin without Lady With a Fan, coming in with "Inspiration" instead! This brief cameo of Terrapin builds to an explosive peak before a perfect segue into Morning Dew that must be heard to be believed. Phil and Jerry hit the transition together at exactly the right moment. This Morning Dew, fueled by the power and uniqueness of what came before it, is the finest Dew of all time. Once again, one need only compare this version back to back with the revered Cornell version, and one will realize what a shrewd choice Dick Latvala made when this show was picked for release. This Dew reaches down to those fragile silences, and builds to those shattering explosions, like no other version. One indication of this is the intense "fanning" Garcia often does at the end of this song. Here he goes through FOUR full rounds of "fanning" before he is ready to finish. The listener is stunned at this point. We have just heard the best of Jerry Garcia. Sugar Magnolia is the wonderful icing on the cake for an encore. This show is certainly among the top five of all time.

06-04-77 L.A. Forum - Simon Friedman

I've had this tape for eight years, but for some reason I've seen it on very few lists, and haven't encountered the first set at all. The second set is definitely worth getting, if you can find a decent copy, for the closing string of tunes. The medley is a prime example of the band's ability to effortlessly and logically transition between disparate musical settings. The initial Playin jam, although short, is quite spacey and mysterious. A midtempo Franklin's emerges from the darkness like the sun after the rain. The break in the darkness is temporary, however, as the band slips from Franklin's back into the Playin space, and then into a gorgeous China Doll. I don't know how they manage to pull it off, but the band flows, without a hitch, from China Doll into possibly the fastest Not Fade Away ever. During the jam Jerry plays a repeated "D" around which the rest of the band coalesces, to create yet another miraculous transition, back into the Playin jam. As in other fine versions from the 70s, the Dead take their time, fooling around with variations of the chords and melody before finally getting to an explosive Playin reprise.

06-09-77 Winterland - John J. Wood

Back in 1989, these gorgeous Betty Cantor soundboards sprang into the Dead tape-trading market. Boasting a fidelity rich in sonic clarity, I wished I had a CD processor, so I could have enshrined some personal copies. Better yet, the tapes reveal another gem of a show, with a few unusual song combinations graced with the quality of play that has made 1977 a consistent favorite year among Deadheads.

It is not often that the pairing of Half Step and Jack Straw open a Dead show in any year, yet both complement each other with a natural western flavor. The remainder of the set is highlighted by a soothing Looks Like Rain and the laid-back bounce of The Music Never Stopped.

While lyrically flubbed in spots, the Help> Slip> Franklin's trilogy slips, slides, and oozes its share of experimental valleys. At 25 minutes in length, each instrumental possibility permutates itself, and Franklin's literally rambles like an all-night conversation with a close group of friends.

Most notable is the continuing run of St. Stephen (reprise)> Terrapin> Sugar Magnolia. After St. Stephen's final chorus, Jerry strums the opening chords to Terrapin, perfectly on cue. Because it was still "a new song" in those days, Terrapin could be found literally anywhere in any given evening — show opener, encore, or anyplace in the second set. In the next-to-last song slot, Terrapin works wonders, with some '77-era instrumental flavors that places its signature on another fascinating journey.

Sadly, Sugar Magnolia has one nasty cut in the middle, but that is still a minor gripe that is easily offset by the tape's detailed audio dynamics. Here's hoping Dan Healy includes a crisp 1977 show in his From The Vault series very soon.

09-03-77 Englishtown Raceway - Tom Van Sant

Tapes of the radio broadcast of this show are among the most common from the great year of 1977. There are both high and low points (a muffed He's Gone, for one), but one real peak: Garcia's two gorgeous summery solos in Eyes of the World, where shimmering triads intertwine with lilting runs to transform a grungy suburban lot into a country field of wildflowers for a few heavenly moments.

09-03-77 Englishtown - Ken Kaufman

In the Summer of 1977, I was a young and budding Deadhead, just licensed to drive, spending much of the summer cruising around and altering my consciousness. Scarce months before, I had attended my first show.

I knew more of the Dead's songs by this point (though not all of them — during the Englishtown show when my friend Scott identified the song that had just started as Looks Like Rain, I lifted my gaze, inspected the clouds and concurred), and was seriously wearing a groove in more than one Dead album. So when the man on the radio announced a Dead show with the New Riders and the Marshall Tucker Band at a place Somewhere In New Jersey that I only knew of due to the countless drag racing ads they inundated the local media with, well, I was quite interested in going.

I don't know if I needed or actually got permission from my mother to go to this thing, but one way or another, I got a ticket — general admission of all things — and eventually so did Scott. Scott is the fellow who has the distinction of turning me on to the Dead, and he even got a ticket for, and made arrangements with, Adam, a schoolmate of his from South Orange, New Jersey, so we wouldn't have quite so far to schlep on the day of the show.

My mom let me take her '73 Duster, a tank compared to my regular wheels, a piece-of-crap Vega that within a month would start eating a can of oil a day, and several days later would die an ignominious death on Interstate 95. This provided for smooth travel. We were so sophisticated, we even brought a little portable tape recorder with a lousy copy of the Passaic show that was on the radio a few months before and tapes of a few of our favorite Dead albums or sides.

The show was set to start at 1:30. We hit the road pretty early in the morning. This was a good thing, for there was just one little road running the last five miles into the concert area. We couldn't go faster than an idle anyway (glad I was driving that automatic!) due to the throngs who were walking down the middle of the street toward Raceway Park. Eventually, we and countless others simply pulled off the side of the road, parked, and joined the parade.

We went in the gates, getting us onto a large field ringed by trailers and dotted by perhaps a dozen speaker towers. We managed to get up rather close, maybe within a hundred yards of the stage. All three of us were amazed by the scene. We were literally in the middle of a sea of heads stretching off a quarter mile in each direction. I was getting a glimmer of an idea what Woodstock must have been like.

The New Riders came on first, and they were a pleasure to listen to. My strongest memory of their performance is their introduction of Panama Red late in the set. Something along the lines of "This song's about someone who's coming up behind you," and thousands upon thousands looked over their shoulders in unison.

Next up were Marshall Tucker, hot off a big hit album, who also pleased the crowd with their countrified sound. As a matter of fact, for about a sixth of the 150,000 in attendance, they were the main feature. A good number left the show before the Dead ever took the stage.

During the long break between Marshall Tucker and the Grateful Dead, we were treated to the Ultimate Rock MegaFestival Cliche — a woman giving birth at the show. Lots of announcements from the stage, asking folks around her to give her room, and they brought in a medical helicopter. Later on in the evening, we would hear that mother and baby were doing fine.

Given the enormity of the day, the Dead show was almost an anticlimax. They did not perform excptionally for the most part, especially by 1977 standards. Donna was audibly sick and her singing suffered as a result. However, the show did have quite a few high points — a nicely drawn out Mississippi Half Step in the first set, the Bertha/Good Lovin' (my favorite of the Keith & Donna era) and Estimated/Eyes in the second set.

But the highlight of the show had to have been the three song medley that made up the last 40 or so minutes of the set. It started with a long, smooth, mellow He's Gone that led into a jam that gradually picked up the pace, ultimately giving birth to a smoking Not Fade Away. Great jams throughout the song, but it will be remembered best for the end of the first verse when Donna put together her last ounces of energy and sent forth her most famous scream. Primal, out of tune, intense.

After NFA there was a momentary pause, then a fanfare on drums, then Truckin! No big deal nowadays, but this was the first time they had played it since the hiatus. Not that I knew that at the time (I barely had an inkling of the hiatus itself), but there was excitement in the air and the crowd rocked. A short peaking jam at the end, and they brought the set to a close. Oh yeah, they encored with Terrapin.

On our way out, we encountered a Deadhead in search of a ride to Paramus. Given the state we were in, we had no objection to going an extra 20 miles up the Parkway. He quickly fell asleep in the back seat. Somewhere along the highway he woke up. At this point, that little tape player of ours was belting out What's Become of the Baby. Our poor passenger seemed about to freak out when the knowledge hit him. He sighed, "Oh, Aoxomoxoa," and was all right from there on in.

When we got to Adam's house, we found out that the show had made a big splash in the local media, complete with helicoptor shots on the evening news. His mother (and later mine) said that she didn't realize it would be so big.

Big in more than one way. For at least one teenager, the show was one of several major rites of passage he would experience during that period. There was a certain new-found independence, an unshackling with respect to taking long journeys, that was effected on that day. For years afterwards, articles and photos from the Post and Daily News (the Times was above printing anything more than a brief article) proudly sat upon the wall of my bedroom. The show also cemented my fate as a Deadhead who would go on to attend over 50 subsequent shows and do more than his share in keeping Maxell financially afloat.

09-03-77 Englishtown - Ross Warner

Oh, Englishtown, how do I love thee? Let me count the ways... We all have that favorite tape. We claim to friends that we can only narrow our preferences down to a handful, but we know there's only one. I'm talking about the one tape you can put in the deck and each time its fresh. I'm talking about the tape that after each listening, you discover something new and poignant. It's like watching "The Godfather," Parts I and II. For me, that tape is Englishtown, NJ, September 3, 1977.

When I think about it, it's kind of an odd selection for me. Unlike most Heads, I'm not that high on '77 tapes. Let me clarify that, I'm not that high on the May/June '77 tapes that constantly occupy the upper echelon of DeadBase reader's polls. Maybe it's the consistency of the performances, maybe it's the pristine sound of the mixes, but much of those tapes seem sterile to me. Don't get me wrong, I think the Cornell Morning Dew and the Buffalo Help On The Way are good as they get. But pop in some of those November shows or the Winterland from December 29th. Now those shows... they're raw. They're untamed. The mixes are also such that the instruments are popping right out of your speakers as opposed to the Betty Boards from earlier in the year where there's a lot of air between the sound.

And standing between those great, but innocuous, June Winterland shows and the raging Northwestern tour of September/October is the show from rrrrrrAACEWAY PARK! (If you grew up in the Metropolitan area, you'll remember that irritating radio commercial) In Jerilyn Lee Brandelius' Grateful Dead Family Album, she reveals that this show came right after Mickey's "accident" and an unclarified hospitalization for Donna Jean. Promoter John Scher had to put boxcars ("the Polish railroad") around the field for security. There are some nice pictures included as well. It must have been pretty hot since Bobby, donning his tye-dye tank top, looks like he's suffering from heat exhaustion à la Veneta '72.

The first set begins with Scher introducing the band, who proceed to launch into The Promised Land. Many tapes have this part omitted. It's a strong version, but gives no indication of what is to come. Most copies of the WNEW broadcast (which has been since re-aired a few times) start with the ensuing They Love Each Other. The tape in circulation reveals a nice looseness among the band members which isn't usually found around this time. The rolls of the drummers come tumbling out of the speakers. Keith adds some very nice touches on the baby grand. In fact, this much activity for the slumbering Godchaux is almost Hornsbyesque. And of course, Jerry's geetar is EN FUEGO. Bobby backs up the crowd and then offers up a fiery Me & My Uncle.

Not to be outdone, Jerry counters with what would become the set's crowning achievement, a Mississippi Half Step of mammoth proportions. My friend Mike gives the nod to the 5/7/77 and some like the 11/6/77, but this remains my all-time favorite rendition. The first jam has so many peaks and valleys is nearly impossible to know when they're ready to stop. Somehow, the tape reveals that they're outside and fired up about it. Just when it seems like the "Rio Grand-eeo" part is imminent, Jerry launches into an intricate jam which build into a nice mini-crescendo. The parting jam is offered up with similar abandon. Whatever got into the band kept on keepin' on during Looks Like Rain, which is easily the best of the Godchaux era. Jerry lays some blistering licks on during the vocals, making for an absolutely scrumptious mixture. Peggy-O is another benchmark, right on par with the New Haven and Buffalo renditions. The Fat Man belts it out with all the conviction and desperation this one deserves. The jam is downright searing as well.

Minglewood Blues is a perfect vehicle to keep the vibe alive. Bobby sings it with authority and Jerry rips through the Jersey swamplands as The Wolf snarls and growls. Friend Of The Devil is sweet as molasses. The jam is beautifully developed and Keith's rich tinkling is complimented with some syrupy licks from Jer. The band concludes the set with the only appropriate solution — a raging Music Never Stopped. Like most FM broadcasts, you can hear the crowd reaction in an "audience" recording and then the board kicks in. For those few brief seconds, you really get a sense of what a party it must have been. Jerry winds the jam up into something fierce before the band retreats from the depleted crowd.

When they return to the stage, Phil thanks the crowd and tells them they're the best the band has seen in a LONG time. Since this was the only show of the summer, this was the only crowd they'd seen in a long time, but I can tell what he meant. The set-opening Bertha, caused my summer camp counselor and Jedi master, "Arby," to refer to the Dead as "America's greatest dance band." I normally dislike the '77 versions of Bertha, as the disco treatment drains the song of all the vitality it was born with. But from the second Keith's hands roll down the ivories, it's clear that this rendition joins the rest of this show on its own plane. Bertha has to move a little faster on this night and the results are spectacular. One of the early segues into Good Lovin' follows and also distinguishes itself from the usual '77 ilk. The antiseptic qualities found in those versions are nowhere to be found. The band gains a fluidity that would make Walt "Clyde" Frazier proud.

Phil then mumbles something about how the crowd needs to be all together so it can be beautiful. I have no idea what he's talking about, but the ensuing Loser is a true scorcher. Jerry is playing with a freedom that seems to stem directly from his chaotic surroundings. Donna overcomes whatever she was hospitalized for to chime in with some powerful vocals. Estimated Prophet is one of my all-time favorites. The boys crank out a real monster. Bobby belts it out convincingly and Jerry takes the parting jam into some unexpected crevices before MELTING into an Eyes Of The World that does for the second set what Half Step did for the first.

To say that this song is the show's lasting creation would be an understatement. As the cymbals delicately signal the transition, the band launches into the definitive rendition of the song. Like the show as a whole, this version distinguishes itself from the whole beloved year. It's a little faster than the '73/'74 versions, but not as quick as the versions the band would begin playing later that month. Before the first verse, Jerry launches into two jams that are pure ecstasy note for note. It joins the Dark Star from 2/13/70 in the "jams you know by heart" category. The rest of the song contains so many spine-tingling crescendos, it's almost impossible to describe in words. In this version, everything Jerry plays makes sense. This version is the ultimate exercise in RELEVANCE. Did I forget to mention I was listening to this tune when I lost my virginity?

The band beautifully winds down the song — one of the few versions that doesn't segue into another tune — and then leaves the stage for a few minutes. They return with a powerful Samson & Delilah. Next up is my favorite He's Gone. The review of this show that appeared in DeadBase IX referred to this version as "muffed." True, Jerry flubs a few of the lyrics. But that just adds to the impromptu magic of the show. What other version reaches such heights? The middle jam and the concluding segue are titanic. The boys are taking some big chances on this night and they're comin' up HUGE. Who cares if Jerry comes in late with a verse? Hell, I don't even usually LIKE He's Gone.

The band works itself into a real frenzy that makes the only transition in documented Grateful Dead history into Not Fade Away. This version outlasts Cornell, which I find a little dense, as my favorite. Jerry's searing licks keep the song's rockabilly roots at full-throttle for the duration. The first copy I had of this show, taped from a bootleg LP faded out at this point and ended with he pairing of the Swing Auditorium's Tennessee Jed and the Englishtown encore. Did I miss out for two years until I got the whole show! Bobby breaks out the bandleader's whistle and leads the boys into the first Truckin' since the Lindley Meadows show of '75. The crowd goes understandably nuts and the band plays it with a new vitality. At the end, they work up into a mammoth climax, `a la the Fillmore East '71 versions, that would reach an all-time high two months later in Binghamton. They leave the stage with the crowd wanting nothing more.

The Terrapin Station encore is a fitting conclusion, providing an eerie end to the proceedings. If the Truckin' was the exclamation point, then this Terrapin is the semi colon. Dick Latvala used the board recording of this song for Jerry's memorial in Golden Gate Park. He recently mentioned that the vault copy of this show blows the FM broadcast away. It's got my vote. When I look at the "Favorite Shows Attended" segment of DeadBase IX and see that this performance is described as being like "no other show," I'm not surprised in the slightest. My description of the tape in that same edition says the same thing. The Pacific Northwest tour that follows launches a period of raw creativity that lasts until the Eugene show the following spring and would resurface in Red Rocks and Winterland. My counselor was right. The Grateful Dead were simply America's greatest dance band. And on this night they proved it.

10-01, 02-77 Portland - John J. Wood

Yes, there are many '77 tapes that are widely available and widely seeked. Many know about the famed Cornell and Buffalo tapes, but when I want something nice to play on the road, I turn to tapes of this two-show run.

The first night's main highlight is the excellent Estimated> Eyes> Dancin In The Streets run. Although the playing of Jerry, Bob, and Phil is of very high calibre, it is The Vulcan and Billy who propel this, keeping some irresistible dance beats for well over 30 minutes. It is a great tape to play at a party where your guests are in the mood for dancing. The jamming in Dancin hits a particular groove where the ensemble can explore the late 70's Dancin theme, yet keep the hips shakin'.

Other highlights of the first night include a fine, retrospective Peggy-O (which is respectable, but THE version to get for '77 is the first set of New Haven, 05/05/77), and the first Black Peter since Winterland 10/19/74, where a fine return is made. Other versions of note are a powerfully-played Passenger (I'd like to see this return, just so the band "can play with raunch" again), and another silky Music Never Stopped. However, I wonder if there was an incident at this show, or if the band was dissatisfied with their performance (the tapes don't indicate either) as there was no encore.

The second show is notable for the return of Casey Jones (last played at Winterland 10/17/74) and Dupree's (last played at Flushing Meadow Park in New York City 7/11/69!!). The former contains a lengthy instrumental passage, primarily because Jerry forgets the "Trouble with you" hook. As a result, Jerry and Keith lead a guitar-and-piano tinged instrumental run, playing the melody of the bridge quite a few times. Eventually, Jerry starts the hook. Dupree's is rusty on the vocal side, but is well played (is it feasible to expect a "perfect" version when you haven't played it in 8 years?). Also of note here is a jammy, spirited Let It Grow (I have really been diving into '76 and '77 versions lately) and a strong Deal.

The second set is primarily standard in terms of '77 tapes. The one opinion I do hold is that although the playing of this year is superb, the song selection is rather repetitious. One look at the yearly sections in this book is adequate proof of that. Nonetheless, the playing is strong, most particularly the Wheel> Truckin'> Other One> Wharf Rat> Sugar Magnolia run. Jerry noodles and plays some magical runs, and the rhythm section excels through the Truckin'> Other One portion. The Wheel is blissfully played, with a nice long intro, and Sugar Magnolia rocks and closes the set beautifully.

The encore, a rocking Johnny B. Goode, closes the two-show run at Portland, and the band would travel the southwestern United States (where a portion of the Arizona State University show played four days later would make it to The King Biscuit Flower Hour). Still, the return of three Dead standards, and the overall playing in general, make these Betty Cantor soundboards well worth seeking.

10-14-77 Houston - Rob Bertrando

This is yet another show which is often overlooked due to poor tape quality. Certainly 1977 was one of the most consistently inspired periods in the Dead's career, and we get lots of that inspiration here. Even such "routine" tunes as Jack Straw and Mississippi Half-step have a fire and drive that is too often lacking now. The Music Never Stopped jams out very nicely in the bridge between sections.

The second set, though short, has outstanding versions of every song; Wharf Rat, in particular, stands out. The Brokedown encore was still new enough at the time to be very sweet, but the Playin reprise kicking strongly out of the closing chords has to be heard to be believed!

10-29-77 Dekalb - Simon Friedman

This show is a true classic, with quite a few unique musical moments. The first set is solid all the way, beginning with a Might as Well featuring Jerry whooping and hollering at the end, and ending with an expertly jammed Let it Grow. The songlist of the second set looks average, but the performance is superb. Bertha> Good Lovin and Friend Of The Devil provide for a smooth intro to the exploratory music to follow. The main part of Estimated sounds typical for the time, but the journey into Eyes is exquisite. Eyes Of The World is done in a slow, leisurely, yet very firm and at times explosive manner, a true standout among late 70s versions. The jamming after the last verse quickly resolves into a space that is, in a word, astonishing. Jerry, Bob, and Phil have quite a musical conversation, leading to an incredible climax where the guitars trill space chords above while Phil plays slow heavy chords below. While this type of space format has been common during the 80s, it was quite rare during the late 70s, which makes it all the more amazing.

There's no more perfect followup than a strong St. Stephen. After the final verse, the drummers play the Not Fade Away rhythm, a common gesture from this era. Instead of the band joining in for the tune at this point, Phil plays a fluent, flawlessly rhythmic solo very much in keeping with the tune, as the drummers provide sensitive yet explosive accompaniment. By some magic the threesome bring the music to a complete stop, at which point they resume Not Fade Away, now with the rest of the band. The remainder of the set is very well played, and there's even a short drum duet in the Sunshine Daydream break.

11-04-77 Colgate - Simon Friedman

The second set starts with Bob announcing that there are equipment problems, so Phil takes it upon himself to entertain the crowd by introducing the band as the Jones Gang. A solid Samson> Cold Rain opener is followed by a magical, spacey Playin In The Band, which gradually becomes more solid and then builds to a high climax that veritably explodes into Eyes Of The World that flies. Eyes glides smoothly into Estimated Prophet (in reverse of usual practice), which is notable in that Jerry's well-known opening melody is omitted. From here it's on to a one-verse-only but powerful Other One. A drum duet is followed by a rather lazy rendition of Iko Iko, a sweet Stella Blue, and ending with an extended version of the Playin reprise, which has echoes of the earlier Playin jam.

11-05-77 Rochester - Dark Star Moskowitz

November 5, 1977 was a night of quite a few memorable moments. It started with the line outside to get in. It was a general admission show and this was the craziest line I've ever been in. The building decided to wait until 7:15 PM to open the doors for an 8:00 start. And the line was getting out of control.

People were smashed up against the doors and the doors had to open outwards. Building officials went up on the overhang and tried telling everyone to move back. As the people up front tried to move back, the people in back kept pushing foward. I got sandwiched between people and my feet literally did not touch the ground for several minutes as I got pushed back and forth up and down the stairs. Finally, while being pushed foward, the guy in front of me got pushed through a glass window and I went flying through behind him. He got cut up and I miracously came through fine!!! I never got my ticket out of my wallet, not that I would have been able to get to my wallet.

The floor was so packed that the show started with a "take a step back" march with the drummers pounding out the Wheel. They decided to open with a smoking Minglewood Blues. During Half Step, Donna came out wearing a wig. Before Dire Wolf, Garcia gave a step back rap about how its hard for him to get off seeing smashed human bodies. Everything in the first set was played well with exceptional versions of Half Step and Jack Straw. The ending of Deal was extremely long.

As the second set started, Phil took control. As the band took the stage it started with a bass solo, and then Bob doing another "slow march for all you people who wanna take a step back, its march time." This sequed into a nice little jam which turned into one of the best Eyes ever performed! The Eyes was a perfect tempo and very dynamic. (To this day it is still my favorite Eyes.) Eyes flowed into another bass solo and into Samson. As the set progressed, He's Gone flowed into a nice little bass and drum jam (more Phil solos) and then into The Other One.

The Other One started off different than most, rather than the heavy bass line it started out soft and slowly built up with Garcia using many diffrent sounds and styles. The tradeoffs between Garcia & Lesh were amazing. The dynamics they used to build this up were out of this world. This is still the most powerful and amazing Other One I've ever seen, and ever done!

As they rolled out of this and into Black Peter, my friend was wearing a witch mask he found under his seat and smoking a corn cob pipe. The nose caught fire and started to melt and ooze. At that moment we renamed Black Peter "Slimy, Grimy." To this day, every time they play Black Peter, I still call it Slimy, Grimy. The set ended with a great Sugar Magnolia. They returned to do Saturday Night and you can hear Weir sing, "Oone more saturday night, crazy crazy now"! This was one crazy night!

12-29-77 Winterland - Michael Nash

The third of four shows at Winterland's year-end run, this evening was quite a memorable one, for myself and many folk I know. The concert fell in the midst of a little window of time during which I felt the band's playing was extraordinarily bold and spirited. The group had an incredible presence that run, with everyone on top of their game. From the opening notes of Jack Straw through the final crescendo of the second encore, Johnny B. Goode, the night's music had a sort of epic grandeur to it, seeming somehow larger than life, as though the work of titans.

Further, Winterland was as loud as I'd ever heard it, which just added to the show's sense of proportion. And to my pure delight, Garcia trotted out his old Irwin guitar, which had last seen onstage action in June of 1975. That axe had a certain tone I really loved — fat, round, sweet, highly emotive — and its presence in the mix was a major factor in the concert's sound. It may seem like a subtlety, but that concert played with another guitar just wouldn't have yielded the same show. Whatever magic was at work that night, it left the hall and its denizens charged from start to finish. And while no tape I've heard really captures that ineffable quality, certain flurries of electrity still shoot from my speakers and stand my hair on end when I drop this one in my deck. Playing it loud doesn't hurt much either.

After a lengthy tune-up and Weir's dry pronouncement that, "We're gonna try to get everything just exactly perfect... on account of our new name is going to be the Just Exactly Perfect Brothers Band," the group launched into a great version of Jack Straw, with a blistering second solo by Garcia, who was off joyously bending notes every which way from the start. He continued to do so in They Love Each Other, opening his solo turn with thick, rich bass notes and offering up at a moment's notice those inimitably odd twists and punctuations. It was wonderful stuff. Up next was a crisp and lyrical reading of Mama Tried, followed by Loser, Garcia's solo rife with chipped notes and deft use of sustained feedback. I recall the decibel level vividly, the sound filling every pore of the building and the crowd thoroughly taken by storm.

Looks Like Rain found Jerry playing lithe lines behind Bob and Donna's refrain, then anchoring on a phrase to counterpoint the vocals and building it incrementally toward the song's climax. Very tasteful. A round and rollicking version of Tennessee Jed bubbled along with its trademark idiosyncracies like a comic cartoon. Minglewood, the first set's highlight for me, was just searing, Garcia totally out on the edge with that spark of spontaneity and invention that makes his playing so remarkable at times. Blazing and incredibly thoughtful all at once. Sugaree's exagerrated choruses pushed the tune to the brink of self-parody. Finally, Promised Land closed the first set with a wall of vibrato and left the crowd humming with great expectations.

Bertha> Good Lovin got round two off to a lively start, Phil's bass propelling the band, animating the rhythm. Must Have Been The Roses preceded Donna's tune, Sunrise, where Garcia unleashed a veritable torrent of notes. If it had been great thus far, the evening truly took off for me after that. Playing In The Band was pure synergy. This version felt like some organic lifeform in constant flux — Phil dominating the mix, deep and resonant, Jerry weaving lyrical, evanescent lines throughout, Bob threading the two together with inspired voicings and filigrees, Billy and Mickey driving the great dance. "In concert" in the truest sense of the words. The music moved through strange and wonderful terrain, one moment blue and haunting, the next dark and dense, at points achingly beautiful, then mushrooming into some new mutation, finally resolving into a open space featuring Lesh and the drummers, Keith comping quietly on the keys, and Weir adding a wash while Garcia moved offstage and lingered in the wings.

As the music ebbed to a near standstill, Garcia (in a manner I recall being decidedly dramatic) stepped from the shadows and hit the opening riff of China Cat (the first version since October of 1974), whereupon the crowd erupted in a thunderous ovation. As Weir added his figure, the roar just grew more jubilant — one of those great occasions with everyone utterly caught up in the moment and attentive to all its implications. Garcia's solos crackled with huge notes that sung of big intent. The subsequent jam delivered and then some, cooking from note one, the guitarists riding some wild wave whose size seemed to swell in exponential leaps. The passage ultimately peaked with incredible energy, and as if it could no longer be sustained, dropped into the hook to begin I Know You Rider, where it suddenly sounded stuck, as though the band wanted to continue jamming but had overwhelmed itself in the very act. It was hard to explain, but the feeling was near-tragic, the music almost stopping before actually going into Rider and the vocals off to a sheepish beginning. You kinda had to be there, but it was painful, if only for a few moments.

The passion came back quickly though, and Rider ended with an authoritative coda played thrice through instrumentally, the only time I've heard that. The final line spiraled nicely down into the opening of China Doll, where Keith's harpsichord provided a surreal backdrop for Garcia's bittersweet lyrics and arching lines. You could have heard the proverbial pin drop in the place. The tune led back into Playing, then through a brief drum solo into a long and muscular version of Not Fade Away, which in turn gave way to a full reprise of Playing to end the set in a circle.

A rarely-heard and resounding take of Terrapin as an encore made a great night that much more special. The band drove it all home with a rousing Johnny B. Goode. All told, it was the kind of night these words can barely approximate and to which the excrutiating length of this "review" should bear ample witness.

As most people know, these shows smoked! They came after a couple of tours where the band brought back various songs that we hadn't heard here yet. Unfortunately they only did three of them — Dire Wolf, Me and My Uncle and Truckin'. San Francisco did not get Iko until 1980, or a Dupree's till '82. This started the oft-repeated notion that the Dead held back on cool material on the West Coast. But, was the band consciously not playing Iko Iko here? I doubt it. (Of course, WE got the China Cat!)

The 27th was maniacally intense, had a long first set, and a second set with a very unusual song sequence. After He's Gone Jerry signaled the band to stop. Weir shrugged his shoulders and looked around with a "beats me" expression. Apparently since Truckin' hadn't been done in these parts for two years Jerry wanted to start it off cold. As far as the 29th goes I can't add anything to the review we already have. It says it all. The 30th was the most laid-back show of the run but still had its moments.

The 31st, though, set a standard for the New Year's Eve intensity that they were not always able to match subsequently. The show was burning from start to finish. I didn't hear another Scarlet> Fire this hot until 1988. The jam between Truckin' and Wharf Rat was very unusual, and it was one of THOSE long Not Fade Away's out of drums.

Two of these nights I held down line duty. In those days you could get to Winterland at ten in the morning and there would be, at most, fifteen people in line. In the middle of the afternoon they would let us inside to use the bathroom. (This is how some people sneaked their decks in!) About four PM we would brace ourselves for the onslaught, people were very blatant about cutting in line. Not only that, there was a certain cowboy-hatted gentleman who liked to fling his frisbee an inch above our heads. Yes, you had to keep alert back then.

01-07-78 Golden Hall - John W. Scott

As Jerry had laryngitis, this was Bob's chance to really shine. He rose to the occasion with a very impressive performance. The second set begins with a hot Jack Straw, but the song that really shines is an outrageous Dancin featuring a jam in the middle that spanned almost eighteen minutes. This isn't quite the hottest, best-jammed version of Dancin, but, at twenty-three minutes, it just might be the longest.

01-07, 08-78 Golden Hall - Brian Smith

"Well, as you can probably tell, Jerry has a problem tonight. He'd tell you about it himself, but he can't 'cause he has laryngitis. Happens to the best of us, but anyway, here we go."

Under normal circumstances, I wouldn't want to write a review of a show that I didn't actually attend; there's something magical about being present at the moment of creation when the music is first born that just doesn't translate to tape. Given the abnormal circumstances, however, I just couldn't pass up the opportunity to talk about these tapes. Before I begin, I feel compelled to qualify what I'm about to say. Although I think highly of all the members of the grateful Dead, I've always had a special place in my heart for Weir; there's just something about his philosophy of misfit power that appeals to me and is part of what attracted me to the Dead in the first place. Now some of you may bridle at the thought of a show consisting entirely of Bobby tunes, but remember, the less Jerry sings, the more Jerry PLAYS!

Despite the unusual circumstances, the band throws caution to the wind and leaps headlong into a powerhouse version of Minglewood. From the outset, Phil, Mickey and Bill fall into a tight looping groove that beautifully frames the guitar and piano theatrics with power; Garcia, bless his little heart, plays like fireworks in the jam at the end. A brief pause, and the band soars into a tight and well-played Cassidy. Donna then takes control of the microphone and leads a lilting Sunrise complete with thundering tribal drum accompaniment! After a pause, the boys rip into a rocking Passenger with a meaty amount of Uncle Jer's tastier licks and a nice extended jamlet at the end. If you don't happen to be a big fan of cowboy songs, however, you're out of luck as Bobby pulls out all the standard fare over the course of two shows, starting with a Mexicali Blues> Me and My Uncle medley. Both were well played, but with no real surprises to speak of. The Looks Like Rain that follows, on the other hand, is another story all altogether. Looks Like Rain has always been a personal favorite of mine and this particular rendition doesn't disappoint; Donna's in rather good voice for the back-up vocals and the band builds to an explosive peak at the end of the song. Admittedly, the tempo is a little bit slower than what we're used to these days, but that allows for a tremendous amount of musical detail on the part of the band. With Garcia in no condition to protest, Weir continues his onslaught of western anthems with El Paso; Jerry smokes and the rest of the boys explode in an extremely powerful rendition. Wow, maybe Jer should give up singing altogether? Weir then dives into Let It Grow and Phil stars uncorking bombs right and left as Garcia soars with an endless barrage of lightning fast runs on the neck. The interior jam is intense and played out beautifully. The set comes to a close with a rollicking Promised Land; a powerful capper to a great ten-song first set.

The second set kicks off with a heavy run through Jack Straw; lately, the jam at the end of this version is what I play for those people who happen into my sphere of influence who haven't heard the Dead before. Suffice it to say, the boys cook on this one with Jerry leading the pack; it's colossal. In terms of free form jamming alone, the Dancing in the Street that follows is without a doubt the highlight of the whole show. The band takes the old Motown hit out into totally unrecognizable fields of improvisation and manages to maintain the momentum for a good twenty-five full minutes. As the vocal strains of Bobby and Donna gently drift away, Mickey and Bill leap to the forefront and pound out the drums into to Samson and Delilah. A good version, but not great. Playing in the Band is next up which drifts into a pleasant, dreamy space that gradually turns into drums. The drums meander along without any true direction until the rest of the band take their places and dive into Not Fade Away. Now this is Not Fade Away the way it was meant to be; powerful playing and lots of energy. It's kind of sad that younger heads think of the tune more as a painfully inevitable follow-up to Throwing Stones and a sign that the evening's end is just around the corner. The boys stretch out on this one and bring it to a frenzied climax before returning to the last verse. Around & Around closes the set, but not before Jerry rips into a blazing jam at the end which undoubtedly left his digits gasping for air. An interesting musical evening is then brought to an end with a suitable energetic One More Saturday Night. The Dead comes through yet again despite adverse conditions.

Now I can't understand why Bobby would even consider repeating a tune when given the rare opportunity to showcase his singing and his songwriting, but I don't care! If Bobby wanted to play a Jack Straw like this every night, I wouldn't complain. This night the song opened the show and it was yet another barnburner, due in part to yet more exemplary guitar work from Mr. Garcia. Next came supplement II of the cowboy collection with Mama Tried> Big River. The Mama Tried is a bit off, but there's some dynamite, energetic rocking at the end of Big River. Donna gets to do another Sunrise; the first day's was better; what the hell, it's short. Although Phil had played an integral part in these shows up until this point, he had yet to really step forward an dominate any part of it, as he is wont to do. The All Over Now solved that. Phil unleashes a thundering note on at least 80% of the downbeats on the changes; the neighbors downstairs will back me up on this one. Looks Like Rain makes another appearance, and I'll be damned, but after repeated listenings I'm hard pressed to say that one is better than the other; they're both great! After a bungled countdown, Bobby gets a handle and leads the group into Lazy Lightning Supplication. Always a breeding ground for creative interplay, I'd like to see them bring this back, after they start playing Lost Sailor with Saint of Circumstance again. Another great set, but maybe a notch below the previous day's.

The second set kicked into gear with a repeat of Samson and Delilah which easily eclipses the version from the day before with several intricate and creative jams throughout. Next on the agenda came Good Lovin', which although a bit sloppy, everyone involved compensates with both energy and a whole lotta inspiration. After that, Bobby takes the mike for a public service announcement:

Bobby: Well, it's a special day tonight or a special night tonight on account of it's a special day today, aside from being Sunday. It's also Uncle Bill Graham's birthday! And it kind of caught us by surprise and so we didn't have time to really go out and buy anything special or elaborate for him so the best we could do on short notice was to give him something that... well you see we figured we'd give him a new name. So we've got a present for Bill and it's a new name. And so now instead of Uncle Bill Graham, it's Uncle Bobo Graham. (A demented snippet of "Happy Birthday" follows.) So it's happy birthday, Uncle Bobo.

Phil: Say 'Happy Birthday, Uncle Bobo!' (Audience responds appropriately.)

After the moment of merriment, the band heads into Estimated Prophet which metamorphoses into a long spacey instrumental which melts into drums. Unfortunately, drums in the days before sampling and the beam didn't have a whole lot to distinguish them from one another, so I'll reserve my comments to the fact that it was more intense than that of the previous day. The boys rejoin the drummers and noodle around for a minute or two before rocking into The Other One. A little short and a little sloppy, they wind down into Truckin'. Although the vocal portion of the tune is a little rough, the instrumental at the end is rollicking and builds to not one, but

After this we get something that Garcia had been fooling around with on this 1978 California tour, but here everything comes to dramatic fruition. This is the Close Encounters theme in all its glory, beautifully flowing into one of the best modern (after 1976) versions of St. Stephen. Not Fade Away and Around & Around end this awesome performance.

I should mention that U.S. Blues (the encore) was surprisingly hot.

01-13-78 Arlington Theater - Louis Woodbury

After many stadium and arena-sized shows in the years between, finally a chance to get into a small theater show again, and the Arlington to boot! I almost didn't make it though since the show sold out in less than an hour. For those who haven't had the chance to experience it, the whole thing is a classic Spanish-style building and the inside is made to look like a small village courtyard complete with twinkling stars overhead. Garcia's voice was gone though and never did fully regain its strength after that but he played great despite being miserably ill. Bill Graham apologized for all the folks that had been left out and promised that anyone who made it over to Bakersfield the following night with a ticket stub from the Arlington show would be let in free. A real nice gesture but I never made it though I did collect a few stubs for friends that hadn't gotten in.

02-05-78 Cedar Falls - John W. Scott

Although this show features a number of good songs, the centerpiece is clearly the Scarlet> Fire in the second set. Spanning thirty minutes, this is one of the longest and finest versions of this combination ever. The jam between the two songs is hypnotic. The transition into Fire On The Mountain takes so long, and is so well developed, that by the time the lyrics finally start I find myself expecting a later verse.

The Truckin> Drums> Other One is also worth mentioning. A great closing jam in Truckin passes through a somewhat short drum solo and into a raging Other One. As with the Fire On The Mountain, the Dead give The Other One the nice, long introduction that it deserves and include several blistering jams for good measure.

02-05-78 Cedar Falls, Ia. - Andy Preston

On February 5, 1978, a group of seven of us set out from Grinnell College in Grinnell, Iowa. We left at dawn and arrived at the pressure sealed inflatable stadium known as the U.N.I. Dome on the campus of the University of Northern Iowa. We got into position at the entrance at about 8:00 AM. The temperature was 2°, and would only rise to 19° that day. Iowa was in the early stages of what would be the coldest winter in a century — ultimately 63 days would go by before the temperature rose above 32° (anytime, even high noon)! Huddled together with blankets and down parkas, we were surprised that absolutely no one came to join us in line until 4:00 PM that afternoon. Finally the crowds did come but we were first in and headed immediately for the front of the stage. The U.N.I dome is an indoor football field and the band set up at the 50 yard line side line leaving a 150 foot area in front of the stage for "festival" positioning with no chairs on the field, but the stands on the other side of the field offered excellent viewing too. The band came to the stage to a surprisingly loud roar from the crowd. It was obviously surprising to Phil Lesh as he addressed the crowd with "I'll give you this much, you sound like there's more of you than there is!."

With the first note of "Bertha" the crowd was dancing, enthusiastically greeting each new song with a cheer and more inspired twirling. A highlight of the first set for me in the front row was the shouting of a well timed request for "Sunrise." I saw Jerry turn to Donna Jean, she acknowledged with a nod and the band then played my request.

The true story of this concert however was told in the second set. The tape only gives you part of the story, so I'll try to fill you in on how it went. "Samson and Delilah" started the second set and it was clear immediately that something was wrong — the back up vocal mikes of Jerry and Donna Jean worked fine, but Bobby's lead mike was stone dead! So after a brief "If I Had My Way" chorus the band vamped while the mike was being changed. It seemed to take a very, very long time to correct the problem and you can hear in Jerry's escalatingly furious playing he wasn't happy with the situation. This culminated with a roadie on stage trying to fix the problem looking at Jerry and throwing his hands in to the air, whereupon Jerry pointed his guitar straight at the roadie's heart and cut loose with a staccato machine gun burst to "shoot" him down. Bobby's mike was then working and the song continued. The delay however forced Jerry to get extra creative in the "jam" part of the song as he'd done a lot of improvising earlier on. It probably will go down as the longest "Samson and Delilah" ever!

What happened next was the stuff of legends as the only time we'd ever heard Bobby telling a joke at a show was the "yellow dog" joke over a decade earlier. Here he was though telling us about the little lumberjack trying to get a job at the logging camp and having to prove himself first on a single tree, then on a whole grove. After dispatching them in record time the foreman of the logging camp asks the little lumber jack where he learned to cut down trees so quickly, to which the reply was "in the Sahara forest!." It seeemd to me that the crowd was a little slow in getting it but eventually a medium sized laugh and a few good natured "boos" let Bobby know we appreciated his effort at filling space while more technical adjustments were being made.

The band was clearly able to get past the distractions for they then launched into the absolute best (and longest!) Scarlet Begonias> Fire on the Mountain I have ever heard in person or on tape. Reviewer John W. Scott (Deadbase VII) is right on the money in his glowing praise for this outstanding 30 plus minute combination. But wait there's more!

After "Fire" ended all the lights in the U.N.I. Dome went dark except for 2 spotlights focused on the semi-trailer trucks parked on either side of the stage. First a tremendous explosion (meant to be a backfire noise), then over the sound system the increasing roar of their engines rocked the dome revving louder and louder led The Dead into a rollicking, frat house version of "Truckin"! Due I'm sure to the length of "Samson" and "Scarlet> Fire" the drum solo was really short, I don't even recall the band leaving the stage, but then they broke into an angry, ripping "The Other One" with both verses, crisp metered drumming and "En Fuego" guitar from Jerry.

This in turn gave way to a personal favorite "Wharf Rat" which I had never seen live before. In counterpoint to the raging "Other One" this was tenderly and lovingly done and the crowd absolutely loved it!

The show concluded with a classic rocker "Around and Around" with Bobby slyly changing the words to "Started movin' my seat and clapping my hands." The insistent crowd didn't have to wait long for the band's encore. We weren't disappointed either when Jerry gave us a great "U.S. Blues" with the absolute loudest volume levels of the night. This remarkable show ended with one last surprise. Just in the way it began, Phil closed with a comment to the audience. Echoing Bobby's aloha, Phil said, "What he meant to say was thank you and good NIGHT!"

04-21-78 Rupp Arena Lexington - Geoff Renaud

The first set features a fairly typical setlist. As always, a pumped up Promised works well as an opener. Unfortunately, all but the last verse of Dire Wolf is cut from my soundboard copy. This is followed by the first of some thoroughly entertaining bandmate heckling by Bobby: "If you look closely you'll see Mickey has his headset on, and is talking to those little people again... I wouldn't mind but the language they speak kind of bothers me." Ho-Hum versions of Mama> Mexicali are follwed by equally dull versions of Ramble on Rose and Passenger. After subpar readings of Row Jimmy and Brown-Eyed Women, it starts to look like one seriously flat gig. Then the set-closing Music begins. It doesn't sound like anything phenomenal through the verses, but the first part of the jam is longer and more involved than any I know of. The boys decide to hike their pants up and pull it together for the second part, which quickly becomes very loud. There is always that point

After this we get something that Garcia had been fooling around with on this 1978 California tour, but here everything comes to dramatic fruition. This is the Close Encounters theme in all its glory, beautifully flowing into one of the best modern (after 1976) versions of St. Stephen. This culminated with a roadie on stage trying to fix the problem looking at Jerry and throwing his hands in to the air, whereupon Jerry pointed his guitar straight at the roadie's heart and cut loose with a staccato machine gun burst to "shoot" him down. Bobby's mike was then working and the song continued. The delay however forced Jerry to get extra creative in the "jam" part of the song as he'd done a lot of improvising earlier on. It probably will go down as the longest "Samson and Delilah" ever!

What happened next was the stuff of legends as the only time we'd ever heard Bobby telling a joke at a show was the "yellow dog" joke over a decade earlier. Here he was though telling us about the little lumberjack trying to get a job at the logging camp and having to prove himself first on a single tree, then on a whole grove. After dispatching them in record time the foreman of the logging camp asks the little lumber jack where he learned to cut down trees so quickly, to which the reply was "in the Sahara forest!." It seeemd to me that the crowd was a little slow in getting it but eventually a medium sized laugh and a few good natured "boos" let Bobby know we appreciated his effort at filling space while more technical adjustments were being made.

The band was clearly able to get past the distractions for they then launched into the absolute best (and longest!) Scarlet Begonias> Fire on the Mountain I have ever heard in person or on tape. Reviewer John W. Scott (Deadbase VII) is right on the money in his glowing praise for this outstanding 30 plus minute combination. But wait there's more!

After "Fire" ended all the lights in the U.N.I. Dome went dark except for 2 spotlights focused on the semi-trailer trucks parked on either side of the stage. First a tremendous explosion (meant to be a backfire noise), then over the sound system the increasing roar of their engines rocked the dome revving louder and louder led The Dead into a rollicking, frat house version of "Truckin"! Due I'm sure to the length of "Samson" and "Scarlet> Fire" the drum solo was really short, I don't even recall the band leaving the stage, but then they broke into an angry, ripping "The Other One" with both verses, crisp metered drumming and "En Fuego" guitar from Jerry.

This in turn gave way to a personal favorite "Wharf Rat" which I had never seen live before. In counterpoint to the raging "Other One" this was tenderly and lovingly done and the crowd absolutely loved it!

The show concluded with a classic rocker "Around and Around" with Bobby slyly changing the words to "Started movin' my seat and clapping my hands." The insistent crowd didn't have to wait long for the band's encore. We weren't disappointed either when Jerry gave us a great "U.S. Blues" with the absolute loudest volume levels of the night. This remarkable show ended with one last surprise. Just in the way it began, Phil closed with a comment to the audience. Echoing Bobby's aloha, Phil said, "What he meant to say was thank you and good NIGHT!"

04-21-78 Rupp Arena Lexington - Geoff Renaud

The first set features a fairly typical setlist. As always, a pumped up Promised works well as an opener. Unfortunately, all but the last verse of Dire Wolf is cut from my soundboard copy. This is followed by the first of some thoroughly entertaining bandmate heckling by Bobby: "If you look closely you'll see Mickey has his headset on, and is talking to those little people again... I wouldn't mind but the language they speak kind of bothers me." Ho-Hum versions of Mama> Mexicali are follwed by equally dull versions of Ramble on Rose and Passenger. After subpar readings of Row Jimmy and Brown-Eyed Women, it starts to look like one seriously flat gig. Then the set-closing Music begins. It doesn't sound like anything phenomenal through the verses, but the first part of the jam is longer and more involved than any I know of. The boys decide to hike their pants up and pull it together for the second part, which quickly becomes very loud. There is always that point where you expect Garcia to breakout the ultimate in climacticity, his trademark "fan," but he holds out and lets the three chord romp grow to gigantic proportions. Almost a whole minute later, he unleashes one of the speediest and most effective fanning sessions the Wolf ever saw. Music comes to a crash ending, and it looks like they've managed to turn it on.

Although Samson was all too common on this tour, this version wails and screams like any great Samson should. Ship of Fools possesses a haunting beauty not seen that often in the late 70's. Bobby steps to the mic for some more ranting: "You see were not ready for our next tune yet because Jerry has to light another cigarette, and life is one big Jones for the cigarette smoker... so all you people out there who don't smoke cigarettes, on the count of three (drum roll) say 'There there, Jerry, it's alright.'" Four, Five, Seven, Nine, Ten and we're into Playin'. The jam gets off to a quick start with everybody weaving in and out of each other in a sweaty psychedelic mess. The jam stays strong, rolling into a conveniently-brief drum solo and on into Stella. This Stella is especially fragile, and takes its time to breathe through the verses. The solo is one of the most beautifully phrased I have ever heard Garcia play. It starts with Jerry meandering through the first set of changes, then as the band gains momentum he begins a pattern similar to a marionette's dance. He finishes off with the fan, once again holding out for great dramatic effect.

What comes next is the all-time version of Truckin'. This statement has spawned many arguments between me and a friend who stands by Binghampton '77 as the ultimate. But this one combines the spontaneity of Binghampton with the raging intensity of London '72 and surpasses them both. Kicked off by a Weir whistle intro, it comes charging through the gates, building dynamically into Bobby screaming, "HAAA GET BACK TRUCKIN' ON." And then the jam begins. Faster and louder as the guitars move higher up the neck, this jam is so intense you don't have time to cheer it on. Finally that held-beat release comes in and almost rattles the cosmos, and the band lets loose into a near violent romp. They lay back for a few and it looks like Truckin' is coming to a slow halt , but then Jerry steps on a pedal and takes everybody with him into a fervently led jam, more intense than the first. Another great release of energy occurs and the band floats in space for a few, seemingly amazed by the preceding moments. Playin' is cleverly reprised to end an entirely fulfilling second set. The second version of Werewolves of London is sloppy but fun, but I have never heard the U.S. Blues which is cut from most copies.

This show is a great example of what is to me the very essence of the Grateful Dead. That inimitable ability to send the gem skyrocketing out of the rough. To turn the boat around and have the seemingly dismal morph into the absolutely incredible, right in front of your ears.

05-11-78 Springfield - Rich Petlock

This show has some great Jerry vocals and overall very good playing by the Dead. The show opens with a very hot Cold Rain And Snow, which has some wild Jerry vocals at the end of it. There are very good versions of Friend of The Devil, Loser, Peggy-O, and Lazy Lighting> Supplication in the first set. The second set features a very good Scarlet Begonias that goes into a great Fire On The Mountain, with wild vocals and very hot playing. Dancin In The Streets follows with some wild vocals on Bobby's part, and a good jam in the middle. The drum segment is very good, with lots of bizarre percussion sounds. A nicely jammed out Not Fade Away follows, with some good Jerry leads. The first encore, Werewolves of London, is also very well played. Overall this was a very good show, lots of fun for the band and the audience.

Here we go. Another road trip. I met up with Scott and RT at Scott's house the night of the 2nd. We got a mid-morning start, driving through the scenic Coast Ranges listening to a tape labeled "the best of Pigpen." Sometime around 3 we reached Santa Barbara, scoped things out, and found Tumbleweed's motel room. TW was unpacking his "motel room conversion kit" (i.e., tie-dyes, posters, etc.). At about this time we started in on the Chivas Regal and Heineken. Then we took a walk on the beach. Late afternoon found us at a Mexican restaurant downtown, after dark we went bar-hopping. Biker bars, fern bars, pick-up bars; you name it, they've got it. Sometime after midnight we drove back to campus and crashed in a big field by the stadium, as did a lot of other people.

Way too early in the morning we were rousted by campus police and told to leave. Trouble was, RT wouldn't wake up. "RT! GET UP! THE COPS ARE HERE!" "huh? what? leave me alone." I think we left him there. Nothing happened to him. We went to TW's and showered. We went back to the stadium. It was extremely hot outside. I had a new girlfriend who couldn't make the trip with me. I missed her terribly. Suggestions that I pick up some young Deadhead cutie went unheeded.

The show started with a band called Wah-Koo who I don't remember at all. Elvin Bishop played next, for the encore he was joined by Wah-Koo's lead guitarist and none other than Jerome Garcia. All three guitarists soloed. When it was the kid from Wah-Koo's turn he imitated Jerry's "Truckin'" style very well. Then Garcia took his turn, listening to it I thought, "Come on, Jerry, you can do better than that!" The encore ended, we played the tape back and — Jerry sounded amazing! Hmmm.

Warren Zevon came on. He proceeded to loudly insult all of us. He also played Werewolves, which I thought negated the Dead's chances of doing it. I was right. Soon, it was time for the Grateful Dead. Wow! What's this? Jerry's in the MIDDLE! We sat in the left bleachers and baked our brains out while listening to the band play a rather routine set. Although, I heard that the Dead considered this show a high point and, come to think of it, it sounds much better on tape than it seemed at the time. Also, rumors that Billy was leaving the band proved unfounded.

Set two came. The transition back into the vocals on Estimated Prophet were botched so badly we cracked up laughing. After samsonshipestimatedeyes we got our first taste of the new percussion jam which included all the band members, quite a few other people, and this time, a motorcycle as well. A weird space followed, they hinted at the old "tiger" power runs. Then came Not Fade Away, which contained a Nobody's jam that I just didn't notice. After the set was over I went to the rear and found Gary Ross, who I was riding back with. Scott and RT and Co. were planning on sticking around a couple more days and I just wasn't into it. Sugar Mag was the second encore, they were playing so loud I could hear the PA crackle. Time to go. On the way back we stopped in Buellton and ate at Anderson's (of split pea soup fame) restaurant. Gary had promised to send someone a postcard, he was buying one on the way home. Of course, he wouldn't be able to mail it until he got back to San Francisco.

06-25-78 Eugene - Mike Dolgushkin

This was a surprisingly strong show. They sounded up all the way through. Passenger rocked during the first set, and in the second set we were treated to a Ken Babbs rap during drums, followed by a downright scary feedback space. We were dismayed, however, that the second set was almost identical to the one in Santa Barbara three weeks earlier.

07-07, 08-78 Red Rocks - Mike Dolgushkin

My friends came back from the first Red Rocks shows completely awed by the music and the scenery. They said "it was great, but DON'T TELL ANYBODY!" I didn't. It must have been someone else.

09-14-78 -> 09-16-78 Egypt - Bernie Bildman

This was a great time, and the highlight was tripping beneath a TOTAL eclipse of a full moon at the foot of the Sphinx. We climbed to the top of the Great Pyramid and watch Kesey and others plant the Grateful Dead's flag/logo atop, which made the international news, coupled with the Camp David meetings taking place at the same time across the world. The third show was rearranged to make room for everyone to watch the moon eclipse. The band started the show instead of the Egyptians with Hamza El Din; EVERYONE was ecstatic being over there!

09-14-78 -> 09-16-78 Egypt - Mike Dolgushkin

These shows are a good example of how high expectations can ruin your enjoyment of a show. All I heard after this run were complaints that they didn't do Dark Star, Blues for Allah, St. Stephen, or some other damn thing. Well, seeing the Dead play by the pyramids should have been enough in itself, no matter what they played or how good they were. After getting the tapes, they sound pretty hot and downright inspired at times. The space jams in particular are outrageous. True, the song lists are somewhat standard but most of the songlists for that year were somewhat standard. You HAD to judge a show by performance alone. Although, how can you call Ollin Arrageed "standard?"

10-17 > 20-78 Winterland - Mike Dolgushkin

There are already fine reviews in this book of the 21st and 22nd. Outstanding shows they are, but I cannot allow the first three nights of this run to go unrecognized any longer. Fine board tapes are now available of ALL FIVE NIGHTS! Get them.

I attended the first show with my girlfriend and both of my brothers. This was a big step for her. Previously she had been somewhat afraid of the Dead, thinking them devil worshippers or something. It must have been the skulls. We sat towards the back under the right side balcony, Phil announced that the Mets had won the Series and the Dead opened with Promised Land, setting the pace for a well played first set. After Mexicali we went upstairs on the left, the balcony being remarkably uncrowded. During Tennessee my girlfriend remarked "the piano player looks like he's asleep." Ah, very perceptive! I'd heard of the new songs by this time, two in a row came next: I Need a Miracle and Stagger Lee. They didn't affect me one way or the other. The set closing Jack Straw, however, blew the roof off the place.

Second set the band got down to business and, although it looks fairly normal on paper, did some of the finest jamming of this run. The dynamics during Scarlet> Fire and Estimated> Eyes were breathtaking, quiet interplay building up to dazzling peaks. The drums were very long, as was customary for the time and the following space was, like the first half of the set, alternately quiet and rowdy. Much different than today, but then, who's to judge? The perfect post-space song for this set came next: If I Had the World to Give, the second of only three live performances of this tune. What a shame, it could add some variety to the post-space stretch THESE days (along with Believe It or Not). Nice jam after the song too, before closing out with a rockin' Around and Around. Since most people were sick of the song I doubt that they noticed how good it was, but hey, that's what tapes are for.

First set second night we sat behind the stage. According to the tape the set was hot but I couldn't really tell, as the monitor mix was kind of weird. During the break I went down to the floor, this afforded me a good view of the Egypt slide show. A slight breeze from the roof vents was blowing on the screen, this caused the slides to appear as if they were moving (at least I THINK that's what caused it). The second set RAGED, crowd pleaser city all the way! Bertha. Good Lovin'. Samson. TERRAPIN! Playin'. A short Mojo jam. And, if anyone finds a more blistering Truckin' than this I'll... well... I'll think of something. I went back upstairs, the monitors had cleared up. The encore — I Need a Miracle — I heard in my head for the next 24 hours.

I didn't go the 20th but judging by the tape it rivals the other nights. Listen to the Dancin'> space> drums> space and when you do make sure that there is someone in the room who can hold you to the ground, otherwise you may float off and never come back.

10-21-78 Winterland - Dick Latvala

Perhaps the most exciting show on the West Coast since the late 60s, this was the fourth of five shows following Egypt, and it was easily the best. Hamza El-Din opened with a medley of tunes that turned into an ensemble performance with the "Abu Cymbil Youth Choir" and the Dead that earmarked a sound that has come to represent what happened in Egypt. The remainder of the 1st set is all very good.

The second set opens with an excellent version of Bertha> Good Lovin. We get a surprise after the drums when Lee Oskar joins the rest of the band (on harmonica) and the jam they get into raises goose bumps. A real shocker follows when Weir starts singing Got My Mojo Workin. After this the real treats are delivered with what arguably is the most incredible version of The Other One since the 60s. We are also treated to the finest, most inspiring version of Stella Blue ever done.

If this isn't enough and to top everything off, we finally get a treatment of U.S. Blues that has me screaming and wallowing in ecstasy. I remember that everyone was just bewildered. I spent the next hour running around Winterland, feeling I had just witnessed the greatest show ever done.

10-22-78 Winterland - John W. Scott

Although the previous night was well lauded by Dick Latvala in earlier editions of DeadBase, I never fully appreciated these shows until I heard the beautiful new soundboards now in circulation — it is impressive that the "From Egypt With Love" concerts often exceeded the performances that they honored. The same tapes have appeared for most of the nights in this run; all are worth owning, but 10/21 is an absolute must, and this night, the last before the fabled closing of Winterland, makes an excellent companion show.

As these concerts marked the Dead's triumphant return from their pilgrimage to Egypt, Hamza El-Din opened the first set, a gift for all those disappointed Deadheads whose means could not match their dedication. The Dead gradually join in with Hamza and forge a pretty jam — this collaboration is stronger and easier than it was for the shows at Gizah. The rest of the first set is good, though, with the exception of a ripping Jack Straw to close, not nearly as energetic as the previous night's.

The first side of the second set is solid, and long enough that either one must put it on a 100-minute tape, or Miracle, which hasn't yet made it to its post-drum status yet, has to go on the second side. It is after the drums that, once again, the special sparks fly. The drummers pound out a NFA beat, and Phil joins them for a nice forceful bassy intro. The result is a long determined version (about sixteen minutes), solid enough that the band can do whatever they please on top of it, and they do. John Cipollina sits in with the Dead — there is something special about these collaborative versions of Not Fade Away. Perhaps this rehearsal was the reason for the monster version they played together on New Year's Eve, but then this one is every bit as interesting — hot and well jammed, leading naturally into the excellent jams that follow. The Caution tease is very short, blink and you will miss it. The Mojo jam is hot, introduced with a short fusion reminiscent of the Mind Left Body theme. Even though they played an awesome, full-blown Mojo the night before, The Dead take this instrumental very far; it is surprising that they don't sing the lyrics. The set is rounded out with a rolling Goin' Down The Road Feelin' Bad that seems to be cut on all the soundboards, only to continue on the first tape where it takes off. As I don't believe in cutting drums, I can accept this civilized reality, but I would love to find out that the master is uncut, and can be dubbed safely on 100-minute tapes.

Heed Dick's review on 10/21, particularly with the new soundboards that are available. Then, once it has whet your appetite, check out this show, along with some of the other nights.

11-24-78 Capitol Theater - David I. Greenberg

In honor of the release of their new album Shakedown Street, the Grateful Dead performed at the 2,500 seat Capitol Theater in Passaic, New Jersey at the end of a November Midwest/Northeast tour.

Attendance at this show was via ticket lottery only but it was radio broadcast nationwide. By way of FM tapes, this became, early on, one of my favorite shows from the late 1970's. In a year that saw an element of staleness and monotony set in during many performances — due in part to internal strife within the band — this concert was a delightful exception. There is a playfulness and sincerity that permeates every song. The band is bubbling over with energy — they're obviously psyched — and it's reflected on every note of the tape.

The show was taped, and I was recently given a high quality videotape of this simulcast. Ordinarily the Grateful Dead doesn't work for me on video. To say that the Boys are visually stoic in concert is putting it charitably. Sometimes, even at shows, I find it actually distracting to watch the band. This show, however, was too good to pass up. I always suspected that there must have been so much great visual interplay that corresponded with all the outstanding audio interplay, jams, transitions, etc...

The video begins with promoter John Scher introducing the band, one member at a time, as Weir counts off a Jack Straw opener. Right out of the chute, the band is unusually animated. It's not much of a surprise, I suppose, to see Weir pumping his head back on every other downbeat or to see Donna swaying enthusiastically to the music, but Jerry? Jerry's bouncing up and down and rockin' back and forth with a shiteatin' grin on his face throughout the entire song. This is nothing though, compared to the next tune. By the middle of a SMOKIN' Sugaree, Garcia has worked himself into a frenzy. I kid you not. He is literally doing pelvic thrusts while concurrently twirling his torso from the waist and spinning his head in the opposite direction so fast that his hair is airborne, all the while sporting a blissful, almost bubbleheaded expression on his face. The video momentarily cuts to Bob, whose jaw is hanging down and eyes are buggin' out while he stares at Jerry in disbelief, seemingly thinking "who is this guy, anyway?!!"

Me & My Uncle into Big River was next up. A combo that they played to death in '78 (sound familiar?), this rendition was, nonetheless, superb. They just played it like they meant it. Phil especially, was into it, frequently looking over at Bob and Jerry, smiling and thrusting his bass forward while popping those low notes.

Stagger Lee is no less spectacular, featuring some interesting slide guitar runs courtesy of Weir, behind Garcia's determined leads during the jam at the end.

The exuberance continues through a raunchy Passenger, Candyman and a hot Minglewood. (Jerry, whose voice has been steadily deteriorating throughout the set, begins Candyman on a sour note and it's interesting to see him acknowledge it with a shrug of the shoulders and a shared grin with Donna.)

Donna's underrated From the Heart of Me receives a tremendous ovation from the crowd and this version proves worthy. Contrary to the perception of Donna (and Keith) being bored with the Grateful Dead (and vice versa) during this period, the video shows her to be looking enthused onstage and having fun during this tune and throughout the show. She also happens to be "on" this night, singing well for the most part, without pitch problems. Watching the video, it's hard to believe she and Keith would be gone from the group in less than two months.

Blistering versions of Loser and Promised Land round out the first set.

I Need a Miracle opens the second set and contains a sumptuous jam at the end that sharply bounced into Good Lovin'. Jerry's answer to this is Friend of the Devil. Keith, who is largely ignored in the video, takes a fine solo (and gets a little air-time as well).

A serious Estimated Prophet begins the jam; Bob looks like he really believes this "glory" stuff he's singing. After some Bob and Donna vocal theatrics, we are treated to one of the best ever Estimated jams. It's a real powerhouse; lengthy and deliberate and truly inspirational. Some band members look surprised as Jerry somehow manages to steer the jam effortlessly into Shakedown Street. Bob and Phil perk up visibly as the intro yields to the verses. They're cruisin'! At the end of the the second verse, Donna lets out an unearthly yelp that seems to startle Garcia, who presents a hysterical sour look on his face.

It is the ensuing jam after the verses, though, that really puts this Shakedown over the top. It builds and builds with such vivacity, drama and emotion that it virtually explodes. Never have I seen Garcia look so intense, so passionate and full of spirit, as during this jam. He is a man possessed.

The Shakedown verses are excusably not reprised as the jam segues into a drum session that features Hamza El-Din performing Ollin Arageed.

Mickey is still standing at the front edge of the stage playing his tar as the band returns and constructs a fully developed intro to Fire on the Mountain (one of only two versions to appear after drums). Fire segues so seamlessly into Sugar Magnolia that it's easy to miss the transition entirely. It was practically choreographed! In one of the video's finest moments, Jerry, who seems to have instigated the segue, looks over at Weir with a proud stance, as if to say "Hey, wasn't that neat?" while Bob looks back with an utterly shocked expression. I think it took a few seconds for it to register with Bob that they weren't playing Fire anymore!

The vigorous workout on Sugar Mag ends the set and is followed by Johnny B. Goode (Keith is all over the place!) for an encore.

The video doesn't show the crowd much but when it does, it's revealing to see that in stark contrast to today, the audience scene is quite casual. Most people are dressed in ordinary street clothes (I couldn't spot one single tie-dye or Guatemalan get-up) and one girl is actually sitting on the edge of the stage, leaning on a monitor. Try that at the next Madison Square Garden gig!

12-19-78 Jackson, Ms. - Rob Bertrando

This seems to be a generally underrated show from an admittedly poor year overall, despite the journey to Egypt. True, the first set has nothing to rave about, although it is fairly long, but the second set cooks! The opening Begonias> Fire is solid throughout, if not one of the all-time greats, and Promised Land and Stagger Lee keep things moving. Truckin opens the long jam in fine form, followed by a long spacey jam up to the drums. A meandering Other One comes next, moving into a plaintive Stella Blue. The transition into Not Fade Away is almost unbelievable, and unfortunately we're unlikely to ever hear anything like it again! Casey Jones encores after the set-closing Around. I can't remember what guitar Jerry was using around this time period, but its tone is quite different from any others he has used.

12-31-78 Winterland - Bernie Bildman

I was so high when the balloons hit, that I couldn't orient myself as to where the stage was, or where the music was coming from. It sounded as if it was erupting everywhere, swirling around us. (Healy later verified this in a physical way. Because the auditorium was being "retired," they placed speakers everywhere, even beneath the boards on the main floor!!). The show started with the movie Animal House followed by the Blues Brothers, the Flying Karamazov Brothers (jugglers), then The New Riders of the Purple Sage. At midnite the Dead started and played until 7 next morning with champagne and breakfast. We were teary eyed as they played We Bid You Goodnight with arms literally around each other on the stage. I've never seen THAT before.

12-31-78 Winterland - Mike Dolgushkin

Before the third set I was talking to a guy who'd seen the whole tour. He described it to me and said he'd talked to Weir about their lack of variety. We also talked about our Dark Star hopes. We didn't dare mention the song by name, it was just "it." Thirty seconds later they started Dark Star. We whooped and hollered and gave each other five, and the "however many days since last S.F. Dark Star" banner went flying off the balcony.

01-10-79 Nassau Colisuem - Gary Ross

How's this for an intense show? The long-awaited return of Dark Star to the East Coast, along with St. Stephen later in the same set! Nothing more needs to be said.

01-20-79 Shea's Theatre - Ross Warner

This show, like most of the end of the Godchaux era, is in limited circulation only in the form of an audience recording. The concert is remembered for two reasons—the last appearance of Dark Star until 12/31/81 and the absence of Donna. According to Rock Scully, in his recently published book, Living With The Dead, he intimates that she may have missed the show due a physical altercation with Keith. The book also reveals that during this rocky period for the Godchauxs, Donna was having an affair with Bobby. From simply a performance standpoint, this tape is a good one to grab. It seems to be more readily available than a few years ago. In fact, when I started to get real serious about taping, I had someone actually refuse to copy this show for me since it was so rare and he wanted to keep it that way. I can only imagine that he eventually went on to be the national president of the "Star Trek: Babyon Five" fan club.

The second set kicks off with a fiery rendition of I Need A Miracle. It is immediately clear that the lack of a backup singer is having a liberating effect on the rest of the band. Bobby's guitar is high in the mix and although it seems weird to only hear two voices, it is a real pleasure to have the Weir/Garcia combination isolated. An upbeat Bertha is up next. This version isn't quite as jazzy as many from the mid-70s, but hasn't quite returned to the breakneck tempo in which the song was born. With no third voice to lean on, Jerry and Bobby are both forced to raise their respective games. Jerry's vocals seem particularly inspired, although he flubbs the "test me, test me" verse to the delight of the college crowd. His picking definitely has a spring to its step, and the not-so-surprising segue into Good Lovin' is a pleasant one. It's a real treat to hear Jerry shout out the chorus without anyone else smothering him.

Loser serves as a nice change of pace and Jerry makes it known that the preceding triplet was simply a warm-up. You can really get a feel for the desperation of the lyrics as Jerry once again sings this one solo. Estimated Prophet begins the continuous suite that really defines this show. The Fat Man's plucking has a lively quality that remains evident for the rest of the set. The parting jam has such amazing momentum, that you're not sure whether the band is going to give the middle part another workout, à la 4/19/82. When the raging beast finally settles down, it metamorphisizes into The Other One. Bobby's rhythm strumming is once again louder than usual as Jerry's notes flow on top of it. This Quadbilet For Tender Feet is intense, but not angry as the song noodles into a drum solo, Mickey and Billy go at it longer than usual and the rest of the band returns with a nice free-form jam as they had in Springfield five nights earlier. Before too long, Phil has us escaping into the lily fields for the second half of The Other One. Out of the ashes Jerry's meanderings give no indication of what would come next. They proceed to unveil The Holy Grail and the last Dark Star for almost three years is born. This rendition sounds quite similar to the versions at Winterland and Nassau Coliseum earlier that month. Bobby lays the groundwork as Jerry noodles away. Like the preceding number, this one fire, but remains optimistic. Even the dissonance of the pre-verse space has an upbeat quality which indicates that they have an idea where this one's going.

As the band puts the finishing touches on a satisfying but not revolutionary Dark Star, they move into the transitory jam which makes this tape a keeper. As Jerry comes back to earth, Bobby steers the band into a Not Fade Away that erupts out of the gate like a wild bull. When Jerry joins him, the result is rendition that bounces more than it rips. When compared with the blazing rendition from Red Rocks the previous summer, this one reads like a frollicking ballad. So it's no surprise when the band drops you in Sugar Magnolia which doesn't leave too much to the imagination.

As was the case with a handful of shows right before the arrival of Brent, this set concludes with a no-holds-barred style much like when you know you're about to be fired, so you figure you can get away with anything. The specter of impending change fthat was facing the band is no where to be found in this set closer. The playfulness that had popped up throughout the set is all over this version. Jerry once again trades in his frantic picking for some sweet plucking that bends and breaks into a fully satiating Sunshine Daydream. Even without Donna's trademark yelping, this version puts an exclamation point on not only a great concert, but an era as well. The inspired One More Saturday Night encore is almost an afterthought, but hammers the point home for any who hadn't gotten it yet. As the crowd filed out into the bitter January air of Western New York, I can't imagine there were many who needed furthur clarification.

02-17-79 Oakland Coliseum - Mike Dolgushkin

At this point, the Dead were being criticized so much about the sameness of their shows that it seemed like this show was an answer to all that. Greatest Story, Don't Ease, High Time, Jackaroe, Might as Well, and Big Railroad were all songs we hadn't heard in these parts for ages. They jammed at length on Lazy Lightnin' and Playin. We didn't know at the time that this was Keith and Donna's last gig with the Dead.

04-22-79 Spartan Stadium - Corry Arnold

If the Grateful Dead weren't wonderful, I wouldn't have seen them so many times. This doesn't mean every show they've ever played has been wonderful. Once I saw them in San Jose. San Jose is a part of the Bay Area, but it isn't Grateful Dead country. In a survey of San Jose residents, most of them said that the best thing about San Jose is that it was near other, more interesting places. The Dead had played there once in 1972 (at the tiny Civic Auditorium), and I've never met anyone who knew anyone who went. Thus, although San Jose is an hour south of San Francisco, and a half-hour from both Santa Cruz and Palo Alto, all Deadhead strongholds, a Dead show in San Jose was (and is) an unknown quantity.

What made this show even more of an unknown quantity was that the Dead would be debuting their new keyboard player. We had heard all sorts of interesting rumors — Merl Saunders, Bill Champlin, Tom Constanten — all implausible or explicitly denied in the press. My two friends and I went to the show dizzy with the possibilities; not so much for the unknown keyboard player as for the opportunity for the band to rearrange their songs and rethink their show. They had to rehearse the new guy anyway, we figured, so it was a prime opportunity to stop playing the same old stuff the same old way. This show, we were sure, was going to be really different.

By the time the Dead came on late in the humid afternoon (after Greg Kihn and Charlie Daniels), we were hyperventilating with anticipation. My friend Corey recognized Brent as the guy who had played with Weir at the Roxy in L.A. (in '78), so that issue was settled, but the musical possibilites were still wide open.

They opened with Jack Straw, not a very original choice, and not very well done, but we wrote that off as opening day jitters. Tennessee Jed was more of the same, as were the next few numbers, and it was starting to look like we'd have to write off the whole first set. Well, we'd done that often enough, but we would have been much happier if they hadn't played standard first set songs with the same old arrangements.

The anemic playing didn't seem to be Brent's fault, as his organ sounded good, and he took a nice solo on Minglewood. Garcia just couldn't make anything happen, and he wasn't getting any help from Weir or Lesh. It briefly rained during Looks Like Rain, but the crowd's excitement didn't cross over to the band.

We consoled ourselves during the break, and persuaded ourselves that the second set was going to be great. They opened with Miracle> Bertha> Good Lovin, not only leaving no opportunity to jam, but performed drearily as well. The miserable second set was interrupted by a powerful Wharf Rat, with Lesh and Weir playing inventive things under the solo, and Garcia responding accordingly, but at that stage it only served as a sad reminder of how lame the rest of the show had been.

Wharf Rat was followed by a perfunctory Around, dashing any hopes for an exciting conclusion. Time to go. We were at the exit when the band came back for the encore. We paused, out of reflex, but when they started up U.S. Blues, the most obvious of encores, we resumed our departure. Later we heard that they did a good Shakedown Street for a second encore, but we were heading north on 101 by that time, and we were so miserable it wouldn't have made any difference.

Fortunately I've seen a lot of great shows since then, but I notice they haven't played San Jose again, either.

04-22-79 Spartan Stadium - Chris Horn

Spartan Stadium was an extremely fun day for me and my friends. It was a sunny afternoon while Greg Kihn and Charlie Daniels were performing. I enjoy these bands so it was a well rounded show. There was high anticipation while waiting for the Dead, this being Brent's first live show with the band. In general, we enjoyed the show very much. The most memorable sequence of events started with a nice Looks Like Rain in the first set. Later during the start of Scarlet> Fire clouds rolled over the Santa Cruz Mountains and headed our way. Scarlet really burned and during the scorching Fire the rain came down. I can still see in my mind Jerry and the boys playing defiantly against the elements. As they settled into Drumz the storm settled and passed on. By show's end we were treated to a gorgeous sunset shining on separate clouds. Welcome to the band, Brent.

04-22-79 Spartan Stadium - Gary Ross

After reading the review that appeared in DeadBase III, I'm sure a lot of people have written this show off as "Brent's Debutante Blues." That's really too bad... because while most of the concert was no great shakes, the Scarlet> Fire jam is one of the best versions I've ever heard — long, intense, and filled with brilliant, bubbling leads. In fact, it's probably my favorite version of all time! "Goes to show, you don't ever know...."

05-09-79 Broome County Arena - Gregg Bucci

This is one of my top candidates for underrated shows. Although I did not attend this show (having arrived in Bingo a year and a half later), many of my friends who attended gave me their first-hand impressions. The tapes also speak loudly.

This show took place on one of the hottest days imaginable. The temperature was somewhere in the mid to upper 90's and the air conditioning was either not working, not turned on or just not effective. People were absolutely soaking wet with perspiration.

After a solid first set, including a smokin' Jack Straw closer, the second set is particularly hot, especially the segment prior to Drums. Although I would love to hear a mint soundboard of this set, the audience tape I have is of pretty good quality. The feel of the crowd at this show is particularly evident on my copy.

The set opens with a hot China Cat> Rider that really gets the crowd pumped. After having disappeared from the band's repertoire for approximately four years (save for one time in 1977 and four shows just prior to Keith and Donna's departure in February, 1979), China Cat> Rider was back. This would be the first one on the East Coast since the 08-05-74 Philly show and the first one since Brent joined the band. The audience's delight is very evident on the tape. The tempo of the combo in the oppressive heat was quite a drain on the crowd and made the transition to He's Gone the perfect prescription for heat prostration. The treatment of this song by the boys is particularly strong, deliberate and slow. One can always tell a good He's Gone by the long, soulful endings and this one doesn't disappoint. He's Gone gave the crowd the opportunity to sway and catch their breath before the impending encounter with a thermonuclear charged Truckin'.

This is one of my personal all time favorite versions of Truckin'. When people ask me to find them a smokin' version of Truckin', this is always one of the first that comes to mind. The band, feeding off the audience, begins to make its ascent to warp speed. Not satisfied with the initial introduction to the song, the band gives the audience a second run through the intro, foreshadowing the climatic ending. The first ending was pretty strong, but apparently it was not sufficient for the band on this evening. Consequently, Jerry lead the band on a second supercharged finish of the song. As you listen to the tape, you begin to say to yourself that they just can't build this thing any higher, but the frenzied pace just continues to build, much like a school of piranha at feeding time. It's as if Jerry just hits a button on his guitar that kicks the jam into super warp overdrive until Phil unleashes one of his patented killer bass bombs. One of the first times I listened to this tape, the bomb Phil dropped nearly destroyed my woofers. The end of the second set, Drums, Wharf Rat, Sugar Mag and the Johnny B. Goode are much better than the list might indicate. It is unfortunate that the band wouldn't be allowed back to the Broome County Arena for awhile following this show, due to the death of one of those who attended.

Another piece of Binghampton folklore I'd also like to mention at this point is the rumor that Jerry loves to play the Broome County Arena because of the rather unique orange roof rafters. All I can say is that I wish I could meet the person who comes up with this stuff.

05-09-79 Broome County Arena - MAS

I thought it would be a good idea to add a couple of tidbits to the excellent review that appears in DeadBase. I attended many concerts, from 76 on, but this wins out for sheer intensity. The energy level that was built during the Truckin jam was probably the most intense I'd ever seen. The new addition of Brent in the band had the boys very pumped. Its already covered in the previous review how hot it was — people were passing out and being carried over the barricade at the front of the stage.

A couple of other things to add: its now hard to conceive of how incredible it was to hear China-Rider open the 2nd set, after it had been left out of the repertoire in the late 70s and people never thought they'd hear it again. This was a BIG moment. Also, I don't know if it was captured on tape, but at one point Phil came to the mic and, referring to the flannel shirt he was wearing, said "this is a Pigpen Shirt!" Also, I thought it was cool to see Jerry with his hair tied in pigtails like in photos from 73! A lot of these things made it seem like they were now more like they were in the "old" days!

07-01-79 Seattle - Rob Bertrando

This is one of those shows where the group clearly makes it to that higher plane that we always hope for. That is not very apparent in the first set, although it is certainly well-played; it just doesn't stand out. The second set also starts out routinely enough — Don't Ease and Samson are familiar old friends, but not the stuff of greatness Sugaree begins to show more than a spark! and Terrapin continues but Playin really rockets off clearly one of the best post-74 Playins. After drums and a short Space comes beautiful Stella Blue with a fully realized closing similar to lO/21/76. Truckin follows alter nearly a full stop hitting a couple of nice peaks before a Nobody's jam; THAT flows into a minute and a half of hot, unique jamming before a great transition into Around and Around. Shakedown Street was a great choice for an encore, one they should resurrect (does that sound familiar?) .

08-04-79 Oakland Auditorium - Gary Ross

I will never forget this first concert held at HJK. It featured one of the greatest Drumz> Space blowouts that the Dead have ever pulled off. The jam starts off innocently enough with a long interesting Shakedown into Playin. The Playin jam gradually starts to ooze over the edge into one of those awesome maelstroms where the band has totally forgotten who they are, where they are, or what they are — there is only this wild and incredible music following a law of its own. The inevitable crescendo had the audience standing there with their jaws hanging down to the floor...entire universes tilted and crashed as the specters of great glowing birds circles wildly above the auditorium. This in no joke...this was a seriously deep jam!

10-27-79 Cape Cod Coliseum - John W. Scott

This show is a personal favorite and has become an evangelical cause for me. It is one of the strongest shows that I have attended. The Cape is a great place to see the Dead on the East Coast. It is remote enough that random rowdy don't bother showing up just to see what the fuss is about; you have to want to be there — only devotees need apply. The police and security were almost invisible. The stormy beach was a nice place to recuperate and recharge between shows.

The first set is somewhat standard, featuring a good version of Jack Straw. Sparks start to fly in the second set. There is almost a full hour of music before the drums, with each of the first three songs accounting for about fifteen minutes. The Dancin In The Streets> Franklin's is a work of art, finely crafted and beautifully expressed, and easily among my favorite versions of these songs. Much of the enthusiasm comes from Phil who steals the show, the inevitable phasing that drives the ebb and flow.

He's Gone has the audience clapping and swaying by the end. Its major contribution, though, is the wonderful jam that flows out of it. There is even a respectable, though short, Caution Jam woven in. The Other One that follows is explosive. We are provided with a solid introduction, and then Phil rides in on a thundercloud. I often find myself turning the bass down to save my speakers at this point.

The selections after the drums may seem anticlimactic, but all are played very well. The Not Fade Away is particularly good. Still, the reality is that they had a very tough act to follow.

10-28-79 Cape Cod Coliseum - John W. Scott

Although this concert cannot possibly match the previous night, there are still some features that are worth noting. I was very surprised when they played Franklin's again in the very next set — this one out of Half Step to begin the show. I was even more surprised to hear just how impressive this version was. I cannot think of a pair of back to back versions like this since the days when the Dead played Dark Star every night. The second set features an excellent China Cat> I Know You Rider.

10-28-79 Cape Cod - D. Cain

I was at both Cape Cod shows, and 11 others in 1979. It was easy for a Boston resident to see the Dead on the East Coast that year. There were six shows in Massachusetts alone (the most since 1969), a godsend for any 19-year-old college student bent on hearing a legendary performance by a legendary band. By my amateur count, there were 36 concerts given in 1979 within a four hour driving radius of Boston.

The big buzz in 1979 was that the Dead had begun to play China Cat Sunflower-I Know You Rider again. But for a single Winterland show in 1977, it hadn't been played in five years. It had been missed, being one of the best rides you can go on while visiting Grateful Dead-land. In the Spring, in the East, only those at Binghampton were lucky enough to hear it; it was not played at the other eight East Coast spring tour dates.

The other buzzes, of course, were 1) goodbye Keith/Donna, hello Brent and 2) that Dark Star was played in January on two dates in New York, though it, and Saint Stephen, had made an appearance weeks before at New Year's. Quite a year, 1979; tenth anniversary of Woodstock, and the statistical height of marijuana usage in the U.S..

So when the Dead returned to the East Coast for the Fall, many fans were fairly ravenous for the return of China Cat. Only the returns of Dark Star (12/31/78, 10/9/89) and St. Stephen (6/9/76, 10/11/83) are beyond compare in terms of surprise, anticipation and Lazarus-like significance.

Some heard the couplet (twice) at Madison Square Garden in September. I was a student who was supposed to be in class on those weekdays, and didn't make it (perhaps somewhat lame, especially in hindsight, though I missed plenty of other classes that year). Thus, we obedient students and other Boston natives were still waiting when the Dead rolled into South Yarmouth, Massachusetts, home to Cape Cod Coliseum.

Cape Cod was not the anticipated venue when tickets went on sale in the Fall. Because the Dead had played at the Boston Music Hall in November 1978, and didn't play in the city in the Spring, we all assumed/hoped we'd get a chance to see them at the same posh, 3,700-capacity, downtown theater digs. Accordingly, two friends and I headed to Tremont Street the night before tickets were rumored to be going on sale. We joined a line of perhaps ten people.

As it turned out, the overnight ticket vigil wasn't much good except for sleeping, drinking a little Southern Comfort on the sidewalk with some of the permanent residents of Boston Commons, and generally passing the time. In the morning, the shade inside the ticket booth was raised, we all came to, and the first in line inquired as to the possibility of purchasing the right of admission to see these musical marvels. I will never forget the old ticket lady's words:

"THERE IS NO GRATEFUL DEAD HERE."

First, we thought she was talking about the band. Of course they weren't here, lady, we could see that, we weren't trying to gain admission to an 8:30 a.m. show; they were most certainly somewhere else at that moment. But could we get tickets, to see them later, please? After further inquiry, we found that her trouble was not simply poor sentence construction, but indeed a lack of possession of anything resembling the precious paper.

Cursing and disappointed we were, until we picked up the Boston Real Paper and found the full page advertising for two shows on Cape Cad at the end of October for $8.50 apiece, Saturday and Sunday nights, general admission.

Certainly, as John Scott noted in earlier Deadbase editions, the Saturday night show on the 27th was terrific. After the first set, I moved from the floor at the foot of the stage to join friends who were in the first row of seats in the risers on the left side of the floor. From there I heard marvelous renditions of both Dancin' in the Streets and Franklin's Tower. It featured the kind of interesting improvisation that I'd always hoped to hear at a Dead concert, that I'd been seeking all year, the truly melodic, exalted ideas that were all over the best recordings from the 1970 and 1971 concerts I cut my ears on. In this version, the musicians never seemed to run out of ideas. My favorite musical parts were near the end, those descending piano licks played by Brent that sounded like the Scarecrow dancing. Looking back at it now, it seems even greater, standing out against the many versions of the song that simply meander without motif (despite the boys' best efforts).

After the show, and into the next day, minds partially obscured by the previous night's good fortune, it dawned on many of us that we still hadn't seen China Cat, and that Sunday night might be our last chance. There was an ever-present mind set of "this might be it" that followed tours with a whisper, even back in 1979. Some of that sense was valid (they brought St. Stephen back in January, and didn't play it again until 1983).

I recall waking on somebody's floor on Sunday morning, and then finding a bar somewhere in the afternoon and holing up there watching football and drinking beer, awaiting the Sunday night show. That night we took the same seats in the first row in the left side bleachers. The first clue that this was going to be a special night was when we heard Franklin's Tower again, this time as the second tune in the first set. I felt I was seeing something from the old days, when there were fewer (informal) rules about song selection. I was sure by 1979 I would never hear the same song two nights running, especially a longer, jamming one. It suggested to me that they knew how well they had played it the night before, and had decided that they would try to conjure up the same magic again. It made me happy to think the Dead might actually be thinking and making decisions along those lines. They closed the first set with Music Never Stopped, which I remember as passionate and highly charged; in the rave-up at the end, Weir's right hand was a blur, moving so fast it looked like a hummingbird. It was an explosion of energy and excitement, and gave us a taste of the powerful performance ahead.

At halftime, we prepared. It had to be coming. Friend after friend walked up to us from the floor to exult and visit. It seemed like everyone I knew in Boston was there, and I felt my first blush of real community at a Dead concert, a feeling I imagined San Franciscans must have shared many times at local ballrooms gone by.

The opening of the second set at a Grateful Dead concert can be a fever-pitched affair, especially after one or two shows have gone before and the band is headed out of town. Like after playing a few hands of blackjack, you begin to sense what high songs are left in the deck. Over the weekend, we had already heard the other big set openers and closers (Jack Straw, Deal, Music). The moment of truth had arrived. It was now or never. We were roaring.

(Warning: listen to the tape first, before reading on. Written comment is no substitute for Real Music).

The lights went out, Garcia played a few runs up and down some scales, the noise swelled, and the first notes of China Cat sounded. This was quickly seconded by a wonderfully distinct rat-a-tat-tat on a cowbell. I sensed we were in for a good ride. It started slowly, even tentatively, but sprightly, with the crowd clapping in unison with the plodding beat. The sound was excellent; you could hear each instrument distinctly. Over the musicians' heads was that ring of six or eight, large metal triangles used on the tour, each containing various colored lights.

After the second, "waterfall" verse, Garcia started in the low register, then with two notes executed that distinct turn where he plays the standard notes forming one of the melodies of the song. He ended his solo by three-stepping up a staircase and closing on a single high note. After the third verse, he started his next solo in the high register. Then it began.

The pace definitely picked up, the crowd sensed it and cheered. This was now going to be a rockin' jam. Weir slid between chords. Lesh hit a very low note, and turned them down another road. Then Brent pounded away at a chord, Weir was chopping, and then Jerry stepped up, and soon took flight on a beautiful, extended six-note ostinato (repeated pattern), and Lesh rumbled up from the bottom. This was a musical Rube Goldberg contraption, working like a Swiss watch.

At this point, the band turned out, got quiet, and formed a kind of musical huddle, hanging out on the D chord, suggesting they were ready to move into I Know You Rider. But they decided against it, and each signaled they were off into different directions like a scattering flock of birds, back to their respective musical corners, to perhaps make another run at it. Again, Weir's chopping patterns were loud and distinctive, Lesh pointed a turn, and the band became quiet once more, Garcia spinning through the sky. This time the formation was more tightly grouped, everybody vamping on the D chord that leads inevitably into Rider. Clearly the jam was over. The crowd cheered.

But wait! Garcia began to stutter on a pattern, and they all split up again, running off like mischievous kids who've just seen a police car. Finally, with Weir sliding down between chords and chopping loudly, they come together and before you can count to four, they are into it.

That this scenario of two beautifully disguised entrances into Rider was completely improvised, and never suggested, even remotely, in any prior China Cat, was, for lack of better words, "mind-blowing." I felt I had finely seen the kind of inspired, objectively confirmable creativity these musicians were capable of.

I Know You Rider was similarly uplifting. The crowd was again clapping along on the beat, driving the band through the sung chorus and the "wild geese" verse. Weir then started the second verse with the words from the third: "I was a headlight; my back door, some day." The crowd smiled knowingly at the mistake, Weir re-delivered the line, correctly, with renewed conviction, and Lesh applauded with a thunderous downbeat, which really sent the crowd who continued to clap in unison through another singing of the chorus. During the singing, Weir played an enchanting little lick of three descending chords to fill the space between the first two sung lines. He used it throughout the rest of the tune.

Garcia's solos were terrific. The one after he sings his "headlight" verse is particularly exciting. On his second time through, Weir punctuates nicely, Lesh goes high, the crowd gets into it, Garcia switches over to chords and blurs them in a frenzied rush up to the F chord change. Lesh delivered high-tonnage bass notes precisely when Garcia would catch a breath in his phrasing, the booming bass notes going off like depth charges.

At the final sung chorus, you hear (on my tape, anyway), the crowd's clapping, it turns out to be in perfect time, and continues through the entire singing of the chorus until drowned out by the band who deliver the first of the five final notes to end the tune.

I try to be careful in generalizing from my own experience, but I think it's fair to say that the audience was pretty well connected with the band and what was going on musically throughout the two songs. It was such a powerful performance, I had no sense that they had only played two songs and that the set had just started. That they had enough energy to move into Samson and Delilah says a little something about the vitality of the band in 1979 (in later days, the following tune likely would've been a slow ballad).

There was still more to come in the set. I note only some highlights. Towards the end of the drum solo, Mickey and Bill begin to bring their separate drumming lines together, and what you hear is just an all-out thrashing in unison of the big drums. In the middle of this terrific beating to end all beatings of the skins, you can hear somebody on stage counting off "ONE!.....TWO!.....THREE!.....FOUR!" at which point the drumming comes to a crashing halt. Fairly exciting stuff.

Another for example: Listen to the emotion Garcia pours out on Stella Blue. During his second solo, he stutters on a note, and then leaps up, he uses huge bends throughout to real emotional effect, a great example of some moving playing, not fast or clever, just plain transmitting of feeling. Sugar Magnolia was also played from the heart. After the U.S. Blues encore, they opened the doors at the top of the bleachers and all the sweat and steam we made poured out, and inside, people did not leave, many beat out Not Fade Away on the metal seats, still inspired. I caught a ride back to Boston in the rear of a station wagon and chomped on cold cereal out of the box, marvelling with a friend at what we had witnessed.

So where does it rank? Listen to the tape, you decide. As China Cat jams go, I felt it as inventive, though not as pretty or angelic, as the 1972 versions (on the album, Jerry plays that short, kind of emotional, ringing, church-bell like motif), or the 1973 or 1974 versions (which feature the joyful, but musically simple, jam over the first four chords from Uncle John's, upon which Garcia has a field day). It didn't register a single vote for best China Cat> Rider in DeadBase IX's "Feedback" from the 75-concerts-per-person crew, and only garnered three votes for best concert of 1979. 10/28/79 is certainly unique, and deserves greater recognition among Dead musicologists.

10-31-79 Nassau Coliseum - Rob Bertrando

This was the opener of a very strong three shows at the Nassau Coliseum, and it was possibly the best from start to finish. The opening China> Rider is not as good as the one three days earlier, but it is a great start to this show. Althea and Sailor> Saint close the first set in fine style. The Shakedown that begins the second set is one of the best ever; the same can be said for the Estimated that starts the jam, as well as the transition to Eyes that follows. Closing the show with Truckin was an inspired choice, one that they should consider reviving.

11-01-79 - Nassau Coliseum - John J. Wood

The centerpiece of this show is the spacey 35-minute Scarlet> Fire. Lengthy, and drawn-out, this version explores many places. Jerry noodles over Bob's tasteful chording, while Phil explores the Scarlet theme with some imaginative bass lines. Fine soundboards are available, and the hunt for this is well worth it for the twofer alone.

The Scarlet portion starts up with confidence, yet the pace and playing indicated that the fellas want to explore the Scarlet theme, as nothing is rushed. Jerry's playing stays with the pace, and he concentrates on the notes played to create his crescendos rather than playing speed-demon licks that gather applause but accomplish nothing musically.

However, it is the jamming BETWEEN Scarlet and Fire that really makes this twofer a standout. The band plays as an ensemble unit: each member making their own significant musical statement, yet plays as a whole that eclipses the sum of its great parts. Brent's organ rushes counterpart Jerry's staccato runs, and combine with Bob's imaginative rhythm licks and Phil's deft bass runs, to create a space that makes this Scarlet> Fire stand in a world of its own.

The Fire portion is superb as well, as the band continues to take their time and explore. This is a Fire that slips and slides to new boundaries, and doesn't rely on peaks alone (although there are plenty here). The drummers play a laid-back, grooving, slinky beat that slowly gathers steam; and before you know it, the version slowly and surely gets hotter and hotter in a subtle kind of way. If anything, this Scarlet> Fire is most notable for the space it contains, and how the band takes advantage of this.

Other bright spots of the show include a fine Looks Like Rain, with superb vocals by Weir, and a nice Terrapin> Playing> Drumz> Black Peter> Good Lovin' run (this would comprise of the entire second set five days later at the Philadelphia Spectrum).

There's also one fine nonmusical highlight as well. After the band finishes a bouncy They Love Each Other, Weir steps to the mike and says, "I have it from a usually reliable source that Russia just blew up Staten Island. So if you live there, don't bother to go home tonight." Of course, relations between the two countries have progressed immensely since then, but hearing that for the first time on tape was a trip for me. To close, Weir then says, "It's polka time, ladies and gentlemen"; and the band plays a tight pair of cowboy tunes, Mama Tried> Mexicali Blues.

11-05-79 Spectrum - Rich Petlock

A good version of China Cat Sunflower> I Know You Rider opens this show — an extremely rare show opener. The first set has hot versions of Passenger and The Music Never Stopped. The real highlights of this show are in its two-hour second set. It starts off with a long, jammed-out Althea. The jam of Eyes of The World> Estimated Prophet> Franklin's Tower is almost an hour long, and it is very well played. They encore with a nice version of Casey Jones.

12-26-79 Oakland - Simon Friedman

The high-energy second set begins with Uncle John's Band, which reappears here after a two-year absence. Despite the long layoff, this is definitely one of the finest and most unusual versions of this tune ever. The jamming section in the middle is played much longer than usual, with Jerry following simple yet powerful variations on the tune's melody with blistering runs. The band foregoes the final chorus in favor of an interesting transition into Estimated Prophet. The jam at the end is also given an atypical treatment, as the band breaks out of the usual 7/4 jam into a very fast, straight-ahead jam that has overtones of Caution. Things calm down during He's Gone, but pick up again during the Other One, which is given an extended, spacey ending before the drums.

The second half of the set features the return of Brokedown Palace after two years. The show ends with another surprise: the missing Uncle John's Band ending is supplied, coming out of the Shakedown encore, so that Uncle John's Band frames the set.

This second set has a few flaws, notably Bobby's laughable premature entrance into the final verse of Estimated Prophet. Nonetheless, it is one of the most inspired and experimental sets of recent years.

12-28-79 Oakland Coliseum - Rob Bertrando

While the 26th may have more unusual jamming, this show has some of the most seamless performances of Dead "standards" you will ever hear. I thought the first set was really laid-back at the time, and listening to the tape confirms it as one of the most "mellow" Dead sets imaginable. The second set, though, is almost unbelievable in the quality of the performance. Certainly the best Alabama ever opens things up, soon followed by a virtually error-free Terrapin; this is also one of the longest and jammiest Terrapins. Playin is a real tour-de-force, among the finest I know. The drums/space was pretty standard, but Uncle John's brings things back to the highest level again. From then on, it's one show closer after another, right through two encores (even Saturday night on a Friday).

06-07, 08-80 Folsom Field - Jeff Silberman

Celebrating their 15th anniversary in the Rocky Mountains during a summer weekend, expectations were naturally running as high as the altitude. Because Warren Zevon was the opening act both afternoons, we felt sure that we would get Werewolves Of London. But, alas, it was not to be. Although expectations were unfulfilled, there was a brief moment on the second day when the boys more than satisfied our high hopes. After a New Jersian introduction by John Scherr, "Here's to another fifteen years," Phil took stage center and commanded the boys into Uncle John's Band. Phil led the way with a bass intro that rumbled through the mountains. The Uncle John's jam could very well be one of the best of our time. The segue into Playing In The Band was truly unexpected. Playin was phenomenal and led back into Uncle John's. As you might imagine, the rest of the afternoon did not regain that highlight; however, the first-set opener will forever be twenty of the most precious minutes of Grateful Dead time.

06-12-80 Portland - Gary Ross

I have rarely heard a crowd get as worked up as these people in Portland were during the second set of this show — they were in a frenzy! I can't say that I blame them, because the set kicks off with sizzling versions of Scarlet> Fire and Estimated Prophet. The Estimated jam between the verses is just spectacular, the best I've ever heard. Mt. St. Helen wasn't the only thing erupting that night. This show was hot!

06-12-80 Portland - Don Wolfe & Paul Scotton

The Coliseum was the basketball palace for the Portland Trailblazers and was not known for good acoustics. Nevertheless Healy did all he could and the band smoked the second set which began with Drumz and led into a Scarlet/Fire like we all dream about. After Scarlet/Fire, Bobby went up to the microphone and said something like "I guess she blew again." Most of us weren't sure if Mt. St. Helens had gone off again or if this was just a joke; we were still much in the grip of the magic we had just heard.

When the show was over and we all started filing out the doors, the sky was overcast and it was raining lightly. No big deal, this was Portland. But after a little while, it changed. This was not the usual Portland rain; it was volcanic ash falling, dusting everything with fine light gray powder. Being locals, we abandoned our car (volcanic ash is death to carburators, valves, and pistons) and set out homeward with handkerchiefs over our mouths and noses to keep out the ash (lungs don't care much for ash either). Walking in it was a little like walking in a snowfall, with sounds muffled and deserted streets, but the air was warm and the stuff wouldn't melt. Every step was an adventure; setting down your foot raised a small ash cloud around your toes. We had no idea whether we would get dusted or buried, but we "knew" history was in the making and that the Dead had done it. Of course the eruption had happened during Fire On the Mountain, and the Dead had worked another mystical conjunction with the forces of nature.

06-19.21-80 Alaska - Don Wolfe and Paul Scotton

Summer solstice in the land of the midnight sun. We went straight from the Northwest leg of the summer tour (Portland, Seattle, Spokane) to Anchorage figuring that we would see a little of Alaska as well. After camping in the rain for a few days, we decided to dry out and stayed in a little motel, already brimming with other Deadheads, managed by a guy who had retired from the Metropolitan Opera in New York. After having read articles in the local paper and seen coverage on the local TV stations warning that "The Dead Were Coming, The Dead Were Coming," he was intrigued as to what this was all about. Growing pot for personal use was still legal at this time in Alaska and he invited us into his place for Drambuie and a smoke while we gave him a quick orientation on basic Grateful Dead. I guess this conversation stuck, for we were to see him again later.

The auditorium couldn't have had more than1,000 seats. Given that it was summer and a small place with all those people dancing, all three shows were hot and steamy. (Now it wasn't as humid as MacArthur Court in Eugene in '81 when the humidity was so high and so much water had condensed on the ceiling that it actually started to "rain" onto the main floor, but it was hot to the point that much of the crowd went shirtless.) The crowd was a mix of diehard Deadheads from the lower 48 and curious local newcomers.

The third show, solstice night, began with a manic "Sugaree" and we were off and running. Now, although we were in different seats every night, we sat next to the same people. I don't know whose idea it was to let out tickets this way, but it got to be both funny and fun. On our left a guy named Kelly from Corvallis, who we didn't know until these shows, had been shouting for "Lazy Lightning" since the first song of the first night. So, when it fell out in the first set we were all more than ready and it was a fine one.

At the break we all stepped outside (yes, there were such privileges) and who should we run into but the manager from our motel. Now someone had lit this fellow pretty well and he was just beaming. He wanted to know why we hadn't told him the music was going to be this good and then invited us to smoke a joint. As we were standing around in the daylight at 10 PM or whatever it was, an officer of the Anchorage police, sporting a crew cut and in full uniform, strode up to us and asked about our pot. Whoever had brought it out for us gave some explanation or other and then the cop began to offer growing hints. Yes this was when Alaska was still sane and pot was legal, but for those of us from out of state, this a little bizarre. So when the second set opened with "Feel Like a Stranger" we couldn't have agreed more. "Samson and Delilah" inspired images of a snake pit, the music was so slick and sinuous, and if anyone hadn't got "it" before, they sure did now. There were a group of sorority girls from the local university with an older chaperone sitting in front of us. All night they had tried to sit quietly, but somewhere in the second set they gave up all pretenses and began dancing and whooping along with the rest of us. The show ended with "Brokedown Palace," which sent us all off into the summer night, still light outside when we walked out around midnight.

07-01-80 San Diego Sports Arena - Mike Dolgushkin

A friend of mine saw the entire June 1980 tour and taped every show. This is my favorite. Why, you ask? Lazy Lightning'> Supplication and China Cat> Rider, that's why. The jams during these sequences are so long, so well played and so... unusual that after hearing them for the first time I thought "I don't care what anyone says, these guys haven't lost it!"

08-16-80 Mississippi River Festival - Tom Van Sant

When it comes to collecting tapes, most everybody will tell you they prefer soundboards to audience recordings. But good audience tapes have something even the best boards don't — the crowd. As band members often say, they get off even more when the crowd connects with the music. The ebb and flow of the crowd during a jam can be nearly as exciting as the jam itself.

Witness this soggy August evening. For the reasons just described, I count this as the definitive China Cat> I Know You Rider. It follows the second set-opening C.C.Rider, and catches everyone present in a big fat groove. As the transition between songs gains more momentum, so do the concertgoers — clapping, whooping and giving back as good as they're getting. As the energized jam hits its crescendo the crowd peaks as well, and the musicians are able to sustain the heightened energy throughout all of "Rider." Garcia's playing is superb, and both he and Bobby sing their verses as powerfully as I've ever heard. The entire amphitheater becomes a mass celebration, and it's not just the band who are responsible. This is not a rare event at a Grateful Dead show, but somehow an audience recording captures the moment in a way no soundboard could.

In addition to that wonderful moment, this concert features a strong first set, including a great version of Alabama Getaway! The last part of the show spots Sugar Magnolia and an Iko Iko> Saturday Night double encore. Lightning bolts that strike nearby during the concert get lots of crowd reaction (especially during Deal), and when the band starts up Ship of Fools during a heavy cloudburst there's a big roar — a ship of fools, indeed! I've never seen or heard a soundboard copy of this concert, but I don't necessarily want to — it might lose something in the translation.

09-02-80 Rochester - Jeff Silberman

What does September 2, 1980 mean to you? Well, if you just happened to be happening at the War Memorial in Rochester, New York that night, that date would have new meaning.

It all began on the rather inconspicuous note of Minglewood Blues, but, to our delight, the tune was the only thing ordinary. The percussion punctuating the beat was unlike anything I had heard before. Instinctively, the crowd suspected that something was going on. Those suspicions were confirmed — Sugaree. Now, I must confess that I never met a Sugaree that I didn't like, but this version made the previous ones I had heard PALE by comparison! The soaring crescendos carried me back to that venerable year of 1977. This version definitely ranks; no question about it. Sugaree slipped into a galloping El Paso, which for my money is the cowboy song of choice. By now it was clear — this's goin' b'hot — the only question — how hot? But so as not to work us into a frenzy, Jerry subdued his legions with an endearing Friend Of The Devil. Mr. Wonderful, never to be outdone, stirred up a happy-go-lucky It's All Over Now. Already matters were copacetic, but the next tune on the hit parade astounded all. Would you believe China Cat> I Know You Rider? (Now that you are all DeadBased, see for yourself the last time the boys played this medley in the middle of the first set.) After an exceptionally hot go-for-it, another surprise. The band tacked on a second medley — Lost Sailor> Circumstance. Those of us who caught the bus to the show that night were wondering if our memories had lapsed during the intermission, but calmer heads cautioned that the break was yet to come. Finally, the fatman jumped into a rousing Don't Ease Me In to close the set in good measure.

During the break there was only one thought for those in NEED — who's got 'em for Springfield? Those who HAD milled in anticipation.

Just like the proverbial calm before the storm, the set opened with Althea, C.C.Rider, and Ship of Fools. Next, the boys bounced into a reverent Estimated Prophet. I've always judged an Estimated by its jam, and if anyone can find me a more soaring Estimated, I'll move to California. Estimated eased into a thundering Terrapin, which segued into Playing. When Playing finally petered out, the Rhythm Devils took up the slack and gave the boys a well-deserved rest.

When they made their return, the atmosphere was uncharacteristically relaxed; a long, noodling space and then — Aiko. Oh, sure, you're thinking, what's the big deal. Well, that's now, but back then Aiko was AIKO!. Most of us had never heard it before so it was a real treat. But, as I have later discovered, this Aiko was not the kind of Aiko most of us have come to know and love. This version was laid back: I mean, we're talking waaaay back. The crowd responded by clapping in time; the whole scene was very tribal, really. When the beat stopped, and as we turned to each other to make remarks, what surprised us all was that first ringing note of Morning Dew. I don't know about you, but I'm deadicated because I live for the unexpected, and, friends, there wasn't a soul among us who wasn't slack-jawed. Because words alone can't do it justice, I won't describe the moment. You just had to have been there. Suffice it to say, I'll never see another quite like it. (Even if I did, I wouldn't admit it!) Exhausted, the band dropped into a climactic Sugar Magnolia.

This show was one that reinforces the belief, sometimes doubted, that the boys haven't lost their chops, for on that night those guys stopped playing music and started making magic.

09-06-80 Lewiston - John W. Scott

A wonderful concert to have attended, and a very worthwhile tape to collect. Outdoor concerts on the East Coast are chancy at best. This one was close to perfect: a hot sunny day, a beautiful end to the summer in Maine.

The first set was somewhat unremarkable, other than it was lengthy (about105 minutes), containing a long, well-jammed Sugaree, a nice slow Friend Of The Devil, and a very good China> Rider.

The second set was launched with a twelve-minute Shakedown. This excellent version belies my impression that Shakedown only really "belongs" in inner city concerts. The Sailor> Saint is respectable, but the best was still to come.

A guitar duet, almost acoustic in quality, rose from the tunings, and bloomed into a beautifully elegant introduction for Playin. This introduction had an Egyptian flavor, and foretold of the dreamy, wandering jams within. Seldom interrupted by vocals, these jams created one of the most completely explored versions of Playin In The Band that I have heard.

Playin started toward the drum solo and then, instead, popped into Uncle John's Band. A joyous occasion. Somehow this song always has an end-of-summer, sweet nostalgia to it. The choice was so perfect that they could have played a mediocre version and the crowd would still have loved it. Fortunately, the execution was as impressive as their selection. Uncle John's Band was at its bubbly best with solid vocals throughout and an excellent climactic jam.

A solid NFA, driven by drums, yielded the first East Coast Wheel since May of 1977. The reprises of Uncle John's Band and Playin were given the time and respect that they deserve. Closing up the set was a bouncy version of Sugar Magnolia (another golden-rays-of-summer tune).

Saturday Night, not unexpected, showed us just how much Bob Weir had been giving for this concert as it finally trashed his voice completely. He was lucky to finish the song, and luckier still that the Warfield stand was weeks away, giving ample time for recuperation. Brokedown Palace provided an appropriately reflective finale — a fine way to close the summer and welcome the fall, both for the crowd and for the band.

10-04-80 Warfield Theatre - Mike Dolgushkin

This was my favorite of the three shows that I saw. The acoustic set opened with Deep Elem followed by Race is On. The first electric set featured a smokin' Passenger and a pretty High Time. In the second electric set Estimated was particularly powerful, and the songs after the drums were very strong, especially Miracle> Johnny B. Goode to close, and then Uncle John's Band for the encore. WOW!

10-14-80 Fox Warfield - Jay Sherrerd

The closing night of the great Warfield run was certainly an all-around favorite — for the music, for the scene, and for its place in GD history! First, a little background: by the Alaska shows in June, the rumors were rampant that the Dead were going to play an extended run at the beautiful 2,200-seat Warfield Theater in San Francisco, including acoustic sets, which they hadn't done in ten years (with insignificant exceptions). When tickets went on sale for a twelve-night run, the hottest ticket was for the final show. Soon after the initial sale, however, they added another three nights, and everyone scrambled for those tickets. Even though we didn't know for sure there would be an acoustic set, we were still excited and those of us who had tickets for every show made color-coded seating charts to keep track of where we'd be as the run progressed. Three shows, one night off, two shows, one night off, then another three shows, and so on. Fifteen shows in 20 nights... what a life!

As we filed in for the first night (09/25/80), a quick look at the stage confirmed our excited hopes as we saw stools and mics set up for an acoustic set (even a harpsichord, for China Doll as it turned out!). After all those years of having a reasonable expectation of what they might play, tonight we had a blank slate. First song — acoustic Birdsong, which hadn't been played in years and even then only electric. And on they came — All Around this World, Dark Hollow, Monkey and the Engineer — we were ecstatic to hear songs most of us had only heard on tapes. As the shows progressed they broke out other acoustic tidbits, including Cassidy and Iko-Iko (then so rare it was almost mythical — remember all those stickers?)

A couple of nights I volunteered to usher for BGP (they use Cal students) and was able to get in early, sit in the front row of the balcony and watch the acoustic soundchecks. And each night, two full electric sets after the acoustic set! As a bonus, three sets means two intermissions to mingle in the very lively bar, or to hang out in the ornate lobby amid the 60's San Francisco memorabilia that Bill Graham had collected and displayed. Words cannot describe the fun we had during those three weeks!

Which brings us to the closing night. What anticipation! We didn't have very good seats, but I had learned that the best seats in the house were in the first couple of rows of the balcony, which looked down on the stage and were directly across from the sound system, which was suspended off the stage. So I sat in the center aisle, first row of the balcony, during the beginning of the acoustic set. I knew the usher wouldn't let me sit in the aisle but I thought I'd see a few songs. As the usher came and was asking me to leave, though, a woman in the seat next to me got up, whispered that she was going backstage and I could have her seat. It was Jane Fonda!

Needless to say, the show was an incredible close-out to an incredible run. The acoustic set was one of the best of all (although not as good as New Years Eve two months later), ending with an emphatic, beautiful Ripple which had come to be our anthem for the Warfield. The first electric set was second-set caliber, especially when it ended with a spectacular Let it Grow -> Wheel -> Music Never Stopped! (Sure fooled those who were heading to the bar at the closing notes of Let it Grow.) And it just got better in the last set, which was an all-time classic. Scarlet -> Fire, Estimated, Terrapin and Playin' led into the drumz, then Miracle, Uncle John's, Morning Dew, Playin' Reprise and Good Lovin! (Remember, Uncle John's was rare back then — a good UJB could make a show in itself.)

I guess it was in the second encore (Brokedown, of course) when the ushers passed plastic champagne glasses down the rows, quickly followed by plastic milk jugs filled with champagne. If memory serves me, which it doesn't so well, it was Billy's birthday or something and Bill Graham wheeled a big cake out while we sang to him. Is that right? I do remember that the band came out and Bill Graham had some words to say while we held our champagne glasses aloft in a toast, tears on our cheeks. After all the clapping, dancing and screaming, sometimes all you can do is silently acknowledge the wonderful gift that the boys — and Bill Graham — had given us. And thanks to Jane Fonda for the best seat in the house!

10-31-80 Radio City Music Hall - John W. Scott

Radio City is, without a doubt, the finest indoor venue that I have ever been privileged to see the Grateful Dead. The appointments are so beautiful that I found myself standing straighter. They foster an air of respect and of serious musicianship.

As the show opens, Phil runs into equipment hassles so the band starts Heaven Help The Fool without him. The result is beautiful, displaying impressive jams on a seldom played song. Sage & Spirit, once it gains momentum, demonstrates a similar instrumental virtuosity. These two vocaless gems seem destined to overshadow any other acoustic possibilities. Indeed, the next three songs, while well executed, pale by comparison. The Dead then rob the first electric set of two of the more exciting possibilities by playing both Cassidy and Bird Song. They manage to atone for this inconsideration by playing excellent acoustic versions. They are both scorchers, with particularly fine closing jams.

The first electric set was somewhat average. Jack Straw and Cold Rain have their moments and by themselves make the set well worth the listening. Also worthy of attention is the closing Deal.

The second electric set starts slowly with an average Don't Ease followed by a decent Sailor> Saint. An upbeat Franklin's Tower is easily the best moment before the drums with Jerry's lightning fingers leading the way. This song could have handled tougher competition. Space is rarely a highlight for me. This night was exceptional, however, including a particularly smooth, and surprising transition into Fire On The Mountain. Hearing Fire here makes one wonder whether it might not do well by being separated from its Scarlet counterpart more often.

While this show was somewhat uneven, the highlights and the magical environment made this a very special event. Do not accept the video as a substitute for audio tapes. The acoustic set has been spliced together with footage from the previous night, neglecting some of the best songs. The next set is similarly butchered. How anyone could have cut Jack Straw or Cold Rain in favor of Me & My Uncle is beyond me. The video is still worth buying, but it does not accurately represent the night in question.

11-30-80 Fox Theater, Atlanta - Doug Foust

I was fortunate, in my lifetime, to have had the good fortune of reaching 344 "GD" shows (351 if you include "JGB" shows) and survived to tell my story. I would say that many of these shows (at least 30-40) qualify for top ten status. The '84 Greek Dark Star and the 83' Compton Terrace Help on the way are up there, but by far my favorite show has to easily be the Fox Theater show in November '80. I have always been amazed that this show has never been written up as one of the greats that I have seen before. I suppose that I only have myself to blame for that!

This show was my 4th and my 1st as a freshman in college. This venue holds 3,500-4,500 people. A wonderfully small place which probably explains the fact that it has somehow been missed by many who want to know about the best of the best. I was in school in Wilmington, NC at the time but I was home in Charlotte, NC for the Thanksgiving holidays so we drove the 3-1/2 hrs and got to Atlanta with plenty of time to spare. This was quite an event because you would have thought it was Holloween the way everyone was extra dressed in exotic clothing. The hotel across the street was the place to be before the show. The Fox is a very ornate venue with a foyer of Egyptian and Middle Eastern Decor.

Every song was exactly the one I wanted to hear at the time. The sound is the best of any other venue, though the Greeks are a close second. Bottom line, the best Scarlet Begonias that I've ever personally seen. The very long spacy Playin', the drums and space - space that was so delicate and sweat into the beautiful "Wheel" and slowest most gentle China doll. The entire second set was out of this world. The encore was the 15-20 min. Uncle John's Band with Jerry just sooo blistering I'm still recovering from the experience.

I would only say that I have attempted to impart to you the fact that every aspect of this show was amazing. I suggest that you get out a DeadBase and look at the set list and know that every song on that list was played as good as you will ever see it. The only other comment I will make is that everyone in the place accept a few unfortunate souls were brought to that special place most folks never get to, some lucky few experience once in a lifetime, but that deadheads through the power of Jerry and the boys were whisked off to many times.

12-28-80 Oakland Auditorium - Robin Nixon

Besides my overall memory of what a great show this was, I had a bizarre hallucination during Terrapin. As the song reached the crescendo, I swore the band had just arrived from somewhere in space. I don't know if it was the lighting, the music, or my state of mind, but the entire stage appeared as a spaceship reaching a landing and the band members glowed fantastically in wild colors. The Dead are famous for these kinds of special effects, aren't they??

03-07-81 Cole Field House - Simon Friedman

The Bird Song in the first set is 18 minutes long and is a must for all Jerry freaks.

03-09-81 Madison Square Garden - Peter Lavezzoli

This show is one of the strongest from the 80s, and my favorite from the benchmark year of 1981. 3-9-81 has an edge and intensity that is worlds away from the relatively lackluster acoustic/electric shows from Radio City just five months earlier. The band opens with a burning Stranger, with Garcia's guitar so loud and angry in the mix that the listener will be stopped in their tracks by the sheer force of it. Jerry continues to be dominant and powerful with Althea> CC Rider. Bobby's vocals on the latter simply growl with emotion. Ramble On is another searing performance from Jerry. His solo here is so biting and prominent, loud and forceful, that one begins to wonder what is on his mind this evening! His vocals are equally powerful, and this is one of the greatest versions of Ramble On. El Paso, Deep Elem, and BIODTL all continue this trend: the band on fire, Garcia leading the way with an angry and powerful edge. His intensity cools down for Bird Song, but only somewhat: this is one of the heavier versions, with lots of impressive jamming and explosive peaks. The set closing Minglewood features Brent sing a pitch-bend on his synthesizer to sound like Eddie Van Halen on lead! Strange...

There is no denying the power of this China> Rider. The jam between songs is stretched out to epic proportions before Jerry is ready to relent, and Rider itself continues to reach explosive peaks. Samson comes right on Rider's heels, and this is another scorcher. This band is completely on fire, nothing about this show is run-of-the-mill. Even Ship of Fools is given a poignant and powerful treatment by Jerry. Estimated is sinister and brooding, well developed in the jam as it reluctantly surrenders to Uncle John's Band, which is a beautiful contrast of emotion. UJB takes its time winding its way into Drums, but not before we hear a brief China Doll tease.

After an exciting Drums and Space, we get one of the most powerful post-retirement versions of Other One. This is one of the high points of the show. Phil drops four rolling bombs during the course of the song, and Jerry's leads are simply burning with psychedelic fury. This is raw power. Another perfect contrast of feeling, Other One winds down perfectly into one of the most heart-wrenching versions of Stella Blue ever. This is pure Jerry at his soulful best. As the closing jam builds to a peak, there is a brief tease of the Wheel before Bobby launches the band into Good Lovin, which tears the roof off Madison Square Garden.

Even US Blues is unusually powerful. This show deserves much wider circulation and praise. After the low energy ups and downs of the Radio City run, this is more like it. One of the best whole shows of the 80s.

03-24-81 Rainbow Theatre - Robin Nixon

What a week! I'd never been to England before and when I heard the Dead were playing in London I decided to go for it. Following the band has always been the best excuse to travel. Arriving a day before the first show, the weather was exactly what you'd expect: cool, cloudy and grey, with a misty rain in the air. It didn't change the entire week. We checked into our bed and breakfast inn and then toured around town using the Tube (London's transit system). The owners of the inn were friendly folk, thrilled with the recent engagement of Charles to Lady Di and repeatedly telling us that Rex Harrison lived down the lane. They awoke us each morning bright and early for breakfast. It was perfect to be forced out of bed and briefed with ideas for sightseeing. Otherwise, I'm sure we would have slept the days away until showtime.

The first three shows were very well played, but the 03/24/81 show, on the eve of my 25th birthday, was my favorite. We got there early and saved places on the rail right in front of Garcia. The theater was pretty small with general admission on the floor and seats in the balcony. The shows were sold out and a bit crowded, but the feelings between everyone were warm and friendly. The band finally came out, opening with a killer Mississippi Half Step> Franklin's Tower. Half Step was really fun and the playing and singing were excellent right from the start. Franklin's at a birthday show is appropriate with its "in another time's forgotten space, your eyes looked from your mother's face," and they've played it at my birthday shows at least 3 or 4 times. The place was hopping by now, and of course everyone was dancing like crazy. The set stayed hot through BIODTL> Greatest Story, Row Jimmy, and Me & My Uncle> Big River. Then they took some time to tune up and I heard the sweetest notes leading into High Time. Jerry sang and played so beautifully I was mesmerized. Then Weir played a smokin' Rooster and the boys wrapped the set up with dynamite versions of China Cat> Rider.

During the break I took time to space out at the stars on the ceiling. The Rainbow had constellations on the ceiling with little lights that appeared to flicker off and on. Before long the Dead were back, kicking off the second set with a powerful Shakedown, followed by a spacey, ephemeral Sailor> a dancing Saint. The He's Gone was another high point of the show. Jerry was so into it, especially during the soulful "o-o-o-" moaning part of the song that I melted completely. Good drums followed, and then a rockin' Wheel. We were all moving, shaking, and singing the chorus for Truckin, then mellowed out during Wharf Rat. Around> Good Lovin to close the show left us all with dancing feet and smiling faces. They came back with the sad lullaby Brokedown Palace to end the show, and the run at the Rainbow.

The whole experience of touring England by day and seeing the Dead by night will never be forgotten. On our day off we visited Stonehenge and coincidentally, when we moved to San Francisco that summer, one of the first Deadheads we met had taken the same tour bus that day. We knew it because it was the one where we had to pull over on the way home, because countryside schoolboys were bombarding the bus with rocks. It's a small world.

05-05-81 Glens Falls - Stu Nixon

Although it was a standing-on-chairs affair, I remember hearing my favorite version of Uncle John's Band that night in upstate New York. The transition out of the space was exceptionally sweet, reminding me of the song of the humpback whales in parts, and lead into one of the best Uncle John's intros you'd ever want to hear. Equally amazing were the TWO jams between verses later on. If a song has one jam like this it would be great, but TWO is unbelievable. If you have the tape, check it out again, and see what you think.

05-06-81 Nassau Coliseum - Dick Latvala

This is the big one! It contains one of the best and most thrilling jams in the last 15 years (more on this later). Cassidy is one of the best versions I've ever heard. Let It Grow> Deal closes the first set and is equally worthy of one's attention.

The second set starts well enough, but after He's Gone (dedicated to Bobby Sands) we get something that I don't believe has ever occurred before: a pure jam that lasts about 15-20 minutes and contains the most unbelievable playing. It starts with the clearest example of Caution (without words, of course!) that we have heard since 10/19/74 at Winterland, lasting for about five minutes. Then things "relax" before diving into another one of the most unique and desirable segments in Dead History: The Spanish Theme.

This ends the obvious highlights of the show, but what follows is also very exciting, including a great version of Goin Down The Road Feelin Bad. The Other One is good, but not great as in 10/21/78, 08/13/79, 12/28/80, 03/09/81, etc..

05-16-81 Cornell - John W. Scott

The Dead were ON this night — every song flows easily and has that little extra bit of effort that makes a special show. The second set opens with one of the all-time great Shakedowns: nice, long, and steady with lots of jamming. The following Bertha is also impressive: fast, tight, and hot.

After the Dead finish a solid Sailor> Saint, a jam builds from nothing but applause. It starts with a few bars that sound like L.A. Woman, but soon converts to a powerful Spanish Jam. With the ensuing Space we get a full forty-five minutes of music before the drum solo. Another special jam follows Truckin as the Dead pick up on the Nobody's Fault theme. An Uncle John's encore is the icing on the cake.

08-31-81 Aladdin Theatre - Mike Dolgushkin

It seemed like a good idea. "Wow, the Dead are playing Vegas on my birthday. Let's go!" So, my friend Michael Fitzpatrick and I flew down there, and shortly discovered that there's nothing to do in Las Vegas except drink and gamble, since it's too hot to go outside. (The spectacle of hordes of Deadheads taking over a casino was amusing.) After we lost a pile of money playing the slots, we got bored real quick. Jerry and Mickey arriving in their limo offered a brief respite, but it wasn't until later that we discovered where they put the Deadheads that were staying at the hotel. After all that, the show made it all worth it.

They started off with a hot Stranger followed by Jack A Roe. Let it Grow capped the first set off nicely. The second set was uniformly strong, featuring Sailor> Saint, Scarlet> Fire, and Playin. After drums we got our first Tight Pants Blues (hah!) followed by the Morning Dew I'd been hoping for.

After the show, they had set up barriers diverting us outside since they didn't want us pouring back into the casino right away. We thought, since we had pissed our return plane tickets away playing the slots, that there would be plenty of people heading back to the Bay Area. There were, but nobody had room in their car. So, after seeing the bright lights and giant cockroaches of Las Vegas, we settled for a ride to Santa Monica. Much hitchhiking brought us to Santa Barbara, where we got a ride to San Jose. During our ride we heard Deal from 10/04/80 on the radio, and that's how we knew that Dead Set was out.

08-31-81 Aladdin Theatre - Valerie Stevenson

Hitchhiked from smelLA, took hours just to get outside of LA, then got a ride from a trucker all the way. Arrived at the Aladdin Hotel & Theater the day before the show with $2 in my pocket, sat down at Table No. 23 and wagered my $2 on a hand of black jack. Didn't leave the table for 36 hours, they had to pry me away to go into the show (a mere 50' from the table, if that). Had pockets full of chips, I realized while I was in the show.

The theater was gorgeous and sound equally wonderful. When the show ended they funneled the crowd into the casino as they do for all shows in Vegas... for some reason...BOOOOOOMMMMMMM!!!!!!... you had a casino filled with hundreds of TR*PP*NG (buy a vowel) Dead Heads who starting playing whatever. No one seemed to care about winning or losing, everyone was having fun. The bit bosses had a very hard time handling this. I returned to Table No. 23 with a group of my compadres and wound up spending four wonderful days in Vegas. I hitchhiked back to LA with just a few dollars in my pocket and many incredible memories forever etched in my brain, as though it were just yesterday. A wedding, the wallpaper, my first tank at a show and the wallpaper, another world.....And so it goes.....

09-12-81 Greek - Simon Friedman

This show gets my vote as the best of that underrated year 1981. Almost every tune in the first set has that something extra, from the smooth-as-silk Shakedown to a very fine China> Rider. Bird Song is just phenomenal: straight-ahead and upbeat all the way, as close to jazz as the band gets. El Paso is a welcome change from the scores of sound-alike versions out there, thanks to Garcia's more active than usual role. This set almost fills a 90-minute tape.

The second set is a long one as well. It begins with a tremendous Scarlet> Fire, featuring an explosive climax before the final Scarlet reprise riff. C.C.Rider is one of the worst things to happen to a second set, but it is over soon enough, supplanted by a superb Estimated Prophet. The jam at the end is incredible, and contains some of the most creative playing by Weir that I've ever heard.

All of the ingredients that helped create many great versions of Eyes of the World in 1981 are in this one: the Music Never Stopped derived intro, long and powerful jamming between the verses, and a long, exploratory jam after the last verse. This version realizes what the band was shooting for all year, especially during the unbelievable jam before Drums. It builds and builds until Jerry seems to take off from the rest of the band and plays like he's possessed, leading into a space that's way out there.

The post-drums set is, as often is the case, more ordinary, but still strong. And having two well-selected encores, Good Lovin and the recently revived Baby Blue, is a real treat.

09-26-81 Buffalo - John W. Scott

While the Dead only played three shows on the East Coast this fall, they made up for quantity with quality on this night. As memory serves (I only have the second set on tape) the opening Shakedown was hot, and especially poignant as we had driven through some decaying sections of town to get to the show.

The meat of the show is to be found in the second set before the drums. This has to be one of the most spontaneous and interesting song groupings from this year: Playin> Bertha> Estimated> GDTRFB — each is exciting and unique. The Morning Dew is respectable, but still somewhat overshadowed by the earlier jamming.

10-15, 16-81 Melk Weg - Robert A. Minkin

The highlight of my Grateful Dead concert career took place on two nights in Amsterdam, Holland, October 1981.

Dateline: Russelsheim, Germany, October 13th — The Dead just finished their encore and their manager Rock Scully announced from the stage that the next two scheduled shows in Nancy and Frejus, France were cancelled. The tour was to resume in Paris on the 17th. We knew better. "We" being the handful of Americans who came over for the tour. Rumor had it that the Dead, instead of taking a few nights off were to play in Amsterdam's famed Melkweg (or Milkyway) club.

A few days earlier, on the night off between the Bremen and Munich shows, Jerry and Bob dropped by the Melkweg and played a surprise acoustic set. Unfortunately for me, I was on a night train, Munich bound.

Mannheim, Germany, October 14th — After a cold night of trying to sleep in a VW camper owned by a nice fellow named Marcus, I split from my little group to train it to Amsterdam. The rest of my newfound friends were going to hitch there.

Amsterdam, Holland, October 15th — This must be heaven. Could it really be that the Dead were going to play in this tiny room?

Two hours before showtime and a crowd was gathering. Since there were no advance ticket sales and save for the scattered "OOPS" posters in Amsterdam's Leidplein district, no advance notice either. It was first come, first serve at the door. Ticket price worked out to about seven bucks. After they finally let us in I explored the myriad of rooms before planting myself stage side for picture taking.

Cindy Peress, an acoustic blues guitarist opened the show at about 10:00. Her set was well received. At 11:00, the Dead came onstage after squeezing through the audience to get there. Since most of the band's equipment was on its way to Paris, they played borrowed instruments. Jerry sported a Strat styled Yamaha 1000 sunburst guitar and Weir, a white Fender Telecaster. Billy and Mickey's massive drum ensemble was missing, leaving them with a simpler drum arrangement.

Phil started clowning over the PA saying "Oooooops, Oooooops" and that this was to be an informal evening.

That night's show featured some old favorites plus a few surprises. Brent's Far From Me made a reappearance after a year's hiatus. Spoonful was performed by the Dead for the first time, sandwiched between He's Gone and Drums. Phil then took an extended solo that wound into a scorching, hard driving Other One. The set ended rock n' roll style with Around and Around> Johnny B. Goode. The show ended (did it really) with Jerry singing, It's All Over Now Baby Blue. The night ended for me racing through Amsterdam on foot barely making it back to my hostel before they locked the doors for the night.

Amsterdam, Holland, October 16th — Spent the day exploring the city: the Rijksmuseum, Rembrandt's Nightwatch, Van Gogh Museum, Anne Frank's house, the canals and cafes.

That evening, back on line for the second show. Word must have got out that the Dead were in town because the club was packed that night, about 400 people inside. Cindy Paris warmed the crowd up once again. When the Dead came onstage, Bob was welcomed with a bouquet of daisies. We also sang him Happy Birthday to which Jerry replied, "touching, touching."

The band opened with (appropriately) On the Road Again, acoustic, Jerry and Bob both standing as the band played. The audience and band were getting off on the intimate atmosphere with between song banter and beaming smiles as they played. They knew what they were doing to us, and we gave it back to them. This was raw Grateful Dead, stripped to the essentials.

There were many amusing moments such as a girl who jumped onstage and writhed on Phil. He sent her off with a reverberating note over to Jerry who gave her a polite "hello" before she was zapped away.

The second set was very electric.

It was Bob's night as they opened with Playing in the Band. Never before Dead renditions of Hully Gully and Gloria were performed. During the jam after Gloria, an old familiar melody was heard and Bob haltingly sang, "without a warning, you broke my heart." They played a kickass Lovelight, almost a decade after it was last performed with Pigpen.

There was no encore that night, none was needed. They were literally dripping wet.

The houselights came on at 2:00 am and Rock Scully stepped onstage and told us, " This was a very special treat for us (the band) and a gift to us from you guys."

The Music Never Stopped — It was no point sleeping that morning, as we had to catch an early train to Paris for that night's show at the Hippodrome. But that's another story.

12-12-81 San Mateo - Mike Dolgushkin

I thought the Joan Baez set was good, but it became clear after awhile that the Dead wanted to cut loose behind her, and she thought they should be good little boys and be her back-up band. Anyway, the Dead and Joan were good together at this gig, and any time they do Oh Boy is okay in my book. After this we got a first set. I'd never heard an electric Deep Elem before, and Cold Rain was RIPPIN'!

12-31-81 Oakland Auditorium - Mary Eisenhart

When you listen to this show, picture everybody in the hall, about 8,000 of us, soaking wet. It rained for several hours before they let us in, and it was a rare person who had a scrap of dry skin or clothing. This, however, just seemed to intensify the experience of the show itself.

If you can, get at least Banks of the Ohio from Joan Baez's set; the Dead are backing her, and it's a nice return to their respective folk roots. Baez makes something of a flourish ("Maestro...") in introducing Garcia's solo — a reference to the Dance for Disarmament benefit a few weeks earlier in which she had unceremoniously cut his solo off, causing him not to return to the stage for the encore.

The Dead's set begins with a very hot Shakedown in which Garcia loses track of the words completely. The words get better and the show stays hot.

This, to me, is THE New Year's show, with Kesey's midnight antics leading into Iko> Playing> Terrapin in the second set, all amid a perfect frenzy of audience participation. By the time Garcia gets to the "Counting stars by candlelight" line, the whole hall is singing along with him as if our collective lives depended on it; it comes through quite clearly on audience tapes.

The third set starts with Dark Star in an all-too-rare appearance. It ends with Baby Blue and the culmination of what was later known as the Joan Baez Scare, with Baez taking it upon herself to take the stage, walk all over Jerry's vocals, and perform some bizarre dance onstage. A clear testimonial to incompatible styles, and a source of outraged commentary for months thereafter.

12-31-81 Oakland Auditorium - Mike Dolgushkin

As far as I know, this is the longest Dead show on record. They started at around nine and finished at about four. FOUR SETS. The second set was enhanced by Cold Rain and Snow. In the third set it was good to hear a Playin> Terrapin> Playin BEFORE the drums, and John Cipollina's guitar work afterward made it that much better. After the Dead's third set they left the stage without saying anything, so we were worried for a couple of seconds. Shortly Bill Graham assured us that there would be another set. And what a set it was! Dark Star sounded mystical. They attempted The Eleven in the middle, but couldn't quite hook it in. Dark Star into Bertha> Good Lovin was perfect.

02-17-82 Warfield Theatre - Mike Dolgushkin

The song list may not indicate this, but this was a great show. They did Women Are Smarter in the first set. During the break a woman sitting behind us said she thought the song was "The Women Are Smaller." During the Space Jerry did the "Tiger" for the first time in many years. Sugar Magnolia is my favorite ever.

03-13-82 Reno - Mike Dolgushkin

This is another underrated show. Most people like the next night in Davis better, but quite frankly, that show put me to sleep. A hot Minglewood> China Cat> Rider made the first set special. The whole second set was cookin' all the way through, although I wish they'd taken the Dear Prudence fake-out a little further. One thing I wonder about is why this place, referred to as a "coliseum" looked like an overgrown high school gym while the venue in Davis, described as a "recreation center" seemed more like a real concert hall.

04-03-82 The Scope - Bernie Bildman

I mention this only to point out the outstanding Scarlet> Fire jam, which stays in my mind as the most unusual transition between these two songs.

04-03-82 The Scope - Simon Friedman

Here's an instance of a typical songlist with unusual interpretations of commonly played tunes. Right before Fire on the Mountain is a few minutes where the rhythm slows down and the guitarists seems to hang in midair. The Eyes of the World is one little gem, totally unlike any other I've heard. The second and fourth beats are highly accented, creating a finger-poppin', jazzy rhythm. Garcia avoids his usual flurries of notes in favor of more thoughtful, beautiful constructed solo statements. It's a lovely, relaxed performance, yet with a strong underlying power.

This particular Not Fade Away reminds me how much I miss the early 1980's arrangement. The lead-up to the vocals is well developed, with playful variations of the rhythm and melody. Back in those days, one could never tell if the band would: 1) jam into another tune after the second verse; 2) do a vocal jam and then play another tune; 3) repeat the 1st verse and then a vocal jam, like they do today. In this case the band chooses option 2, with stunning effect. The interplay between Weir and Mydland's vocals and Garcia's playing is amazing, and they build a considerable tension, until Garcia breaks away with a tremendous chord. The vocalists return for more creative trade-offs with Garcia, followed by a graceful wind-down into Stella Blue. The subtlety and power here puts most modern-day set-closing Not Fade Aways to shame.

04-06-82 Spectrum - John W. Scott

This show lives up to its promising set list, ranking as one of my favorite shows from 1982. The first set is great, featuring fine versions of Cold Rain and Jack A Roe. A nice, solid Shakedown often promises an almost perfect second set. This time there is no almost about it. Throughout the second set there is a fine balance between the hot, unbridled jams and delicate, contemplative songs. We get a respectable Sailor> Saint and a prime Terrapin before the drums. Then the Dead unleash the post-drum beast that earns this show its position among the year's finest. Born from a long Space, a hot Truckin leads to a hotter Other One and on to a Szechuan (hot & sweet) Morning Dew. The expected plateau never comes. The Dead manage to carry this energy into Sugar Magnolia to close out the set. Baby Blue is the perfect choice for an encore, and the rendition matches those of the preceding songs.

04-08-82 Syracuse - John J. Wood

At the beginning of the second set, Jerry's amp gives out. This prompts Weir The Comedian to comment, "It looks like Jerry's wah-wah has given its all for rock and roll" Fortunately, the problems are resolved, and the band warms up to a full Funiculi Funicula before diving into Playin'. The NFA> Black Peter> Playin reprise is the most notable of the second set.

04-14-82 Glens Falls - Simon Friedman

The 1st set has some great moments, such as a hot Jackstraw opener and a somewhat laid-back Lazy Lightning/Supplication> Bertha closer. But the pre-drums 2nd set is where it's really at. China Cat> Rider is unusually long, close to Scarlet > Fire proportions. The jam is well-developed, with several discernible sections. Garcia's playing is quite melodic, sounding countryish in spots.

The Playing In The Band that follows contains some of the most mysterious, haunting, expansive, powerful, dynamic, emotional, and mindblowing Grateful Dead jamming that I have ever heard. You will never hear a version anything like this. Why it isn't widely recognized as one of the finest ever is beyond me. It's very out there, yet clearly based on the Playin theme. The band manages to move effortlessly from a wide-open, airy setting into a minute or so of amazingly hard-edged, dense, chordal madness, and then back out again. Weir shines throughout the performance, offering soaring, birdcall-like lines alongside Garcia's rapidfire runs. Words alone cannot convey the power and the beauty of the music. No Deadhead should be without it.

04-18-82 Hartford - John W. Scott

Hartford does not appear on most lists of favorite venues; however, having seen a number of excellent concerts there, I have a fondness for this civic center. This show is an obvious example of this special, sometimes perverse, East Coast chemistry. While the first set was largely forgettable, the second set was certainly the best that I saw in 1982, opening with Cold Rain, a personal favorite, and ensuring my contentment for the evening. "Gather round children it's time for your Sunday sermon now." The Dead then proceeded to test the year-old roof on the Civic Center with an enthusiastic Samson, to see if they could tear this whole building down (again). It seemed like they came pretty close. Things slowed down for a few minutes with Ship Of Fools, but picked right up again with a long, well-jammed Playin. The resulting space seemed headed for the drums, but veered into a long, upbeat Eyes Of The World instead. With an entirely satisfactory half-set behind us, we headed into the drums with anticipation.

Whatever we were hoping for, we were probably looking beyond the space, and none of us could have imagined what lay in store. I love surprises. Following the drums Phil displayed a new-found poetic talent in a tribute to the great San Francisco earthquake. The space featured some bizarre noises, gradually acquiring a beat and flavor reminiscent of the Egypt shows, when Phil stepped up to the microphone. "The Barbary coast 1906, the wickedest place in the world (maniacal laugh). A place(?) with sin and no salvation... Woo-ooh, lots of fun, hey!" Intense space break. The Egyptian beat returns. "Yeah, San Francisco the pearl of the Pacific. The jewwwel of the Ring of Fire. Hanging out and having fun until, until I say, I say, I say until, until that one fateful day." Earthquake space — absolutely incredible, filled with powerful statements from all the band members. The textures were more diverse and intent, more cohesive than in any of the standard spaces of the eighties. The enormity of the experience cannot be adequately represented on tape. "San Francisco in ruins." Even without the context provided, we would have gotten the picture. The Other One teases began and then Phil made his own thunderous announcement.

After Black Peter, Bobby cut off Jerry's attempt to revive Playin with a hot Sugar Magnolia, so Jerry slipped in a nice, spacey introduction to the Playin reprise before Sunshine Daydream. It worked out very neatly as both trailers were built nicely — an effective ending to a great evening of music.

05-21-82 Greek Theatre - Mary Eisenhart

Probably the shortest show of the year, the second set fits comfortably on a C-90 (a rarity for 1982). Somewhat to the amazement of my friends, if I could only have one tape, it would probably be that one.

For the lyrically-minded, and especially for the Uncle John's fan, it's one of the most perfect little second sets (right up to the galumphing, puppy-like arrival of Sugar Magnolia on the heels of one of those Black Peters you didn't think Garcia would survive) ever played. The transition between Playing and Uncle John is possibly my favorite piece of Grateful Dead music EVER, with apparently aimless exploratory noodling and then Garcia finding UJB and RUNNING with it in sweet, triumphant jubilation. It's beautifully played, and the explosive reaction of the audience when it suddenly realizes it's getting the first UJB in God knows how long is still very moving somehow.

07-17, 18-82 Ventura - Mike Dolgushkin

The evening of the 16th I caught a ride in Palo Alto with two nice young ladies, arriving at the campground in Ventura sometime after midnight. That year the camping was an enormous dirt lot right by the ocean. My friends set up their tent, I lay my sleeping bag down outside. It was very comfortable. In the morning we went into town to have breakfast, then spent a couple hours on the beach. I went to the show on my own, I had my sleeping bag and other stuff with me. Arriving at the gate I asked the security person if there was someplace I could check my things in. He said, "I'm afraid not, you'll just have to bring it in with you." It didn't even get searched. Wow. (Inside I saw one guy take his pants off, he had six beers strapped to his legs!)

I found my friends in the semi-legal tapers section. The first set was good, but the obvious highlight was Truckin' picking up where Tennessee left off! I didn't see another Truckin' in the first set until 1990! Truckin' went into its jam; it soon became obvious that the band hadn't the foggiest idea of where to take it. I heard hints of The Other One (now THAT would have been something!) but Bobby soon came up with a spur of the moment vocal reprise and the set ended.

The second set started off with a good Playin the segued unexpectedly into China Cat> Rider, then into Estimated Prophet before drums. A nice sequence indeed. Post-drums was unremarkable by comparison, except for the way they brought things back to the Playin' reprise after The Wheel.

After the show there was a campfire going on outside, complete with live music and, yes, marshmallow toasting. A scantily clad woman was running around checking out the men in the crowd. She picked out one guy who responded with amazement. "What? ME?" Then he went off with her. I'd never seen THAT happen at a Dead show before!

The next morning I went into town again for breakfast. I got in line in time to hear Phil doing his own soundcheck. Upon reaching the gate I had another humorous encounter with security. "What's in the bag?" "Nothin'." "Okay, go on in." I found my friends in the same spot as the day before. The band came out and opened with a smokin' Minglewood. Phil seemed particularly psyched. Later in the set Loser and Cassidy were both outstanding.

The second set began with an unusual Samson> Franklin's combo. During Women are Smarter my friends took a short walk, leaving me running the deck. I didn't screw up too badly. After Ship of Fools I expected another Weir song, what we got instead were the first strains of the long-rumored reappearance of Crazy Fingers! The crowd went absolutely bonkers, myself included! It was a beautiful, bubbly version, each change being handled with great care. The drums followed, then came a mystical, sort of African sounding space. A long Not Fade Away drifted out of the space, but instead of doing a slow Jerry song after it the band pulled another shocker and went into a screamin' Other One. Wow! After Wharf Rat they finished up with a smokin' rendition of what is still my favorite show closer — Sugar Magnolia.

After a special encore for a special show — Satisfaction into Brokedown Palace I got a ride to the bus station. I must have slept during the ride, since it seemed to take five minutes to get from San Luis Obispo to Salinas.

07-31-82 Manor Downs - Rob Bertrando

It has always amazed me how far down the list this show finishes in the DeadBase poll for the year. Sure the Frost shows, and others, are good shows, but I think this one takes them all. An eleven song first set is solid all the way through, though Bird Song and Deal aren't in the same class as contemporary versions. Every song in the second set jam, though, is extended and hot, with special notice to the post-drums trio of Uncle John's> Truckin> Dew.

08-03-82 Starlight Theatre - Tom Van Sant

Two nights before, we had seen the Dead on Jerry's 40th birthday, sweating it out 100° weather at the Zoo Amphitheater in Oklahoma City. For reasons now unclear to me, we anticipated that it was going to be a special show. It was a pretty good show given the circumstances, but hardly one of my favorites. In Kansas City we got the special show.

Walking into the Starlight was the evening's first highlight. It's an outdoor amphitheater which hosts not only concerts, but musicals and plays. It has excellent acoustics, and the stage is framed by castle-style towers on either side, covered by ivy and with a distinct Medieval feel. My friend George's parents were season subscribers and since Neil Diamond wasn't playing that night we used their fifteenth row center tickets.

Mississippi Half Step was the opener and the sound was gorgeous. A folky Franklin's burst from the crescendo of Half Step and the set never let up. Cumberland cooked, Cassidy soared, Women Are Smarter made a rare first-set appearance and Might as Well closed the set with a big smile. It was a perfect, cool summer night and as the sun went down red and blue rays layered themselves across the sky. The moon was rising in the East while the fireworks in the West slowly died down.

The second set featured To Lay Me Down in its second-to-last appearance of '82, a heartfelt Stella Blue and an all-out Sugar Magnolia, with Lesh power chords in abundance. The encore was the all-too-rare Casey Jones, their last for two years and the only one I've seen in fifty shows.

I've never been to the Greek Theater in Berkeley, but the Starlight seems to me to be as close to the Greek as a midwesterner can get.

08-10-82 Iowa City - Tom Van Sant

Summer of '82 was the first time I went "on tour," seeing seven consecutive shows, the last of which the Dead played at the field house of the University of Iowa in Iowa City. The room was an old, cavernous basketball arena with horrible acoustics.

It had been a wonderful tour, and on this night the band seemed to wrap things up perfectly. A more mellow crowd I've never seen at a Dead show. Midway into the first set I walked — yes, walked — to the front row, where there was room to stand, dance and move around with elbow room to spare. They had broken out Stagger Lee a week earlier in St. Louis, but it was nice to hear it again and to see the boys up close! The second set was very long, and included my Second Iko Iko of the tour and a very sweet Eyes Of The World. Since it was the last show of the tour, they did Stella Blue again, and as it wound down Jerry played the opening riffs of Around and Around. To my delight, however, Bobby immediately began Sugar Magnolia.

Throughout the night Phil's thunder had been stolen by the wretched acoustics of the hall. This was not lost on Mr. Lesh, who made a short speech to the audience before the Baby Blue> Johnny B. Goode double encore. The tape reveals his words to be: "To the people who have been with us this whole tour, you made it happen... you are the ones who made this happen the way it did and as good as it did. And to the people who live around here and go to this school, have them make a better place for us to play." This drew many cheers, but I overheard people after the show who thought Phil was thanking them for making the town such a great place to play. I suppose that validated his opinion of the auditorium.

09-05-82 US Festival - Robin Nixon

Why did I go to this show? Probably for the novelty of it, but what a mistake! The ride down from San Francisco was grueling, driving through the night to arrive at dawn. Glen Helen Regional Park was swarmed with drunk, filthy people, most of whom had NOT come to see the Dead, and the heat was scorching. We parked in the dusty, dry parking lot, took a shuttle to the show area, and hung out up front at the rail. The crowd was obnoxious, really pushing and being generally rude. The blue coats (BGP's ushers) meant well but were horrible by pouring buckets of ice-cold water onto the crowd at random intervals. A spray from a hose or bottle would have been appreciated, but not volumes of freezing water landing on your head! At showtime (9:30 AM), none of the band members seemed to feel any better than I did, and they played just an average show, not stretching out at all or taking any chances. Jerry looked terrible — tired and hot like the rest of us. This was a classic scenerio for an "are we having any fun yet?" Oh well.

09-11-82 West Palm Beach - Peter Lavezzoli

This obscure show is my favorite from 1982, and deserves wider circulation and praise. It is one of those rare cases where the energy starts very high in the beginning, and does not let up until the end. The entire band is fired up on Mickey's birthday in Palm Beach. The Mingelwood opener catches fire from the first note, with Phil dropping bombs out of the gate. The drummers punctuate in an unusually colorful way that is reminiscent of the 9-2-80 opener. Jerry is hitting peaks from the first note, Brent is throwing himself into the Hammond, and Bobby's vocals fill the room with power and assurance. Few show openers have been this raucous! Jerry tightens the focus with TLEO, and the interaction between bandmembers is razor sharp. Phil's bass was very loud throughout this entire show, shaking the auditorium. Jerry's vocals and leads on TLEO give a strong indication as to how supremely confident yet relaxed he is on this night. These first two songs establish both the raw power and sensitivity that would carry through the entire show.

The remainder of the first set is letter-perfect. Uncle>River is fast and furious, with assured vocals from Bobby and lightning fast leads from both Jerry and Brent. Dupree's, having just been resurrected weeks before, again finds Jerry in peak form, with the wit and narrative of the lyrics coming through. One finds it hard to believe that Dupree's had been out of rotation for so long, with the strength of this version. CC Rider is another showcase for Bobby's energy, but again the entire band shines. The final four songs of the set blaze with energy and excitement. Loser is one of the heaviest versions I've heard, rivaling 3-24-90. LL Rain is uptempo yet heartfelt, with Jerry's leads note-perfect and Bobby's pleas cutting through. Tennessee Jed is as robust and exciting as we can expect. Jerry seems focused on themes of love and money throughout this first set, as evidenced by TLEO, Dupree's, Loser, and Jed. After all, WEST Palm Beach is an impoverished ghetto compared to the shamefully affluent PALM Beach, and this dichotomy is not lost on the Dead. "Rich man step on my poor head," rings especially true for the locals. Jerry's closing solo reaches a peak of high notes that has rarely been heard in this song. This immortal first set closes with a version of Let it Grow that must be one of the finest stand-alone versions. Truly conveying the Spanish flavor of this melody, one must hear the sheer perfection and fury of Jerry's guitar work as he effortlessly leads the band through the changes. Not a note out of place.

One can imagine that a first set this powerful would have everyone very much looking forward to the second set. This is the only show that has a pre-Drums lineup of Scarlet>Fire>Sailor>Saint>Terrapin, and every part of this segment transcends all expectations. Scarlet is raucous and bouncy from the start, and Jerry is intent on making this one of the definitive versions. His leads during Scarlet, and especially in the transition into Fire, are bursting with melodic invention and subtlety. The transition jam carries us off to a tropical rainforest. Birthday boy Mickey Hart blends with Jerry to create a vibrant and colorful tapestry of sound as the band slowly inches their way towards Fire. Brunt's tasteful Hammond organ is another key element here. All possibilities have been thoroughly explored before proceeding to Fire. Jerry again leads the way with incredibly assured vocals and leads. Phil drops more bombs at the right energy peaks, and Mickey is in full effect. At just over thirty minutes, this is one of the definitive versions of Scarlet>Fire.

Bobby comes right in with Lost Sailor, and immediately the band goes deeper into the essence of the music. Jerry's backing is incredibly sympathetic as Bobby brings the lyrical imagery to life. You can hear a pin drop during the quiet parts of Sailor, before the band thunders its way into an explosive and muscular Saint. Jerry does not lose one note, and Bobby rouses the band and audience for the singalong climax. This is intelligent yet physical music. Immediately on the heels of Saint comes Terrapin. Brunt's piano is a key factor here, along with Jerry's vocal subtlety. This Terrapin is all about the storytelling, and Jerry's plaintive leads never obstruct the lyrics. As Terrapin gains power for the final jam, Brent and the drummers are the driving force.

Mickey is the obvious focus of this Drums, but ironically he concentrates on the drum kit, with Billy working on the Beast. There is also an unusual amount of cymbal work highlighted in this Drums, as well as tambourine and gong, a very nice change of pace overall. Space is brief but very interesting because it involves the crowd. The band begins to interact with loud whistling from the audience by making whistling sounds on the instruments, yet still leaving space for the crowd whistles to remain audible—almost like a John Cage piece. As the drummers return, the entrance into Truckin almost sounds like Other One. The band hits the opening notes in unison, and off they go. The remainder of this show is one long finale. Bobby changes his Sweet Jane lyric from "cocaine" to "ever since she went and got her sex change..." The final crescendo is perfect. There is a brief transition into a sugary sweet Stella Blue. Jerry's vocals still have that sweetness that would be gone within a matter of months, and this is one of the stronger 80s versions. Bobby closes this set with the rocking two-fer of Around into an explosive Saturday Night. By the time the band leaves the stage, everyone has danced themselves into a frenzy. The Baby Blue encore harkens back to an earlier time. Jerry takes a different vocal approach here, angry at points, mournful at others. This is a very dynamic and emotional version, one of the best I've heard in terms of Jerry's vocal and guitar. Overall, we have here one of the most consistently exciting whole shows of the Dead's career, certainly for the 80s, and it is worth tracking down a copy under any circumstances.

09-17-82 Portland - John W. Scott

For those of us who live in the Northeast, Cumberland County Civic Center usually means special concerts. In spite of occasionally overzealous law enforcement, this is one of the nicest venues that the Grateful Dead play in New England — its noncentral location helps weed out the merely curious, and it maintains real New England charm, sadly lacking from big-city venues in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The first set was somewhat unremarkable, in spite of the debut for Throwing Stones — I certainly did not imagine that this song would become such an important part of the Dead's repertoire. The second set, however, was exceptional. Two nights after its debut, Touch Of Grey was impressive, a little fast but very tight. When Jerry sang "piss off" instead of "get out" we certainly didn't know the difference, it was just wonderful to hear such promising new material. High Time was a rare treat — so beautiful and clear that it is difficult to imagine why it was not part of the normal rotation. The Estimated> Eyes combination was very strong, but it was, of course, the post-drum sequence that made the big difference.

The first clear indication that something was afoot was the Spanish Jam. It was not long, or even intense, but it was enough to tip the Dead's hand. Indeed, after toying in and out of the theme, the Dead came crashing into The Other One with great conviction. This aggressive version was easily one of the best of the year. Then, instead of the anticipated slow song, we got another surprise: a bubbly Goin Down The Road. This was not quite as rare as High Time, but it was equally welcome. Already happy, we were delirious at the next song. Somehow we had expected Morning Dew; given what we had just seen, it seemed like the only song that they could play. Morning Dew did surpass expectations in intensity, so much so that we barely noticed the hot Sugar Magnolia that followed.

On our content rural route drive back we reflected on how great Cumberland County shows are. Since then, I have decided that it's probably just Maine.

10-09, 10-82 Frost Amphitheater - Mike Dolgushkin

For weeks I had eagerly awaited the Dead's first-ever appearances at the Frost Amphitheatre. I'd never been there but I'd heard lots of good things about the venue, plus I would be taking my young friend Phoebe to her first Dead shows! That sort of thing is always fun.

The morning of the 9th I sat in my studio in El Granada waiting for Phoebe to arrive on the bus from San Francisco. As I did this I was looking out the window watching a couple of mini-tornados twist their way up the street. Hmmm. I soon got a call from Phoebe, who told me she'd taken the wrong bus and wound up at San Francisco Airport, then caught another bus and went back to Daly City. I told her to catch a Pacifica bus and wait for us in Linda Mar, so I called my friends Phil, Steve and John, they picked me up, we picked Phoebe up and made it to Palo Alto with time to spare.

Entering the Frost I was blown away. The sun, the grass, the trees, I know I've said this before but Frost shows seem to have a magic to them regardless of what the band plays. We settled in on the grass forward of the board, by my friend Rick and my old buddy Marc, who I hadn't seen in many years. The Dead played their first set, seeing them in such a beautiful setting for the first time made me ecstatic. The set had some remarkable moments too; my first electric On the Road Again, my first Dupree's Diamond Blues and a lengthy Music Never Stopped.

During the break we decided to hit the concession stands up in the back. Standing in line I started feeling a little woozy, I still don't know why. The heat hadn't been bothering me, neither had I partaken of any substances. I gave Phoebe some money and said "Get me a coke, I'll be sitting back there." Next thing I knew I was lying on the ground, my friend Steve was bending over me with a coke in his hand. Weird. For the rest of the show I felt absolutely wonderful. We sat under the trees in the back with Fitz and Ruth. The band came back and opened with two new songs, the first of which we were calling Ashes Ashes at the time. Touch of Grey was next, it was still a little rough but I loved it! I thought it bore a resemblance to Run for the Roses. Estimated> Eyes was fun but a little sloppy, it was the post-space segment that knocked me out. Truckin' into The Other One has always been one of my favorite combinations, these versions were full of fine, inventive jamming. The transition into Morning Dew caught me completely by surprise, it was rare enough where I just didn't expect it at an opening show. What a version, Jerry playing spiraling leads that took the song further and further into the stratosphere. He ended the song with such a finality that I'm sure he intended it to close the set, seeming a little surprised when Weir started Saturday Night. No matter, it was good, as was the U.S. Blues encore.

We came back to the Frost the next day and hung out somewhat closer to the stage. Phil, I should mention, was wearing contacts at these shows, this gave his facial expressions a new twist. The Dead opened with a punchy Minglewood during which Phil played a walking bass line that I hadn't heard before or since. The reset of the set carried on in the same fashion. Mid-set I heard my first live Far from Me, I didn't expect the song to rock the way it did, the closing China Cat> Rider was simply amazing.

There's not much I can say about the second set that the song list doesn't cover. The band was throwing unexpected curve balls at us right and left. Touch of Grey's appearance right before drums gave the song a more celebratory feel than the day before, this is what I was hearing in my head after the show. The after space stretch treated the Bay Area to its first Throwin' Stones> Not Fade Away, not at the end of the set like it's done now, being followed by Black Peter and Sugar Magnolia. The encore was great too, Satisfaction into Baby Blue! What fun! I was happy, Phoebe was happy, everyone around me was happy. Such wonderful first shows in what instantly became my favorite place to see the Dead!

11-26-82 Montego Bay - Tom Van Sant

Definitely not just another Grateful Dead show. The one-time-only Jamaica World Music Festival was held in the "Freeport Zone" of Montego Bay, a restricted area with beautiful beaches, resort hotels, and few native Jamaicans, mostly employed by the tourist trade. Held on Thanksgiving weekend, the festival presented a wide array of pop, rock, reggae, soul and country artists with the obvious aim of attracting Americans for a holiday weekend of music and tropical frolic. Two friends and I got a cheap charter flight from New York, and paid five dollars each to camp in a large beach front campground set up by the festival organizers.

Jamaica is not a rich country and we saw our share of poverty on the taxi ride from the airport and in encountering Jamaicans during daylight hours (the artists performed at night). We chose not to avail ourselves of what the kids hanging around the airport called "coke." We also passed on numerous offers by Jamaican men to introduce us to their "sisters."

Local color wasn't lacking that weekend, to be sure — and neither was musical variety. The Dead were the final act on the first of three nights. They followed Jimmy Cliff, Gladys Knight & The Pips, The B-52's, Toots & The Maytals and the festival's opening act, the Wailers. The concert venue itself was nothing but a long rectangular gravel lot, with food vendors of all kinds lining both sides, and an elevated stage at the far end. Many of the Deadheads were under the impression that the Dead were to go on first; upon gaining entry to the grounds they sprinted madly, and in vain, to the front of the stage.

The Dead's show was somewhat shorter than average, although the experience of seeing them at this venue stands as a unique one. The show began at 4:30 AM, by which time only faithful Deadheads and local curiosity-seekers were still around. The crowd of about five thousand saw a Sugaree opener and the six-song first set closed with a pleasant Let It Grow. Any good quality audience tape of this show will reveal what superb sound we were treated to that morning. The crowd was so quiet the tape came out sounding like a soundboard!

After Let It Grow Bobby promised: "We'll be back in about ten minutes — watch." With dawn breaking off to our left the Dead returned with Samson and then she show's most memorable moment, a sunrise Scarlet> Fire. The tape reveals this to be the best played part of the show, with Phil's riffs clear as a bell. The Dead wound down their only Caribbean concert ever around 7 AM with a (relatively) rousing Good Lovin' and no encore.

On the second night it was the English Beat, Stacey Lattisaw, Aretha Franklin, Black Uhuru (during which I chatted briefly with Billy Kreutzmann and my friend George had his wallet stolen by pickpockets), country singer Skeeter Davis, the Beach Boys and rising reggae star Yellowman.

Bobby and the Midnites opened the final night, including Alphonso Johnson's "Bahama Mama" in their show. Joe Jackson and his band played a well-rehearsed set, with Joe stating midway through how happy he was to be playing to "all you sunburnt American tourists." Bob Marley's widow Rita was next, backed by her children, the Melody Makers. Rick James, Squeeze, then The Clash in a ripping set of punk rock, which turned out to be their final show together. Peter Tosh was the closing act of the festival, playing, just as the Dead had 48 hours earlier, at sunrise. Tosh was brilliant, but midway through the set we had to leave to catch our flight.

On the way down our plane was filled with rowdy college-age and older concert-goers whooping it up and generally cutting loose. The same group flying back four days later was sound asleep, hung over, peeling, and sick from drinking the water. But happy.

03-29-83 Warfield - Mike Dolgushkin

Before this run the Warfield underwent a minor renovation and cleanup. My friends Wolfgram, Too Stony and some other freaks got in on this deal where if you worked an ungodly amount of hours fixing the Warfield you got to see all three show. I was offered this too but I had a real job at the time. The big benefit of this turned out being able to catch the sound-check on the 29th.

Even though I was working a real job I was still rather poor at the time, so I only bought a ticket for the first night. Of course, the big news at the moment was the revival of the Help> Slip> Frank triad in Tempe. For some reason we decided to keep this news from our friend Meek so that if they played it he'd be surprised. Ha! Fat chance. Try keeping a secret from ANYONE in deadheadland and see how far you get. Well, I sat in the balcony and the band came out with all guns blazing. Jack straw to open, then Bird Song. This is as close as they've gotten to actually opening with the song. It's All Over Now had a rather bizarre starting drumbeat, later came Bob's new song, which we called Shadow Box. (Later someone told me "I think that song's called Brother Esau." "Nah, sounds to religious." Shows how much I know.) The closing Big RXR> Greatest Story was not only a total surprise but rippin' as well, indicating that the second set would shoot us at least to the moon. Worlfgram and I sat in our seats during the break somehow knowing what would start the set, it HAD to, there was no other possibility.

The boys came back. Jerry started strumming some cords. Wolfgram started yelling "THEY'RE GONNA DO IT! THEY'RE GONNA DO IT!" They did it. It was unreal. Words can't do it justice. I've never heard a Slipknot that good, EVER. Weird and spooky. Intense as hell. And after Franklin's they still had it in them for Estimated Prophet! Too much. They didn't let up, either, the closing Not Fade Away> Goin' Down the Road> Johnny B. Goode rocked the Warfield to the max. Whew!

I didn't see the other two nights but I can't imagine how anything would have topped THAT.

04-12-83 Broome County Arena - Gregg Bucci

The final Binghampton show, April 12, 1983 was another solid example of this town's good fortune. This show has particularly fond memories for me. This was to be my first "home" show and the thought of the tour coming to me instead of me going to it was a welcome change. Being a disc jockey at the wild and wonderful school radio station WHRW-FM at the time, I had the great fortune of being on the air from noon to 2:00 PM on the day of the show.

Having gotten the word on what the band had played in Hampton and Morgantown, I was certain that the band was due to play The Other One. During the early eighties, The Other One and Morning Dew were the two songs that one could consistently count on to really make a show. In addition, the strong likelihood of hearing Help> Slipknot> Franklin's and the band's past experiences in Bingotown further raised expectations.

Tickets were particularly hard to come by for this show since Broome County Arena only holds about 7,200 people. I remember seeing ads in the newspaper stating that people from Houston were willing to pay quite large sums of money for tickets. The town was very much a Dead camp, and a campus that was becoming increasingly more conservative got a good dose of a different perspective.

I made sure that I played the That's It For the Other One> Cosmic Charlie from Harpur on the radio to set the tone for the day. It always seemed to me that one could often get the strong sense that a certain song was going to be played by the vibes surrounding the crowd during the hours before the show. I remember walking around the Saratoga Performing Arts Center in 1983 and constantly hearing great versions of Scarlet> Fire and thinking that the band definitely would play that combo at that show (it turned out they did). The Other One had a similar feel this day. Although Help> Slipknot> Franklin's was played three nights earlier in Hampton, I played the Great American Music Hall version on the air hoping it would pop up that evening.

I made sure I got to the Arena early that evening knowing that security might well be a problem. Right call on that one. The crowd was filtered through a small entrance set up on the ramp to the Arena as a way of keeping non-ticket holders from the entrances. This would prove to be a painfully slow and frustrating control process. I guess when unfortunate situations occur, like the one in 1979, people try real hard not to let it happen again. I did manage to get into the Arena and on to the floor just in time for the start of set one. Half of the crowd was not as fortunate.

As the first rocking notes of Alabama Getaway came out of the speakers, I looked around and just couldn't believe the room I had on the floor. This would change drastically once the rest of the audience got in around the middle of the set. Alabama was followed by an excellent Greatest Story, punctuated by the thunderous sounds of Phil's bass. There was no question in my mind that we were in for a good one and Bird Song quickly confirmed my thoughts. A grooving Minglewood was followed by a wonderful Peggy-O from Garcia. Bird Song and Peggy-O were strong indications that Jerry was on this evening. The jam during Cassidy had strong hints of The Other One, much to my delight. Loser and It's All Over Now preceded Dupree's Diamond Blues, which kept Bingo's Aoxomoxoa streak alive. A heavy bass-laden Let it Grow rumbled the set to a close.

The second set started with Help> Slipknot> Franklin's and there wasn't a disappointed soul in the house. Franklin's was exceptionally wild and featured some hot jamming. Lost Sailor> Saint followed, and although I thought it was somewhat of a downer at the time, hindsight indicates it should not have been. I had seen Lost Sailor> Saint virtually every show up to that point and I think I speak for many when I say it was a bit overexposed. I always enjoyed the jams in the combo, however, they often drifted off into some spacy interludes (especially the "rain fallin' down" part of Saint). I never thought at that time that I'd actually want the band to play this combo at any given show, but since Lost Sailor's disappearance in 1986, I have been hoping for its return. A solid Terrapin drifted us nicely into The Rhythm Devils portion of the show and on into a very "close encounters" like Space. The Other One I had been waiting for came out of Space and rolled on into Wharf Rat.

Not Fade Away ended the set. As the band wound down the song, a rather spontaneous, rhythmic clapping developed, accented by the crowd's exaltation of "you know our love won't fade away." This ending now feels quite contrived when performed, but on this night it was very spontaneous and fresh. From what I can tell, it was also the first time this ending was played as such. As the band members left the stage, the crowd became more emphatic and Mickey stayed on to jam with the crowd. After leaving for a few minutes, Mickey returned and rejoined the crowd in its rhythmic treatment of Not Fade Away. Soon the entire band returned and Not Fade Away was picked up right where it left off. The band then segued into Baby Blue. The crowd, egged on by Mickey, started the Not Fade Away chant again after the conclusion of Baby Blue. This led one of my friends to finish labeling her tape of this show with the notation "no one noticed but the band's all packed and gone." Truer words could not be spoken. As the crowd spilled out into the Bingo night, the pulsating rhythm of Not Fade Away could be felt all over town. People sang it and beat the rhythm out on buildings and signs and in the streets. The final treat of this show was that I only had to go about five minutes on foot to get home. For once it was nice not to have to beat it on down the line.

04-16-83 Brendan Byrne - John W. Scott

Surprise guest musicians often help create special shows. In this spirit, Stephen Stills proved to be a perfect guest. Of the two nights that he played with the band, the first is my favorite.

The second set opened with a solid China Cat> I Know You Rider. Though both songs were played a little on the fast side, the jams worked well with this added tempo. Next up was a tasty Uncle John's Band with an excellent crowning jam. As always, this song had me in a great mood and I was ready for the drums. Instead, the Dead moved into a respectable Truckin, building up even more energy. Only then, with a brief taste of Spoonful, did they arrive at the drum solo.

Even during the latter stages of Space it was evident that something different was on the horizon. The introduction, thick with bass, clearly did not belong to a standard Dead tune. The crowd went wild, wondering what is in store. A third guitar player was on stage, though my seat was too far back to see the face. Cries of "Clapton" and "Springsteen" were obviously misguided, and soon Stephen Stills made himself known. Black Queen was an excellent choice: gutsy and raunchy, proving that the Dead, since the demise of Passenger, can still play that style of music. It seems likely that this song was rehearsed as the Dead played as if it were their own. Guided by Phil, and with some excellent guitar from Stills, this still stands as one of their best one-performance efforts.

Although it took him a couple of minutes to adjust, Stills showed that he too can play on foreign turf as he joined in with gusto on Aiko. Stephen even included a verse of his own, and the result is one of the strongest and most interesting Aikos that I have heard. As Stills left the stage, Weir started out with a nice version of his ditty Bob Star leading into a powerful Other One. Garcia then gave us a nice slow Black Peter with some beautiful, confident leads. The blues seemed to draw Stills back on stage. They closed the set with a rousing One More Saturday Night. Johnny B. Goode was chosen as the encore to accommodate Stills. The common ground proved solid and the crowd was sent home happy.

While Stills didn't always synch perfectly with the Dead, he did provide an enthusiasm that translated into raw energy. I was particularly impressed by how much fun he was having on stage. Often guest artists are tentative, seeming intimidated by the strong bond that exists between the Dead and their audience. Stills loved every minute, jamming without inhibitions with "the world's greatest garage band."

04-17-83 Brendan Byrne - John W. Scott

This show is special for a number of reasons, the most obvious being the second appearance of Stephen Stills. Often overlooked is the excellent music before the drums. I only caught a handful of the Help> Slipknot> Franklin's revival shows, and this was easily the best that I heard. The Playin was particularly beautiful, including some intense and unique space with a cathedral in the fog feeling that was my favorite passage of the evening.

Stephen Stills was expected this time, and he played the song that the set list shamans had been asking for all afternoon: Love The One You're With. The result was a bit disjointed, but still fun — the raunch that worked so well the night before was taken too far, and it could have used some rehearsal. The strengths of this song lay in a burst from Phil and in Jerry's and Stephen's leads. When Stills rejoined the band for NFA the fusion was much stronger, resulting in an excellent version, worthy of particular attention.

While I personally felt that the first night was superior, this show was still quite special and the tape should be a welcome addition to any collection.

04-20-83 Providence - Simon Friedman

This concert was one of the strongest of 1983. The opening Touch Of Grey was pretty abysmal, but this was the only weak moment of this powerhouse show. I found myself totally absorbed by the evening's music, even for the entire first set. I was particularly delighted when Me & My Uncle was succeeded by a very strong Cumberland Blues. Looks Like Rain was particularly notable for the short Garcia solo after the second verse. It's played quite differently than usual and with much greater impact than one usually expects here. This is truly a 30-second nugget of peak Garcia, definitely worth a listen. The set-closing China Cat> I Know You Rider was also excellent.

The band introduced the two new songs of the tour, Brother Esau (which we thought was called Shadow Boxing) and Maybe You Know to start the second, then surprised me with a rockin' Bertha, followed by Estimated> Eyes. This version of Eyes is truly outstanding and deserves to be recognized as one of the best of the 1980's. Phil makes his presence felt here, at times playing a walking line under Jerry's solo. The drums are thunderous and provide explosive peaks at unexpected times. Garcia is again in peak form, coming up with a wealth of creative ideas. The transition into the drums provides more excitement, as the band creates the sense of accelerating speed.

The Space contains some of the most scathing, almost out of control playing by Garcia that I've heard, accompanied only by the drums. It reminds me a bit of John Coltrane-Elvin Jones duets. Later on, Weir joins in, and the four bandmates create an odd rock-funk jam based on some unusual sounding chords. The transition into some melodic space and then Throwing Stones is beautiful, and contains a clear Dark Star tease.

Throwing Stones was taken at a slower pace than what I had heard the previous fall, and the band seemed to have a better handle on it. I was truly shocked and delighted to hear Morning Dew come next. It was a weird one, played quite fast, maybe the fastest since the 1960's. Although not having quite the emotional power of slower, deeper Dews, it was a pleasure nonetheless. Sugar Magnolia provided a high-energy finish.

06-18-83 Saratoga - Jeff Silberman

After reading the concert reviews in DeadBase II, I was confounded by the fact that the Dead's effort at Saratoga in arguably their best year of the decade (so far) drew nary a word from the reviewers. I cannot allow this affront to go unredressed and feel obliged to speak on behalf of a show which I had thought spoke for itself.

As I was fighting the elements during the first set, that set, unfortunately, escapes me. Luckily, after gaining access to the front row of the pavilion balcony, my mind (and mics) were trained on the boys for the second set. Friends, I hereby challenge anyone to find a more raucus version of Scarlet Begonias than the one that opened this set. The jam between verses was unrelenting, and the Fire that followed was majestic. Without missing a beat, Playin started the second set jam, and it was very long and hot to the drums.

The Wheel that followed was one of the most powerful that I have ever had the priviledge to experience. The segue back into Playin was monumental — beautifully orchestrated as the band surged into the refrain. And if you listen accutely, Phil plays his old-style riffs too. Then Morning Dew. This Dew is certainly one of the greatest ever — not as jammed out as, say, 09/02/80, but more powerful in terms of bass. All I could think during it was "Phil is Lord." The last Jerry vocal outburst was unbelievable — he truly gave it his all! After such a climax, the band and audience collapsed into a spent heap.

Bobby was the first to regain his composure and riffed a couple of bars of Throwing Sones before the rest of his colleagues had the presence of mind to chip in. After a predictable, but well-executed (and long) Not Fade Away, Jerry played yet another song — Touch Of Grey — to the dismay of the tapers, for every master got cut except this humble taper's recording. For you see, by the grace of God (or should I say the Japanese), the advent of digital a few months before made it possible to preserve this second set, uncut, for all prosterity to enjoy, a set which with encore — lame as it was — lasted nearly two hours.

06-20-83 Merriweather Post - Jeff Silberman

Only one thing I have to say about this show — get it. There is no sense in relating it since once you have it, you too will know. No one there will EVER forget, that's for sure. What with the thunder, the torrential rain, the mud slide they called the lawn seats, the flooding, the collapsed footbridge, the lightning hitting the soundstage... I could go on, but what's the point. Believe me, you NEED this tape! The best Sugar Magnolia ever — bar none. Learn the real meaning behind the slogan, "When Phil's on, the band's on." Good ol' Grateful Dead at its finest!

08-27-83 Seattle - John J. Wood

This show is most noted for the only 1980's electric version of the blues ditty, Deep Elem Blues. Here it is played with full zest, and all the blues feeling intact. It's a shame that Jerry only chooses to play this in an acoustic context, as this would be a great blues ditty to dust off the shelf and return to its current touring repertoire. A solid, grooving Esau follows, accented with some tasty percussion work.

Other items of note here is a solid second set, which contains some fine jamming in Playin and Uncle John's. However, vocal miscues dominated the second set, particularly in Uncle John's (what else is new?), and Saturday Night. This was the second show of a fall tour that started in the Northwest and ended at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, and a pair of shows at the Marin Vets Auditorium. After listening to this show on tape numerous times, it is clear the fellas didn't find their form yet: that would be reached at Red Rocks less than two weeks later. However, the jamming that is evident in the brunt of this show gives it respectability.

Touch Of Grey contains a cheesy synthesizer hook that sounds almost like a bar band playing a Dead tune. However, the beat and feel is completely different and more refreshing than the version we all know today; even if Jerry forgets the verses (as he did here, and through a fair portion of the show). The jamming in the middle is nice: the type of jamming that I miss in all versions played since 1986.

09-02-83 BSU Pavilion, Boise - Beth Rosenfeld

The Dead had never played in Idaho before, so it seemed worth the trip to check it out. We rode the train from Denver to Boise and arrived at 5:30 on the morning of the show, with plans to meet our California friends who had been following the tour from Ventura to Oregon, and continue the tour with them. Our early arrival gave us a great opportunity to see this day develop as the relatively small legion of Heads congregated outside the Pavilion on the edge of the Boise State University campus. After Boise, the tour continued through the lower Rocky Mountain states, ending up in Santa Fe. In this regard, Boise was a sort of transition show between two tours; for many the tour ended in Oregon and a mostly new set of tourheads picked up the tour at Park West in Utah. This made for a very cozy ambiance among those of us who had traveled the extra distance.

Boise State is mostly an agricultural university and the city itself has the feel of a small, rural town. The natives couldn't have possibly been prepared for what that day would bring into their sleepy city.

By the time we got to the campus it was around 7:00 and the Heads who had breezed in the night before seemed to already be in charge of the campus. They had slept in the dormitory study lounges, showered in the dorms, and found the washing machines and were doing their laundry. We hung out near the ticket booth, waiting for it to open (we were sure this show wouldn't sell out, and it didn't). A Boise native in his mid-thirties and a wheelchair decided to make friends with us and among other things, told us that the Pavilion had just been built in the hopes of attracting more national events to the region. He especially wanted us to know how close to perfection the acoustics were.

As time went on, our corner of the campus had turned into a circus that was typical in the days before the massive vending scene, and the news had spread across the campus that there was something very unusual going on up by the Pavilion. Groups of students came by to ogle at the weird scene being played out on their campus, and it seemed that they didn't even attend the show — they were blown away by our mere presence.

One particularly memorable event in the hours before showtime occurred in the parking lot. A policeman drove in and parked, then walked away into the crowd beyond the lot. Within about one minute, half a dozen bumper stickers had been slapped on the car (including "I break for hallucinations"). When the cop returned, he stared at his squad car, then looked around him at the crowd of people who had gathered to see how he'd react. He broke into a smile and everyone cheered; he drove away shaking his head.

Before the doors opened, a rumor was going around about drug-sniffing dogs at the entrances, so most people consumed their contraband in the parking lot and by the time the band came on stage, the place was already flying.

The ushers were all polite college students whose job it was to check tickets and make sure you went to the seat that was especially reserved for you. As the show progressed and as the world they knew was rapidly dissolving before their very eyes, they held onto their jobs with all their might, checking ticket stubs well into the encore, despite the fact that the scene was clearly out of their control; behind their backs, a steady stream of Heads could be seen diving down to the floor all night long. You see, all the tickets on sale that day were for the balcony, and on the floor only half of the space was filled with chairs (at the back of the floor was a stand selling popcorn and Pepsi!). The Pavilion was several stories tall, but not that wide, so the floor was a small and intimate space and the floor was where most of the Heads wanted to be. Some ushers were stationed at the foot of the stairs that led from the first balcony to the floor, and they would dutifully look at your ticket, then tell you where your seat was up on the balcony. But, you had only to turn around, walk up to the landing, and jump off to get down to the floor — it wasn't very far and just about anyone who wanted to could be down there.

The first set opened with Phil announcing, "Citizens of Boise — SURRENDER! For... you are a conquered people!" and then led into a great Wang Dang Doodle, followed by Jack Straw. A good piece of the first set was devoted to cowboy/country/folk type tunes that the natives could relate to ("Why Martha, they're playing that ol' Merle Haggard tune"), which made the juxtaposition of the second set even more glaring when they literally exploded into Help on the Way. Sometime during Slipknot, they folded up the popcorn and Pepsi stand (it was tough competing with water fountains right there on the floor — and no line). Despite is small size, there was lots of room on the floor and the dancing down there was predictably wild. You could look up into the faces of the Boise folks (many of whom were not students) who were sitting there in their seats in the balcony, and the ones I saw looked like they were concentrating very hard to figure out this whole scene. It was clear that simply watching us was like tripping for those people.

At the end of Eyes, Bobby and Brent stayed on for a spirited boogie with the drummers. During the drums I danced right up in front of the stage. In an unusual acrobatic feat, Mickey hit a beat, leapt into the air and spun around, landing in time to come in on the very next beat. One of the biggest highlights for me was the jam that Bobby and Jerry played after Drums; it was a beautiful duet and sounded much different than what was usual at the time. It even brought Phil out from the wings (sans guitar but with a Heineken in hand) just to watch. That show was a very special treat for everyone who made it there. Too bad they never invited us back.

09-10, 11-83 Santa Fe - Blair Jackson

When I'm sittin' in my rocker years from now thinking back (with my few remaining brain cells) of a life spent following the Grateful Dead, I know I'll look back at the '83 Santa Fe shows as one of my favorite Dead weekends. My wife Regan and I were coming off our first tour with the band — we'd hit the three shows at the incredible Hult Center in Eugene, and a rockin' night in Boise two nights later as part of a driving tour of the Northwest. Alas, we had to return to work following the Boise concert (thus missing Park West and Red Rocks), so we decided to be decadent and fly to Santa Fe the following weekend.

Our decision was made late enough that by the time we looked for a room, we couldn't get anywhere near Santa Fe. Not only were the Dead in town, it was also the weekend of the Festival of Santa Fe, a three-days of partying in the main square and various other nefarious and wholesome activities. (My favorite was the pet parade, with house pets dressed up in costumes.) So we ended up in a backwater town miles away called Espaniola. Just saying that name seemed to draw derisive laughter from the locals. We found out why, too — it's redneck hell! out in the middle of nowhere; gun racks on the pickup trucks and plenty of unsavory characters. Our motel was passable, though, and we knew we wouldn't be spending much time there.

The Dead were playing at the Downs, a race track a little ways out of town towards Albuquerque. The area around it was flat, but the vistas were beautiful in every direction — red mesas in the distance, and azure skies with white puffy clouds as far as the eye could see. Most of the people who arrived early for the show seemed to head for the grandstand area, which offered a wonderful view of the stage (which was just buried in roses donated by a local florist) and an endless expanse of New Mexico beauty. True to form, though, we plunked ourselves in front of Phil on the dirt track and pretty much stayed there the whole day. The crowd was a strange brew — a mixture of tour heads, old New Mexico hippies, Indians (many of them inebriated, I'm sorry to report), and military folks from nearby bases.

The first set was played at fever pitch mostly (except for They Love Each Other) and it seemed to accelerate as the storm clouds appeared from behind the grandstand. By the time China Cat started the temperature had dropped several degrees and a cold rain was falling. If you have a tape, check out how fast that China Cat> Rider is! We retreated to under the grandstand during the break, the instruments on stage were covered in plastic, and we waited out the storm, which did pass in about an hour. For most of the second set we were treated to an amazing skyshow of blowing gray and silver clouds giving way every so often to bursts of bright sunshine and turquoise skies. In an era when Man Smart, Woman Smarter was still a rarity, it seemed like a perfect good-time opener for the second set that day. The whole set that followed was fast and intense (save China Doll, which was slow and intense) and played with true gusto. During drumz, a rainbow appeared in the distance behind the stage and stayed there until Garcia and Weir came back for The Other One. Towards the end of the set the rains picked up again. So what better encore than Cold Rain & Snow? What a great choice, and it was made all the more special by Phil singing in on it at the end, the first time he'd sung on stage in years!

After a night of revelry in the main square, where thousands of Heads and tourists and locals descended to eat, drink, and be merry, we were back at the Downs again on Sunday — and this time the weather was gorgeous. The first set was once again well played and energetic, though nothing special, I suppose. We were in such great moods being in this gorgeous place everything seemed special anyway. But the second set was a monster from beginning to end. The Help> Slip> Frank remains one of my all-time favorites — gnarly and spacey at the same time; to see it under the shifting skies was something indeed. Then a surprise — Let It Grow in a very rare second set appearance. That they hadn't played it in the first set in this spectacular setting had seemed an oversight; for a change they broke with their format and went with the feeling of the moment. After Truckin the band whipped out the recently introduced Wang Dang Doodle, but Weir was plagued by microphone problems. As a result, we got a very cool jammed out Wang Dang, definitely the most interesting they ever played. The colossal Morning Dew that followed erased any weirdness from the technical snafu, and the set ending Sugar Magnolia had everyone on the track kicking up huge clouds of dust.

As the show ended the sun was beginning to set and the sky was streaked with gray and crimson clouds. We took our rental car back to the airport and then flew back to the Bay Area that night, partying one last time with some Deadhead buddies on the plane. That's the abridged version of what went on that weekend. I can't believe they haven't been back since.

09-18-83 Grass Valley - Mike Dolgushkin

This show was wonderful! Get the tape! The trip up to Grass Valley was fun, riding through the scenic foothills of the Sierra Nevada in the company of my beautiful young friend Christine. The venue, which resembled a rodeo arena, was completely surrounded by tall pine trees, there was also quite a Deadhead bazaar taking place INSIDE the show. Ah, for the simpler days!

How the Dead could play so energetically in such high temperatures I'll never figure out, but they did — all the way through. There was not one flat moment the whole time, from the opening Jack Straw to the rockin' Hell in a Bucket to the fantastically intense Let it Grow. The second set's song selection was nearly impeccable; Touch of Grey, Terrapin, a raging Other One and Around and Around's transition into — Yay! — Sugar Mag. It was not outrageously crowded, we managed to make our way up front for set two with no trouble at all.

After the show we hung out in the parking lot for awhile so as not to get stuck in traffic. To the west the sun was setting over a tranquil lake, to the east the moon was coming up over the pine trees. Ah, yes.

09-24-83 Watsonville - Mike Dolgushkin

The Santa Cruz-Watsonville-Monterey area is one of my favorites in California. The prospect of seeing the Dead play there was just too much to pass up! The show was good, not as good as Grass Valley but filled with enough high points to make the trip worthwhile. An electric Deep Elem, the return of Day Job (stop groaning), a long Truckin' BEFORE drums and a beautiful Uncle John's Band; yes, this was an above average show. Chris and I spent both sets under a tree to stage right where it wasn't crowded, this made for a relaxing experience.

Getting out of the parking lot was horrendous. There was ONE two-lane access road out of the place, it took hours to leave. But, it was nothing compared to Boreal two years later. Out of fairness to everyone who was there I will not review THAT show!

10-17-83 Lake Placid - John J. Wood

Like John Scott and the 8/27/72 Creamery Benefit, this Lake Placid show is one I missed but enjoy the hell out of it. For this fall tour, the big story was the return of St. Stephen (although I will boldly say that most of the versions cannot hold a candle in comparison to the early 70's and '77 versions). I have heard most of the tapes of this tour, and the most mentioned shows are Madison Square Garden 10/11/83 and both the Hartford shows (10/14 and 10/15/83); with the obvious reason being the return of St. Stephen (although the versions, in my opinion, are very slow and generally overrated). However, when I listen to tapes of this fall tour, I have fallen back to this show more than any other. Why???

For one simple reason: SUGAREE!!!! Without question, I can boldly say that this version is one of the finest par excellence, and I have yet to find a version from any 1980's show that rivals this. Certainly, none of the many Bucket> Sugarees come close. Why?? For one, this is a well-played, thoughtful, challenging version that reaches peaks that have rarely been reached in a Sugaree. The band takes their time through this version (probably because they weren't warmed up yet), and explores the themes at a gradual, yet engaging pace. Jerry's playing is nothing short of exquisite throughout, as are his urgent vocals. It is a version that starts on a solid level, and the intensity keeps relentlessly building; and eventually, the standard length of Sugaree becomes secondary. The crescendos reached keep building, and the song becomes a frenzied free-for-all. In short, that old cliche, MAGIC, is most appropriate here. If there are soundboards available, I'd LOVE to have this, but I'm content with a fine audience, which is well-worth seeking out.

Other highlights in the first set belong to Jerry as well. A very spacey, out-there, Birdsong finds more of the exploring that Sugaree started. There is a rocking, jammy, set-closing Deal that roars with authority. Bob's contributions of Little Red Rooster, a still-undefined Brother Esau, and a jammy Bucket (when Bucket was still finding its form, but was VERY jammy) are very respectable, and thread together a strong first set.

The second set is respectable, but far from memorable. The best moment is the return of To Lay Me Down, which is beautifully played. This is the last time this would be played until Hampton 3-27-88. Other versions of note are Terrapin and The Wheel, as well as the Revolution encore. Still, if your budget is tight, get the first set, and tack on To Lay Me Down and Revolution (you may have to go to a 100-minute tape to do it), and your search will be well worth it.

10-21-83 Worcester - John W. Scott

When I attended this show it impressed me as the best I had seen that year. I recently received a gorgeous tape and my memory has been refreshed. Looking through last year's poll results, however, it became apparent that this show has not yet been adequately publicized. A show that opens with Music Never Stopped, sigh. And they never lose their stride. Cumberland! A little fast, but hot, hot, hot. Cassidy builds and builds, gaining tempo with intensity. Jerry pours out the notes at a breakneck pace. I keep expecting them to stumble at this pace, the jam is incredible.

Following a Happy Birthday tuning for Brent, the Scarlet was wonderful, one of the best versions that I have ever heard live. It was LONG (13 minutes!!), and well jammed — how do you follow such a long hot Scarlet? With a 16-minute long version of Fire On The Mountain, of course. So, the drums must be right around the corner, right? Not quite.

A tight Uncle John's Band> Playin combo spills over onto the second side during the final spacey strains before the drums. I am eternally thankful that there are people making two-hour format digital masters. Otherwise, without pausing between Fire and Uncle John, the cut must be pretty ugly. The Space is particularly long with Bobby toying with Sage and Spirit shortly before Truckin. A long, well jammed Wharf Rat rounds out the set.

There are a number of ways that one can fit this show onto a 90-minute cassette. None of them is entirely satisfactory. A reasonable solution is to squeeze Ramble On Rose on the first side. This allows Scarlet> Fire to fill the second side of the first set, but this has the significant disadvantage of splitting the second set. Otherwise, one can accept a flip in the waning moments of Playin. In order to fit the rest of the set on side two, it is still necessary to excise ten minutes of drumz. This tape is an excellent candidate for the new Maxell XL-IIS 100 tape.

10-31-83 Marin Civic - Mike Dolgushkin

What a nice theater! It's so small that you can see well even from the back row. Wang Dang Doodle started things off on a good note, and we got Sailor> Saint after a long absence. A good Help started the second set and the drums and space were long. Airto played the whole show. After the space, Phil finally came back out and we got the expected, perhaps too expected, St. Stephen.

10-31-83 San Rafael — John W. Scott

This is one of those shows where you don't cut the Drumz to make the set fit on a tape. In fact, you should try to find a tape without a cut or splice in them at all as they are the best part of the show. That isn't to belittle the rest of the concert: the three song combo to close the first set was strong, as were Help> Slipknot> Franklin's and Estimated> Eyes. It is just that the Drumz and subsequent jam scorched. The percussion was very straightforward, punctuated with vocals from Airto rather than techno-wizardry (while most of the vocals are more sounds than words, if you listen closely you can hear Airto repeatedly wishing the audience "Happy Halloween.") It is obvious that Mickey and Bill enjoy working with him, the result is a enthusiastic collaboration. The subsequent jam is even stronger, visiting a number to themes and tempos culminating in a drum-driven celebration reminiscent of Caution. I suppose I shouldn't forget St. Stephen either; this is one of the better jammed among the revived versions. But when you get this tape, try and make sure you get all the drums.

05-08-84 Silva Hall - Stu Nixon

The Hult Center in Eugene is an intimate hall seating only 2,500. The Center opened in 1982 and the Dead played a debut run of three shows in August 1983. Their return engagement the following year was an equally gala affair with champagne available in the lobby and everyone encouraged to Dress to the Hilt for the Hult. This was just a week after the last show of the '84 East Coast spring tour and what a contrast — one extreme to the other! We went to the last nine shows of the East Coast tour, and the shows were so good we hoped the band still saved some energy for these last three shows before taking the next month off. The first two shows were good, certainly up to the level of most of the East Coast shows, but it was the third show that had something extra.

As the band took the stage, Bob stepped to the microphone and said to the audience, "This place got mice." We wondered for a bit what he could have meant. The first set began with Jack Straw, my favorite song to open a show, and the entire first setwas nearly flawless. There were no rare songs to speak of, but on the other hand Weir chose not to play any of his "new" songs for a change either (Hell In A Bucket, Brother Esau, and Throwing Stones were the three most frequently played songs in 1983 and 1984). They closed the first set with Might As Well, which brought back the memory of a version that closed the first set of the first show at the Hult in '83, which brought down the house, the best version I can remember. This one wasn't quite that good, but close enough.

The second set had a number of great surprises. The set opened with Scarlet Begonias, but rather than following with Fire On The Mountain, Garcia instead played a few notes of Touch Of Grey during the transition, and the band joined in with enthusiasm. The novelty (this was a first for this combination) inspired well-played versions of Women Are Smarter and Terrapin, and during the drums we got our second surprise. Ken Kesey and friends rolled out the Thunder Machine to the front of the stage for an extended period of mayhem and madness. I had only seen it once before (at McArthur Court in 1981) but remembered it quite clearly. It seemed that the band thought it was great too.

A very spacey Other One followed a wild jam and then came Wharf Rat. I was mildly surprised at hearing I Need A Miracle to begin closing the set, but I figured there was a good chance of Bertha> Good Lovin would follow and that was OK by me. Imagine my utter shock at that point when Jerry played the opening notes to Morning Dew! But wait a minute, didn't they already play Wharf Rat? — this was unbelievable. And it sure was! When they left the stage after Dew I was only slightly disappointed not to hear a real rockin' ending like Sugar Magnolia (my favorite closer), but after a set like that who was complaining?

When they came back out for the encore I heard Jerry play a note or two of Sugar Magnolia, but then Weir played a few notes of something different and Phil played a couple notes of something else. Then Jerry again with Sugar Magnolia and I tried to concentrate on sending him a mental message to stick with it and keep trying. One or two others joined him and YES! off they went! I couldn't believe it!

Weir got into it, and they played what seemed to be the best Sugar Magnolia ever and then segued into Brokedown. I thought nothing could have been more perfect. We got it all.

06-09-84 Cal Expo - Mike Dolgushkin

Boy, was this a scorcher! It's a good thing that they had cold showers set up in the back, or a lot of people probably would have died. Iko to open the show was a nice touch. Miracle> Bertha and a lengthy, tempo-shifting Playin made it one of the great second sets. And what a party in the campsite afterward. People were whooping and yelling and running around naked and all kinds of things.

07-13 -> 15-84 Greek - Mike Dolgushkin

A weekend at the Greek was always an "event" in the same sense that the New Year's run is an "event." At those series more than any other, expectations for spectacular performances ran high, the pressure was on for the band to deliver. When they delivered everyone would get off mightily, when they didn't, the disappointment visibly showed. (Unlike the Frost where everyone was blissed out no matter what.)

In line for Friday's show the first indication that something might be afoot came from a friend who said flat out that the Dead would do Dark Star on Saturday to slide show accompaniment. "Yeah, right," I thought. The Dead planning something like that? Give me a break. Well, the first set had its moments but was generally no shakes, the second set was where things took off: Scarlet Begonias into the expected Touch of Grey. Very well done. The entire post-space was good also.

After Sugar Magnolia came a break announcement. The screen came down. We started viewing the moonscapes. Who, pray tell, in the Dead organization arranged for the shooting star? The band came back; we all knew what they would do. It was exciting to hear Dark Star with such exceptional visuals, musically it broke no new ground, being similar in execution to Bird Song or Estimated Prophet. The best part was after the second verse when there came a short feedback jam that had the makings of a segue. (I heard people calling out for St. Stephen.) It was not to be.

Saturday's show I remember as being standard material played competently. Help> Slip> Franklin's was fun, of course, but a real low point came after space. There was literally NO jam out of Truckin'. I couldn't believe it. This was also the only Greek show to get rained on. Just a little, but it did rain.

Unlike Sunday. Typical afternoon Greek scorching. The band opened with the long awaited reappearance of Dancin' in the Streets in a throwback to its (more or less) 1966 arrangement. It was a very smooth rendition, leading unexpectedly into Bird Song. All right, theze boyz mean business! Minglewood, Cumberland, Esau, Ramble on Rose, Hell in a Bucket; each song was energetic and flawless. An outstanding first set, more than just a warmup for the blowout that followed. I knew what had been broken out on tour, but I didn't recognize Why Don't We Do it in the Road until Phil and Brent started singing. Has anyone estimated the percentage of people in the Greek Theatre who were laughing? A tight, bubbly China Cat> Rider came next; then on into a lengthy, varied Playing in the Band. Jam city, folks. But that wasn't all. Uncle John's Band melted into a longer than usual instrumental sequence. They got so lost in it that they never actually finished the song, winding up in Brent's Don't Need Love instead. By this time I was so satisfied that I don't remember much about the rest of it, although it was apparently good. After the show we walked back to the car in the familiar state of pleasant exhaustion that invariably follows a great show.

07-13-84 Greek - Fred Heutte

This is a famous show for many reasons — a full moon at the Greek on a perfectly clear Friday the 13th evening and a memorable Dark Star encore. But other reasons made this show noteworthy for me. For one, even without the encore, the whole performance was one of the best that year. The second set starts with one of the few Scarlet Begonias> Touch of Grey> Fire On The Mountain sequences the band tried, and it's a gem, swinging through the transitions at full speed.

The second is a lesson about tapes rather than shows. I have this one in both audience and soundboard versions; the audience one is clearly inferior in all technical respects, with restricted range, a few dropouts, and uncertain levels. But the overall "feel" is actually superior to the soundboard. The Greek's superb acoustics give even modest audience taping setups a very full sound, which is well balanced with the "liveness" of the crowd itself. The exquisite Garcia soloing in Scarlet is in the montage of the soundboard mix, but it stands out in full relief on the audience tape, making it easy to understand the crowd's roar of appreciation. Audience tapes are not automatically inferior to soundboard tapes, just different (although soundboards may get the overall nod most of the time). With audience taping rapidly maturing, and the joint development of the UltraMatrix system by Dan Healy and UltraSound, both audience and board tapes are beginning to reflect each other's strengths.

10-12-84 Augusta Civic Center - Tom Van Sant

This is the kind of intimate hall the Dead can't play anymore, though they are still capable of playing shows of this calibre, thank God!

It was obvious from the first few seconds of Feel Like A Stranger that Jerry was on. The first set is only about sixty minutes long, but features some of my favorite folk-rock selections, including On The Road Again> Jack A Roe and Cumberland Blues. An absolutely killer Music Never Stopped wraps up the set, and every lick Garcia played was right there.

The second set is one of my all-time favorites, beginning with Cold Rain & Snow. I've never seen a bad one. A Lost Sailor> Saint Of Circumstance, and Brent's Don't Need Love were followed by a joyous Uncle John's Band, perfectly rendered. A real surprise came out of the drums. The night before, in the same hall, the Dead had played Playin' In The Band. They jammed it out, but skipped the reprise. Tonight there was much noodling on the Playin' theme during Space, but none of us thought they'd actually do it again. But they did — back into the reprise of Uncle John's, dropping into a Morning Dew that ranks as the best I've ever seen. Jerry's vocals were powerful, with that desperate edge, and the whole band coalesced wonderfully once again. I vividly remember the lights during Morning Dew's quiet passage, with only a few white beams focused down on Jerry's hair as he played some rather atonal licks before the song's thundering finale. The band left the stage, and returned for one of the best post-Pigpen Good Lovin's ever. Once again, Garcia's playing was controlled and fresh. An unforgettable night.

10-08-84 Worcester Centrum - Rob Bertrando

This show deserves mention for the pre-drums section of the jam. A typically powerful Terrapin is followed by a few minutes of a soft jam with hints of Playin and the Alhambra, then segues into Samson. The subsequent I Just Want to Make Love to You (the second and last, much faster tempo than 7/22) is followed by a blues jam which finally winds around to I Need a Miracle. This is also! followed by a blues jam which transforms into pre-drums space. The Truckin> Wharf Rat> NFA post-drums never regains the earlier spark.

11-02-84 B. C. T. - Stu Nixon

From the opening notes of the first song I had a feeling that this was going to be a great show. This was the fifth of a six show run at BCT, and based on the four previous nights we were anticipating that the band would continue to be play very well. Little did we know the boys were about to up the ante and play two shows that were way beyond our wildest dreams. The night before was a night off, but on Halloween we had many surprises, musical and otherwise. The band came out wearing masks for the beginning of the first song, and then Bob Weir really got into the spirit by wearing four different shirts during the show, including a tie-dyed polo, a sleeveless t-shirt, and a long-sleeve, decorated Western-style shirt for the Satisfaction encore.

I was tempted to write about this show at first because of the visual memories as well as the fun music (including a great Morning Dew and One More Halloween Night), but then I remembered the show on 11/3/84. If I had picked the sixth show, I could have written about how I felt when Phil wore a shirt that had the letters UNIX across the front, which I had given to him at the second show. I would have described in graphic detail some of the most intense musical rushes of all time when they played a second-set Cumberland Blues, followed by Gloria (which, in addition to the wonderful surprise, was really rocking), Why Don't We Do It In The Road? (another amazing surprise, with Phil on vocals), and then a great Uncle John's Band (my favorite song of all time) after the drums. But I didn't. I chose the fifth show, 11/2/84, for one main reason. Because Phil Lesh sang again!

Jack Straw has always been my favorite song to open a show, and this one was really nicely done. Right from the start I was in an altered state, so closely tuned in that I was jolted midway with an involuntary shudder down my spine that can be really frightening. The song smoothly flowed into Pretty Peggy-O and I melted completely. I was also frightened for a minute during El Paso when Bob forgot the words and just lost it. So bad in fact that he cracked up and laughed for a second. That broke his mental block and he glanced at Garcia. Jerry gave him a look that said, "What a guy!." Weir then made up for lost words by singing the remaining verses with extra special emphasis and pizazz. Loser was heavy in that powerful but benevolent and peaceful sort of way. Weir appeared ready to avenge his previous slip by giving us a musical first of Smokestack Lightning into Spoonful. Talk about the blues, Weir can sing it! Garcia finished off the first set with Iko Iko and now we'd seen it all: rock, folk, country, blues and New Orleans carnival music, all in one hour.

They opened the second set with Help On The Way and played for the next hour and a half flawlessly. After a while it seemed as if no one wanted to stop playing and I thought they were going to have to skip the drum solo because the others wouldn't leave the stage. After the sixth song, Wharf Rat, there was a second where they could have broken off into drums, but when the moment hit Phil Lesh felt he could jump in with a couple of bass notes that would instantly start a song he would lead and sing the vocals on, something he hadn't done in over 11 years. Gimme Some Lovin was a shocker, there weren't even any rumors about Phil planning on singing again, and he was great!! He and Brent sang lead while Weir and Garcia shared a microphone on backup vocals (Phil used Bob's microphone). We had entered a new era! After that the drummers were finally left alone to do their magic and then the others gradually returned and they all wove their way into Playing In The Band, which was followed by one of my favorite combinations of all: Bertha into Good Lovin, complete with screaming vocals from Weir that kept up a great tradition for this song. Unbelievable ending. Weir's rap was "just exactly perfect." Pure rock 'n' roll!! Full speed dancing at its best.

For the encore they surprised us again by pulling Casey Jones out of its recent retirement for a rare appearance. A cherry on top of the banana split (if you'll excuse the fattening analogy).

I saw three nights of this run. I find that the 28th is a generally underrated show, probably because they only did 14 songs. Since Playing in the Band takes up the length of three I'll let that speak for itself. Everyone had high expectations for Halloween; aside from the best (and last) Lazy Lightnin'> Supplication of all time the band failed to deliver. If you've never heard the Morning Dew from that night consider yourself lucky. But... the last two shows of this series are what legends are made of.

I skipped the show on November 2nd. The next morning I got a call from Wolfgram. "Oh no... oh fuck... oh shit... I missed all that!" I expressed my hope that they still had something left in them for that night. Wolfgram assured me they did, although I couldn't imagine how. I went to BCT and found my seat, not knowing what to expect. Alabama> Promised Land was RIPPIN', the boys were off to a good start. Friend of the Devil was well played but seemed too safe of a choice, however, they followed it with the first known performance of Willie Dixon's Down in the Bottom. (A tune I was familiar with through Nick Gravenites.) Next was a decent Roses into Music Never Stopped into Deal to close the set. Good performance, short song list. If anything special happened it wouldn't be till later.

The second set began with Feel Like a Stranger into Cumberland Blues, two songs that all too rarely crop up in the second set. It's a shame, since putting them there tends to invigorate both. Next came a familiar chord progression. "What is it?... it couldn't be... it can't be...IT IS! GLORIA!!" I started screaming. I couldn't help it, it was the last song I expected to hear. What a crowd response! Besides the song choice itself this was also an unbelievably hot performance, slower than sometimes done but very effective. The show could have ended right there and I would have been satisfied. Of course, there was more to come. Out of Gloria Phil began the opening riff to Lovelight (just like 10/16/81) but went unheeded. The music slowed down, then went into a bouncy jam that could have become Deep Elem Blues but became Why Don't We Do it in the Road instead. A funny thing happened: Phil refused to sing the song. ("You guys didn't wanna do Lovelight so I'm not gonna sing this.") Jerry, Bob and Brent each took a stab at the vocals. The results were disjointed, to say the least, but by this time it didn't matter. Nothing mattered. They could have done Three Blind Mice and said goodnight and it wouldn't have mattered. As it was, they were not done with us yet. A pretty Garcia-led jam trailed off into Drumz.

After a long (and I do mean long) Space came a beautiful Uncle John's Band; leading into the Bay Area debut of Dear Mr. Fantasy. I perceived it at the time as a Garcia song; strange for a tune that became so identified with Brent. At the end of Throwin' Stones I had one more wish. "PLEASE, guys! You've done Not Fade Away already. You HAVE to do Lovelight NOW!" Prayers answered. I was surprised how arranged it was, since the two previous versions I'd seen live were rather off-the-cuff. A very explosive ending, a Brokedown encore and it was time to go.

03-09-85 Berkeley Com. Theater - John J. Wood

Although the show itself (on tape) is rather sub-par and rushed, it is noteworthy for the once-only pairing of China Cat> Cumberland Blues, both played at a near-breakneck, amphetamined pace. Also worth mentioning is the cameo by Merl Saunders, who contributes some loony organ swirls in a Twilight Zone space before the band ventures into The Other One. Merl's appearance isn't a complete surprise, as at that time, he and the Dead composed the theme for the "new" Twilight Zone television series.

04-06 -> 04-08-85 Spectrum - John Whitehead

As the 1985 spring tour came to a close, the band was on a roll and all indicated that it was going to be a good last weekend in Philadelphia. The band had debuted and brought back a half-dozen songs earlier in the tour and had thrown in a few surprises with the old songs. Plus, I and my friends recognized this as a religious weekend: Saturday (the 6th) was my birthday, Sunday was Easter, and Monday was Buddha's birthday.

Saturday's show was nice, including strong playing on Feel Like a Stranger, a burning China Cat> Rider, and the Other One. It gave no indication of the direction the band was to head in the next night, though. As they took to the stage Sunday, Phil stepped up to his mic and said, "Hiya! Hiya, kids! Can you hear me?" and made sure everyone did with Why Don't We Do It in the Road. Jerry responded with the now-returned Mississippi Half Step, which segued into a rolling C.C. Rider. This was followed by a nice Bird Song, Dancin In The Streets, and Deal — a short but great first set.

The second set opened with an amazing Shakedown Street which featured some catchy Shakedown licks by Garcia with the band backing him up beautifully. Jerry would get in a groove, then Brent, then the band would work to a frenzy, and Jerry would break off and start pulling the jam with him as he came up with a new melodic phrase. After drums and space we got another dose of Phil with Gimme Some Lovin'. At the end of this Easter evening, Bob said, "Good night, and thank you Jesus." It was, by most accounts, the favorite show of the tour, and we figured that after the Easter blowout, Monday night's tour-closer would be a letdown.

But like so many times before, we had misjudged the Grateful Dead. They exploded with the surprising intro of Midnight Hour> Walkin The Dog> Big Boss Man. Now that all doubts were dispelled, they proceeded to play the hell out of the Spectrum. A tight Me & My Uncle was followed by a breathless Cumberland Blues, and no one could slow down for the next six songs. Those included the new cover of Bottom/Superstitious and a jam of the middle part of Lazy Lightning> Supplication (which we dubbed the "arrow jam," since it wasn't quite either song) connecting Brent's new Tons Of Steel and a rocking Might As Well.

The second set opened with the interesting combination of Revolution, Hell In A Bucket, and Touch Of Grey. As the band began the middle jam of Estimated Prophet, a beach ball landed on the front of the stage. At the climax of it, Bob ran up to kick it on the beat — and slipped on the flowers and boxes on the stage and landed flat on his ass! The arena roared with laughter, but he remained as he had fallen; with his legs hanging over the edge of the stage, he played his guitar like nothing had happened. A fast Eyes Of The World led into drums; then Garcia and Weir led an interesting chord progression, which became Goin Down The Road.

As the set ended and they closed the weekend and tour with Brokedown Palace, we realized we had seen one of their best sets of shows. They had brought new ideas to the old songs and thrown in a lot of surprises along the way. They would be hard pressed to play any better than they did that weekend; but then again, I wouldn't want to misjudge them.

06-14-85 & 06-16-85 Greek - Mike Dolgushkin

The first show seemed legendary at the time, notwithstanding the equipment fuckups. Dancin was great, hearing Keep in Growin' for the first time, Stagger Lee, and Comes A Time after lengthy absences, and Dew to open the second (or third?) set made this a magical experience for me. On the 16th when they started Cryptical my brother and I looked at each other and simply said "WOW!" The Other One in it's old context took on new power.

06-14-85 Greek Theatre - Stu Nixon

The show that has been unofficially referred to as the 20th anniversary concert was probably my favorite show of 1985. To understand why I would pick this show, you must try to imagine where my head was at during the '85 Greeks. I was in the middle of a touring stretch (show 35 of 85 in a row from the '84 BCT shows until March '86) that kept me pretty busy. This was the weekend of the band's 20th anniversary and although there was some discussion as to whether Friday, Saturday, or a week ago Wednesday was the exact date, the considerable hype that accompanied this auspicious event didn't bother me at all. By this time I was rating shows on three main criteria: performance, song selection, and fun quotient. All three are subjective to some degree, but the fun quotient is completely so. That Friday in Berkeley saw a lot of all three.

There was always something special about seeing the Dead at the Greek anyway, but this time we all suspected that something different might happen. Judging from the commotion going on around the stage we knew they were coming out soon. All of a sudden we heard, "It was twenty years ago today, Sergeant Pepper taught the band to play," and I knew they were taking this anniversary thing seriously. Well, at least someone was. Hard to tell about the band though, considering the beginning of the first set and all the problems they were having. All kinds of equipment problems hampered the first five songs to varying degrees. Dancin In The Streets was very well played and the whole place was up and dancing from the first notes, but by the time they finished Hell In A Bucket it had gotten really out of hand with some speakers squealing feedback and others not working at all. The band left the stage after that and it wasn't really clear if that was the end of the first set or not.

Luckily, they came back after twenty minutes and played four more songs before taking the real break. And what an incredible four songs they were! Phil jumped out first and sang Keep On Growin' for us for the first time. That was something else! A really great song, coupled with the rarity of Phil's vocals, you'd think the band has been playing it for years. Garcia then stunned us with Stagger Lee (first time in almost three years) and we were really having fun now. The Let It Grow that followed seemed longer than usual and had several excellent jams and then closing the set with Deal balanced things just right.

The break was pretty long, but it gave everybody a chance to see and talk with friends that they were looking forward to meeting again at the Greek. Truly the ultimate place to hang out and see the Dead. If I had to pick the one place that I'd rather see the Dead than any other, it would be the Greek. After we were all back in position and ready for the music to resume, the band took the stage for the third time. Although I've been known to waver on this issue, I now call this a three-set show. A lot of the traditional set format and song orders had been broken so far anyway, so why not? Anything goes. As the band started tuning up for the second set, weird voices and odd sounds started coming out of the speakers. It didn't look like any of the band members were saying anything or causing those sounds, but it was definitely their voices. I like the name "Barbed Wire '85" for those weird moments. Then without warning, right out of the middle of tuning, Jerry broke into Morning Dew and the band was right there with him. Not the best version of all time, but pretty close. Opening with a song like that made me wonder what else Garcia might sing later on in the set. It turned out that we ended up getting two more relatively rare Jerry songs: China Doll and Comes A Time. Weir decided that tonight he felt like rocking out solid with Playing In The Band, Truckin and Sugar Magnolia (my favorite show closer), while also throwing in Smokestack Lightning for a touch of the blues. Definitely an A-plus set after all the hassles of the first set(s). Day Job served as a perfect up-tempo breath of air to bring us back to our senses after an hour and a half trip to outer space and back. What a day! And this was only the Friday show!

06-15-85 Greek Theatre - Phil DeGuere

It was a beautiful sunny day. The Dead started at 5:00 PM and rocked on till nightfall. This was the middle show of a three-gig set and, as is often the case at the Greek, it was textbook perfect: the first night was all screwed up, the second polished like a diamond, the third a big friendly bear hug to send us on our way home. The Saturday show has some of the most blistering licks from Garcia I've ever heard — no matter how many times I'd heard the songs before, that night he found a new way to style every one of them. A gem.

06-25-85 Blossom Music Centre - Peter Lavezzoli

Most Dead Heads have divided opinions about 1985. Some love the extended jams that took place during the year, along with some adventurous setlists and a general good-time atmosphere. But others find Jerry's voice to be unbearably strident during this time, sloppy mistakes are often made, and at times the band sounds as though they're playing on amphetamines. But this show has the best of both worlds, something everyone can enjoy, even those who are normally critical of mid-80s Dead. Not only are the jams very thoroughly explored, but Jerry's vocals are surprisingly on target, as is his playing. There are few if any mistakes made at this show lyrically or musically, the band's energy is enormous, and the jams get way out there. A perfect 1985 show in every way.

The first set is as solid and enjoyable as we can expect. One of the few well-played versions of Day Tripper opens this show, and it is bright and confident, setting the tone for the rest of the performance. Jerry sings and plays flawlessly on West LA, hitting every note and lyric that he reaches for. He sounds supremely confident, and his playing proves it. CC Rider continues this positive trend, as does a perfect Dire Wolf. BIODTL sounds as raucous and assured as the version from their debut album. Row Jimmy is one of the sweeter versions, very slow and soulful as Jerry weaves delicate lines in and out of the music, while also doing vocal justice to the lyrics—one of the highlights of this strong show. Uncle>River is completely animated, and Jerry's fast picking doesn't miss a beat. Railroad Blues keeps the set rocking hard, with yet another extroverted vocal and lead from Jerry. The closing pair of Jack Straw>Might As Well is a perfectly appropriate end to this well played and entertaining set.

The second set opens with what may be the tightest Gimme Some Lovin I've ever heard. Phil and Brunt's vocals are locked on target, with the band hammering the groove down behind them. This is fun music! Jerry immediately begins China Cat, and again his vocals and guitar are brimming with life. Every note sparkles and shines, as the lengthy transition into Rider becomes a showcase for Jerry's furious lead guitar. The music is bright and upbeat, but not rushed—the groove is just right, as it is during this whole show. This is a great tape to bring outdoors, for a hike or a day at the beach.

Rider immediately segues into one of the longest and most developed Playin jams from the 80s. This version of Playin stretches for about sixteen minutes before Drums, and Jerry leads the way with broad strokes of effortless improvisation, bright as the summer sky. Drums was often a colorful highlight in 1985, and this is no exception. Billy and Mickey work through a variety of percussion sounds before furiously attacking the Beast, much to the crowd's delight.

Space gently explores melodic terrain before moving into The Wheel. Again, this version is unusual for 1985 because of the strong vocals, and the smooth execution. This segues back into Playin, with a nicely developed jam before the Reprise, after which comes the classic segue into China Doll. Jerry is once again relaxed and assured, as he sings and plays to his best potential. This very nicely moves into a Sugar Mag that suddenly finds the band back in hard rock mode, with Bobby working the crowd with his stage moves and vocal excursions, and Jerry slicing through the closing jam with searing leads. Touch of Grey is the perfect encore for this spirited and triumphant show, easily the best whole show I've heard from 1985.

06-27-85 Saratoga - John Whitehead

When the Dead arrived at SPAC for their third year in a row, they were greeted by the largest crowd ever assembled there: just over 40,000 people. This caused a few problems, the worst of which was that hundreds stormed the balcony of the pavilion, causing it to be dangerously overcrowded and to bounce as people danced. But the band soon caught everyone's attention with a rocking intro of Midnight Hour followed by Bertha. After Red Rooster, the band had to address the problem of people sitting on the edge of the rail-less balcony. Bobby mumbled that, "that first step's a real doozy and so kind of cool it," then Phil stalked up and they both yelled at people. After such serious talk, Bob broke the ice with a joke, and Jerry jumped into the "Nineteen-forty, X-mas Eve" of a strong version of the newly revived Stagger Lee.

After a slow, summery El Paso, we were all taken by surprise by a beautiful Crazy Fingers — a rare song to begin with, and even rarer in the middle of the first set. The band showed it wanted to jam as they segued into the instrumental theme of Lazy Lightning / Supplication. Unlike the previous times they had jammed on it, this time Garcia played his intro lick to Lazy Lightning, trying to get Weir to sing it. Despite the prompting and an excited audience, he did not, and the jam eventually evolved into another rarity, the pretty High Time. They closed the set with a powerful Hell In A Bucket and Don't Ease.

The energy continued as they opened the second set with a hot Feel Like a Stranger. After several minutes of a high-powered jam, Jerry broke into Eyes Of The World, which would have been a smooth transition if his microphone had not missed the first few words. This flowed into a well-played Goin' Down The Road, then Bobby led the band into Woman Smarter, which unfortunately paled to the high-energy of the first three songs of the set. Although space featured some interesting vocal weirdness, the closing Truckin'> Spoonful> Black Peter> Lovelight could not regain the level of playing of the first portion of the show. With the double encore of Johnny B. Goode> Baby Blue, and the overall quality of the playing and song selection before drums, this show, like so many of those at SPAC, was more than worthwhile and memorable.

08-31-85 Manor Downs - Robin Nixon

This show was wonderful! After sweating to death the night before in the heat and humidity of Houston, Manor Downs was a welcome relief. It was hot but dry, and the show was general admission on a big, grassy field encircled by the racetrack. With tons of room to dance I stood way on the left side so that I could watch Jerry play when he turned to face Phil. In the first set Mississippi Half Step, El Paso, Mexicali> Big River, and Let It Grow were perfect choices for our geographical location. Garcia'a guitar on Half Step had an especially twangy, western sound that I loved and the "across the Rio Grand-e-o" really fit the atmosphere. Bobby didn't even forget the words during El Paso! Good thing since we were actually in Texas! The second set was short, probably due to the heat, but well played and enjoyable. My favorite moment was the encore. We had headed to the back of the Downs and Jerry played a sweet, melodic ballad, She Belongs to Me. The sound travelled across the open prairie sounding so gorgeous it gave me goosebumps. As we started heading out after the second encore of One More Saturday Night I realized the Dead really do play American music. They fit so well everywhere they play, even in the heart of Texas.

09-11-85 Kaiser - Phil DeGuere

I've probably listened to the tape of this one more often than any other I have; the second set is unparalleled. It was Mickey's birthday and a feeling of celebration was in the air. The first set was excellent but had (for me) a routine song selection. In the middle of the second set, however, from Terrapin into Women Are Smarter, the drums and the space and then (I think) Gimme Some Lovin the boys were cookin'.

09-12-85 Kaiser - Ross Warner

1985 remains one of the classic vintages for tapes due to both performance and sound quality. While for most of the year Jerry sounds, as my friend Mike pointed out, like he has a mouthful chocolate pudding, his guitar playing is at a level of speed and intensity the decade had never seen. However, in '85 the band "doesn't do psychedelic very well." Jerry played the hell out of the old standards, but tunes like Bird Song, The Other One and Playin' didn't quite reach the same heights. This tape is the exception. The pre-Drums showcases a capacity of Jerry's repertoire that was largely absent amidst the excellence of 1985.

The second set begins with what would be the last version of Help On The Way until the "Warlocks" show of 10/8/89. Since its revival two years earlier, the band had been slowly letting the song fade from the rotation. Perhaps, à la Dark Star, they were not giving it the treatment they felt it deserved. Help had been played once in the spring of '85 at the second Springfield show and had been absent since. The boys kick right into this one. Maybe absence does make the heart grow fonder because they've got all the cylinders going. Phil's bass lends a fluid, jazzy feel and Jerry hits all the verses despite the infrequency of the song. The ensuing Slipknot! does not disappoint. Jerry begins at a breakneck speed and does not let up. The soundboard I have reveals that this Slipknot! has no holes—no lulls, no gaps. Jerry is exploratory, but never gets lost. By the time he settles into Franklin's Tower he has freed the audience's memory of some of those 80s Slipknot!s when The Fat Man seems to be forced into some contrived meandering to fill the time until the third passage of this magical suite.

Franklin's Tower sparkles, but does not cover any new musical ground. Perhaps this is because, unlike the previous two songs, they had been playing it all year. Once again, Phil gives the song a spine and Jerry lends that '85 intensity to it.

But it is the next song that truly defines the set. Playin' In The Band is a masterpiece. Since it is the last song before the drums, this version is unattached and definitely flaunts it. Jerry leads the band through a labyrinth that resembles the shrub maze from "The Shining." Amazingly, he never makes a wrong turn. This rendition blows away every other version of the year. It contains that mystical quality that is so sorely lacking for the entire year. Ever notice how despite the popularity of '85 tapes, no version of Playin' ever makes the DeadBase Readers Poll? This rendition put all the others of the year to shame.

At one point in the jam, when it seems that Jerry has gone even too far from home to ever bring himself, the band and the audience back to earth, a faint coyote howl can be heard. Then, from somewhere in Dan Healy's arsenal a full-fledged yelp emits from the speakers. That's cool. Heh, heh, heh. But rather than look for the trail of bread crumbs to find the way back to home base, Jerry marches on. He pushes the band places they hadn't been since they played Dark Star at the Greek over a year ago. Leaving all in attendance with a heavy sense of awe, Se~nor Garcia, gives way to the percussionists.

The post-Space suite of The Other One-> Black Peter-> Throwing Stones-> Not Fade Away-> Brokedown Palace is solid, but lacks the anything-can-happen quality of the previous 45 minutes. The Other One begins without fanfare, with only Bobby's hushed vocals to introduce it. This gives the audience one less jam. Black Peter has some nice licks. The closing duo has some nice vocal work by Bobby-O. He sings Throwing Stones with the utmost desperation and conviction. Not Fade Away has some nice fret work by Jerry and the drummers keep the vibe alive until the rest of the band returns to the stage for the encore. I guess this is what people mean when they say the band is "tight." The jams are cohesive, but compact. That's not the Grateful Dead I love. But they've already shown me enough to make this tape a definite keeper. Seek it out. It won't come to you.

10-31-85 Carolina Coliseum - John Whitehead

All Hallow's Eve in 1985 found the Grateful Dead not at the U.S.C. in southern California but at the one in South Carolina. Despite the rain, many traveled to see the band's first South Carolina appearance and the first Halloween show outside California for several years. The holiday (second only to New Year's Eve in Deadhead importance) brought out the wildness in all, most obvious in the creative costumes which included giant skulls, giant mushrooms, and my favorite, an accident victim with a tire track running all the way up his leg, body, and face. As we filtered into the small and steep coliseum to whoops of "trip or treat!" we noticed several pumpkins on stage and Dan Healy clowning around in a wizard's outfit.

As the band took the stage, Weir had to work on his chronic amp problem. Garcia started a Finiculi Finicula for the first time in over a year, which featured some distracting Healy-sounds, then all fell silent for several seconds. The peace was broken suddenly with a long howl from Phil, who then started laughing diabolically. Jerry followed the cackling with distorted guitar, and the band entertained the Halloween revelers with several minutes of intense feedback and space (the bands way of "trick"-ing the fans), just in case they forgot what day it was. Finally, Garcia broke into Werewolves Of London (last played with Keith and Donna) to the delight of all. A rather good early-set Music Never Stopped followed and Bob greeted us with a "Good evening, music lovers." Garcia noodled around with Teddy Bear's Picnic as he tuned, but after that point the band couldn't quite keep up the energy level they had set in the first few minutes. Looks Like Rain was an exception as Weir took the audience from the heights of love to the depths of despair and back instantly, with some nice "rain" effects from the lights.

The second set was not much better than the first. Shakedown never really got "there," nor did Playin, which Jerry surprisingly led into Ship Of Fools. This was followed by a nearly ten-minute jam, then drums, and another several-minute jam (but no repeat of space). The show ended with a one-two punch of Dear Mr. Fantasy (whose vocals Jerry had now completely relinquished to Brent) and Not Fade Away. Although after the explosive beginning the music lacked the energy of many of the other shows of the tour, it was still a special Halloween night.

11-01-85 & 11-02-85 Richmond - John Whitehead

Friday — All Saint's Day — found us in Richmond with the rain still falling. We were greeted with a solid Dancin In The Streets and Cold Rain & Snow opener. A well-played countryish set followed, closing with Jack Straw and Don't Ease Me In. The second set opened with a rocking Samson & Delilah, but settled into a groove with High Time and He's Gone. As He's Gone started to wind down, Mickey moved to his big drums and it looked as if the band would forfeit the stage to the percussionists. Bobby instead led the band into Spoonful, and then it seemed that drums would start. But Jerry would have none of that, and he sang a beautiful Comes A Time, a welcome return to the band's repertoire. Once again the drum solo was expected, but Bob wasn't about to let Jerry have the last word: he began a soulful Lost Sailor which finally drifted into drums.

After space, what emerged but Saint Of Circumstance, an appropriate and powerful continuation of what had come before drums. We then got a solid dose of Phil and Brent with Gimme Some Lovin', and Jerry sang another nice ballad, Dylan's She Belongs To Me. And the set closer was the very rare rocker Gloria, with Bob bringing the crowd to a frenzy by singing "G - L - O - R — wait a minute!" and getting the band to bring the energy just a little bit higher before he would spell it all. The last time he stopped to get the audience to help out: "Sometimes it's hard to get it all together when you want to try and spell, but what you're gonna make me do here, somehow I can tell." It was an exhilirating conclusion to a long and varied show, which then was capped with a Day Job — apparently the only song that the band had energy left for.

Saturday jumped off to a quick start of Bertha> Greatest Story but soon mellowed out. Not until the end of the set with a spirited Let It Grow was everyone up and dancing hard. The second set began with a bouncy Iko Iko and a long Estimated Prophet. After Uncle John's Band a several-minute jam wound down to a nice China Doll; then Playin In The Band was hinted at but it was too late for it and the Drums began. Mickey went wild on his tar and synthesizers, then there was a special-effects space, which gave way to Morning Dew. I think that the strongest versions of Morning Dew are often those that have come out of space, and tonight's was no exception, with Phil hitting power chords that rattled his strings and our bones. A bitter reading of Throwing Stones was followed by a surprisingly strong Lovelight. To end this three-night stand of Columbia and Richmond we were treated to a beautiful Baby Blue.

11-01-85 Richmond Coliseum - Patrick Tiedemann

The headlines in the local papers the morning after this two night stand made it clear that the city of Richmond had not been so up in arms over an invasion since Lee retreated and Grant marched in the Yankee army. But there was a reason the city had exploded over the past two nights. The Dead played a pair of smokers that caused a jubilant elation among those in attendance that spilled over into the streets and hotels. The wildest, funnest hotel scenes I ever saw in all my years on the road occurred on these nights in Richmond, and the shows were the cause.

November 1st was the crown jewel in a milestone year for the band. After a LONG tune-up Bob, Brent and the Jer Man rocked out a Dancin' that set the trend for the rest of the weekend, with Jerry doing a lot of the fast licks that you often had to wait till the second set for. The Cold Rain to follow was just the right groove to keep up the dancing. The rest of the first set had a decidedly southern/down home theme with Rooster (Bob on slide guitar), Stagger Lee, Me & My Uncle> Big River, Brown Eyed, Jack Straw, and a be-boppin' Don't Ease to end a high quality first set.

The second set made this Friday one of the great nights in the history of the Dead. You may not think so from looking at the list, but listen to a good tape, or talk to someone who was there, and this was up there at the top. One major highlight was the uniqueness of the set list up until that point, the number of new songs or oldies that were making a return that corresponded in this one show. Also the quality of the music was superb- crisp guitar and keyboards, booming base, a strong backbeat fro Bill and Mickey- making the combo of sweet, flawless Jerry ballads, (completed by his ability to still hold the high sung notes in '85) and rockin' rollin' party jams classic versions of each and every number.

The appearance of High Time, Comes A Time (back in the lists after five years), and She Belongs To Me (making a comeback that year after 1,500 shows) in one set was an unheard of treat. Jerry was just in that rare mood to pull out all the treats in his bag, and he delivers them with genuine feeling. He was an artist with a gift to give that night. Bob broke up a haunting Lost Sailor/Saint for the first time around the Drums> Space. Another double whammy occurred with Phil belting out Gimme Some Lovin' (only a year old) and the show-stoppin', crowd-(and Bobby)-screamin' Gloria encore, (only the fourth time it was played, and the last for quite some time). Day Job ended a two song encore and a two hour second set.

The faces of the crowd as the Coliseum cleared were similar to the faces of the crowd on 10-9-89, flushed, excited, and satisfied. No matter how far we had come and what we had expected, that crowd was convinced they had received a gift and been a part of a rare event: the DEAD on a peak night!

11-05-85 Worcester - Simon Friedman

This was a fun show that contained a good dose of surprises and was on the whole very well played. The second and last ever version of Kansas City (debuted a week early in honor of the Royals' World Series victory) was a nice change from Bobby's overplayed blues repertoire. In fact, Weir sang it with about as much conviction as I've ever heard from him. This was followed by Tennessee Jed, with Garcia scrambling the verses, and very good versions of Bird Song and Looks Like Rain later on.

Set two began with the band singing Happy Birthday to the man likely to be the world's tallest Deadhead, Bill Walton, who was in attendance with several of his Celtic teammates. A hot Shakedown and an even hotter Women Are Smarter followed. Things temporarily fell apart with Ship Of Fools, Garcia once again having trouble with the words. But the band came right back with an unusual jam, starting with Supplication and then a Playin reprise jam, not quite completing the tune that was played the previous night. Brent's overwrought yet still compelling Don't Need Love followed.

Tom Thumb's Blues was the last thing I expected to come out of space. Phil sang it with his usual confidence and humor. The rest of the set fell into an ordinary pattern, but it was well played. Good Lovin was among the hottest I've heard. Brokedown Palace provided a stark yet fitting contrast to the blazing music of the evening.

11-07,08-85 Rochester War Memorial - Ross Warner

"You just know Jerry loves Rochester," Ian would say.

"What?" I'd unknowingly reply.

"Back in the day, those War Memorial shows in '85. THEY were the shit. Peggy-O, Samson, Jack Straw, Revolution and 'The Atomic Bobby'—all that good stuff.

Even though I didn't quite understand, I took Ian's word on it. During my Jedi training, he hadn't steered me wrong yet. My pledge period at the University of Rochester's Delta Sigma Phi had taken my Deaducation furthur than my summers at Camp Baco (see 6/28/88 SPAC review) could ever have imagine. The 1990 incarnation of Delta Sig, like its rock and roll counterpart, the Grateful Dead, was just about the coolest thing I'd ever seen. But back in '85, they were both a raging uncontrollable beast. As John J. Wood has so accurately chronicled over the years, Western New York has a love affair with the band that is undying and pure. To see the goddamn Grateful Dead in downtown Roch-cha-cha must have been quite a scene. And for Ian and the rest of fraternity, as hard-core heads as there were, to be at the center of it must have been quite a show. It was. In fact, it was quite a pair of shows.

I was able to repay Ian for my Deaducation by getting him a perfect audience copy of the second set on the 7th and he responded in kind by hooking me up with flawless audience recordings of both sets from the 8th. They do not disappoint. The first night's second set begins with the boys CHARGING into a fiery Touch Of Grey. Phil's bass is churning like a turbine that is about to overheat, but never does. Jerry's picking sparkles before he speaks. Bobby belts out the chorus as a perfect complement to Jerry's inspired-but-less-than-robust vocals. They segue perfectly into a kick-ass Samson & Delilah. "The Angry Bobby" begins to surface and Jerry's solos have enough breathtaking crescendos to last a lifetime, let alone a show. The audience recording clearly reveals Phil's bass, not a widely-celebrated quantity from '85, exploding behind Jerry. The combination of the two simply sizzles. High Time is glorious. Jerry's vocal limitations are exceeded by his sincerity. This is one of those tunes that makes you think that he's actually experienced everything he's singing about. Bobby's powerful backup singing gives the song some force to accompany is fragile sweetness. A rare spot in the set for this one, but a perfect change of pace in this instance.

But it is the ensuing Let It Grow that is the set's enduring masterwork. Breathlessly it rises, plateaus and rises higher like a raging tidal wave. Jerry's searing wails climax so many different times throughout the song, you have no idea when he's going to stop. Only the Let It Grow from 11/4/77 comes to mind. This tune solidifies my belief like that magic year, it is the autumn of '85 in my opinion that is the truly definitive tour of the period. Like the preceding composition, this tune finds itself in an usual spot in the batting order but offers up the fresh perspective its status requires. When listening to this part of the tape, just be sure that your speakers don't melt.

The post-Space, while not possibly being able to match what has just come before it, is not without its highlights. Healy uses some of the eerie effects from the summer's Greek shows. Gimme Some Lovin', still enjoying its honeymoon period, has some inspired vocals by Phil and Brent. Stella Blue is tender yet authoritative. The parting jam isn't quite as intense as I like it, but it ain't bad either. Throwing Stones is as powerful as you could ask for. Bobby's growls give the indication that he'll be grabbing the wheel for the rest of the evening. Not Fade Away also brings the fire. You know they're into it when they do the "bop-bop" in the middle as well as the end. Jerry travels up and down the fretboard with enough zeal to leave the crowd with something to think about. The concluding fade-out is longer than usual, as if the band is hesitant about calling it a night.

Such suspicion is confirmed by the Midnight Hour they offer up upon return. Bobby-O is all sorts of fired up. The finale contains some nice background vocals by Jerry, Phil and Brent which is reminiscent of the Pigpen days. There probably isn't a song that I'd rather hear them encore with and this rendition is a pretty good indication why.

The following night the band picks right back up again. Weir mumbles some philosophical Bobbyism and the band marches into Aiko-Aiko. It's clearly a first-set rendition, as the jam isn't nearly as expanded as the Cumberland County, Cincinnati and Richmond versions from that year. Still, it's a hell of a way to start a show and although it's compact, this Aiko still cooks. Little Red Rooster allows Jerry to stretch out his licks a little further. Bobby-O's impassioned vocals come complete with some nice slide work as well. Peggy-O is a real standout. The Fat Man sings his enlarged heart out and his solos are serve as the Accent for the tossed salad that is Fennario. My Brother Esau and Brown-Eyed Women are both strong readings, but what follows next is a bit of a surprise. Baby What You Want had only been played three times before – twice in the presence of on-stage guests and all three times in the second set. So I'm sure no one was expecting it to pop up where it did. The vocals are tight and the guitar work is precise. But exciting it's not. I'd be lying if I said I was mystified why the song was laid out to pasture with Brent-era renditions of Maybe You Know, I Just Want To Make Love To You and Revolutionary Hamstrung Blues. However, the band counters with an also-rare late first-set Jack Straw, clearly the set's highlight. This one's a real monster. Like the previous night's Let It Grow, the jam has so many crescendos that you're not sure when they're ready to finish up. With Phil laying the bass, Jerry rips into this one. Might As Well is a fitting conclusion, but hardly necessary after its predecessor has already torched the building.

Bobby begins the second set with more vocal chicanery. It's nobody's birthday, so the band celebrates with what would be the last Revolution until the Cap Centre five years later. Ragged but right, this version showcases the playfulness that many of the Beatle covers possess but don't always succeed with. A celebratory anthem indeed. Bobby puts his stamp on the set with Estimated Prophet. Bobby's wailing, Jerry's bending, Phil's pumping — it's on. The jam is loose and powerful. The audience recording (and the audience's screaming) reveals Bobby's lunges accompanying Jerry's immense jamming. As Mr. Weir begins his parting theatrics, it's clear that Healy has thrown his hat into the ring. Massive reverb causes Bobby's yelps to overlap with themselves, thus creating "The Atomic Bobby." Normally I take most of what Ian says about the mid 80s with a grain of salt, since the passage of time can blur memories that were pretty damn blurry to begin with, but he's right about this one. Just when the echoes have completely enveloped the War Memorial and are threatening to hurtle out of control, Bobby authoritatively yells "No!" before reprising his "Worry 'bout me no" bit. Great stuff.

A full jam develops out of the chaos. Jerry bobs and weaves, all the while taking the band with him. When it seems he's satisfied that he's brought everyone in attendance out far enough. He then settles into a groove that becomes Eyes Of The World. 11/5/77 it ain't, but this Eyes is one of the better from a year of pretty un-noteworthy versions. It doesn't eclipse what came before it, but it doesn't embarrass either.

Out of Space, traces of The Other One segue into Bobby's lilting vocal intro. I prefer an opening dose of Phil, but this version quickly builds enough momentum to compensate for the oversight. Bobby keeps the ball rolling with I Need A Miracle, which also energizes the crowd. But Señor Garcia steals the show up to that point with a sweet-as-molasses She Belongs To Me. Remorseful yet optimistic, Jerry nails all the verses. A version like this one makes me sad that the song didn't get heavier play in the rotation and that it was eventually dropped. But at least we'll always have nights like this where it was allowed to even surpass its potential. Sugar Magnolia is of course the perfect conclusion. All the cylinders are now clicking. Bobby howls like a madman and Jerry's blazing guitar work doesn't exactly lend any sanity to the proceedings either. They really tear this one up before they call it night. There's really not much else you can ask for, UNLESS...

They encore with a white hot Satisfaction! Or, as Bobby sings and Ian treasures, "other side of the pearly gates action." Words can't explain this one, so I'll use the only two that come to mind: GET IT.

Having caught the Jerry Band at the War Memorial in '91, my limited experiences in the friendly confines suggest that Jerry does indeed love Rochester. I can only imagine what was going throught the minds of those lucky enough to be in the building on those two autumn nights in '85 when 20,200 received their degreesin higher Deaducation in the All-American City.

11-21, 22-85 Kaiser - Mike Dolgushkin

The October-November 1985 East Coast tour has gone down in history as being one of the Dead's finest. Upon returning to the Henry J. the band, after a tentative opener, proved not to have lost momentum.

At Thursday's show getting Big Boy Pete to open the first set qualified it as a great show in itself. But — the second set is something that — five and a half years later — I can still listen to and not get tired of. Shakedown into Crazy Fingers was a surprising move, Playing in the Band featured much furious improvising before settling gently onto She Belongs to Me (bring it back, Jerry). Post-space was full of surprises — The Other One into Wharf Rat into... oh, Playing in the Band. That could have ended the set but the band went into Gimme Some Lovin' and Midnight Hour. And — if that wasn't enough we got Walkin' the Dog for the encore. Too much.

What Friday lacked in song selection it made up for in sheer power. The entire second set was so intense that we couldn't even talk for 24 hours or so.

Oh yes, and there were the backstage bar incidents. Let me explain that it was cold outside. The first night before the show started, the backstage door was opened to allow entry of the beer kegs. The entire arena instantly froze. Can you imagine sitting in the balcony at Henry J. Kaiser all bundled up because you're shivering? Well, it happened. Then on Friday, someone from the Alcoholic Beverage Control discovered that backstage had no liquor license. They had to stop charging money for beer and wine. Isn't that just too bad.

11-21, 22-85 Kaiser - Rob Bertrando

Here's another '85 show with an astonishing songlist, and good playing through most of it as well. The opening Big Boy Pete is great, although Jerry seems a little uncomfortable singing lead and Bobby gives him lots of support. The immediate segue into Dire Wolf finds Jerry almost laughing with relief, but the rest of the first set never rises above mundane.

Shakedown opens the second set, moving smoothly into Crazy Fingers, which gets a somewhat perfunctory reading. The Playin which follows is excellent, and after about fifteen minutes She Belongs to Me appears, with a short Playin jam appearing before drums. The post-drums Space is almost all Other One, and by the time they do The Other One it has lost much of its impact (as well as loosing Phil's intro). The closing Wharf Rat> Gimme Some Lovin> Midnight Hour has all the impact one might hope for, and then some. Walkin the Dog is a fitting encore to a great evening.

The next night (Thursday 11/22) was a decent show, without the highlights of Wednesday, but is notable for the germination of the Grateful Dead conference on the WELL. In retrospect, there were a LOT of longtime tapers and Deadheads in one section of the HJK balcony, including David Gans and Mary Eisenhart, who acted on an idea of theirs that night, and gave us a virtual community to live in.

03-20-86 Hampton Coliseum - John Whitehead

Once again, east coast Deadheads migrated to the southeastern coast of Virginia for the annual pilgrimage to Hampton. Every time they have played at Hampton since 1983 the band has kicked off their spring tour from there, and it has been the scene of some wonderful shows. It is a small (by east coast standards) hall of 13,000, and I have found it to be my favorite indoor venue for them. It has two very wide hallways that ring around each level of the arena with lots of wide open space and many accessible stairways to change levels. It is always general admission (the only East Coast venue that still does it regularly) and there is a wide path ringing the hall halfway up on the inside, so you can walk around the whole inside of the arena without a problem. Plus, the Dead have played there for the past decade, so the employees there and in the surrounding businesses are very used to and friendly to Deadheads.

After a Touch of Grey opener, they did Little Red Rooster with Brent taking a swear-filled verse that caught us all a little bit offguard. Following Friend of the Devil they played a long and creative All Over Now and a nice Row Jimmy. An unspectacular Me and My Uncle> Mexicali Blues medley followed that, and a weak Althea that Garcia missed a few verses to. After a few minutes, Bob stepped up and said, "Now we're gonna prove that practice makes perfect," and we relaxed, thinking his statement was an apology for a repeat of last night's Visions of Johanna.

They started something different though — it sounded something like Box of Rain, and I looked at my friend Bill. He was looking at me with the same look of wonder/expectation that I had, and we knew it had to be it and smiled BIG smiles. Sure enough, the crowd was feeling the same way, a buzz arose, and when Phil stepped to the microphone, the spotlight went on, and when he sang, "Look out of any window" the crowd erupted in screams, drowning out his first line. Healy cranked Phil's vocals way up, and the crowd surprisingly limited its cheering to only the end of every line so everyone could hear him sing it well. After more than a dozen years on the shelf, it proved to be as sparkling as ever, and the final verses with all the guitarists singing harmonies like days of old was an amazing sight. As the band took their break, all of us in the audience went hug-crazy with each other.

The second set was solid all around. It opened with Iko Iko into Estimated> Eyes, then Brent jammed with the drums for a while. An orchestral Wharf Rat came out of space, complete with Healy directing the band for the "fly away" transition. A classic Throwing Stones> Not Fade Away closed the show, again with some solid keyboard work from Brent, and even the U.S. Blues didn't sound too bad after all that had come before it.

03-21-86 Hampton - John Whitehead

Friday night was my favorite of the run as an all-around well-played show. The show opened with a refreshing Roadrunner, a Motown tune penned by the same writers as How Sweet It Is. Bobby and Jerry had each sung this with their solo bands, but for this Dead debut Bob sang it alone. After Dupree's Diamond Blues, there was a short wait, which Bob tried to explain but that Healy tried to delay and distort and confuse as much as possible. Bob started to say, "We had to take a moment or two just to — just to make sure that everything's just exactly perfectly in tune," and by then most of what he said was unintelligible as we were awash in layers of his echoed, processed voice.

After a blazing Minglewood and a beautiful Bird Song that really had the band and audience transfixed, more special effects surprised us as we thought we heard a "Nyuk! Nyuk! Nyuk!" Sure enough, then we heard a "Hey Moe! Hey Moe!" Apparently the Three Stooges were hiding in Brent's sampler. He sang Tons of Steel, then they played the instrumental jam of Lazy Lightning> Supplication. After a few minutes Bob started playing Let It Grow, which fit in well rhythmically until he tried to sing. Apparently he had caught the band offguard, for when he sang the first two lines, they could not follow the changes. He backed off, made his intro more obvious, and started singing again, this time with the band fully behind him. They did a good long jam before the vocal reprise (in which Bob made an allusion to the Lazy Lightning theme) and a short but climactic jam after it to close the set.

The second set kicked off with a rare opener of Uncle John's Band, which sounded good despite a little confusion on the lyrics. During the long jam in 7/4 time at the end, Bob once again played the Lazy Lightning progression for several bars, which fit in perfectly. After the final chorus the jam began to wind down, and once again Weir hit the Lazy Lightning chord changes, which Brent picked up and accompanied, but Garcia quickly went into a strong Terrapin Station. Soon after that jam petered out, they played a little instrumental bit of Playing In The Band, but then avoided it. After a few more minutes of jamming they came back to it and did the powerful reprise of Playin— which was an appropriate continuation of the Playin that they had played on opening night Wednesday. The Lazy Lightning allusions had added to the coherence of the show, and the Playinthat spanned the three shows added to the coherence of the whole Hampton run. The band soon left Garcia and the drummers on stage; the latter got weirder as the former did some nice fingerpicking "Jerry noodles." Drums featured many varied themes which connected to each other very well, including a wonderful sound of Mickey's tar reverbing lower and lower so it sounded as if the whole stage was sighing warmly — a sensation that one did not just hear but feel. After some interesting interplay between Jerry and Bobby they played a powerful I Need a Miracle then Stella Blue.

This is undoubtedly the best Stella Blue I have ever heard: Jerry's voice was in fine form, and during his solo he made one run from the bottom to the top of his guitar that still sends chills up my spine. The jam coming out of it was long and carefully played and finally became Sugar Magnolia. Another strongly played song, this set-closer found Bob running back and forth to play his licks to the whole crowd. When it seemed as though he had done it long enough, Phil walked to the middle of the stage to get the rest of the band's attention so he could call the end of the jam and start Sunshine Daydream with Bob off in the wings. As he was about to do so, though, Bob jumped on top of a speaker stack and the crowd went crazy, and Phil had missed his chance. A Baby Blue encore then closed the show and the Hampton run, and a satisfied audience went home.

03-27-86 Cumberland County - John W. Scott

As often is the case on Spring tour, expectations and emotions were high for these shows. Not only was this one of the finest Civic Centers for Dead shows in the Northeast (a venue that boasts karma which defies the concrete and steel surroundings), but this year year there was a special buzz. The topic that was on everyone's lips was the revival of Box of Rain. While on this night that particular prayer was not answered, this was easily the most interesting and fun first set of any I saw that year.

The show began with a cranked-up Jack Straw, and then a sweet, slow Peggy-O, proving mastery of a variety of energies early on. After Minglewood, we were treated to the only performance of the enigmatic Revolutionary Hamstrung Blues. Although it was a bit rough, it is regrettable that this song was never given the chance to grow. I have a suspicion that with a little work it could have surpassed many of the Mydland standards. The surprises kept coming with Bertha in the middle of the set, and the first Wang Dang Doodle in over a year. Then there was that blistering Supplication Jam. This spontaneous dervish spun wildly, obeying only its own whimsy, before tumbling into the Promised Land.

The second set was no slouch either. China> Rider frolicked with abandon. Estimated Prophet towered with confidence. And a breakneck Eyes of the World spawned an extended jam where the band seemed loath to relinquish the stage. Drumz produced the only Spanish Jam of the year — brief though heatfelt. The closing, though standard in selection, was just as enthusiastic. Truckin survived some fumbled lyrics and delivered us unto an earnest Wharf Rat (diguised as Black Peter) and a rousing Sugar Magnolia. Even the finale Day Job was executed with conviction.

I would recommend this show to anyone, suggesting that the first set is particularly memorable. I would also heartily recommend the Cumberland County Civic Center as a enchanted venue where anything can happen.

03-28-86 Cumberland County - John W. Scott

This was my night to get a glimpse into the background events at a Dead concert. I had contacted Dennis McNally, the Grateful Dead's publicist, about getting permission to produce DeadBase. Dennis had agreed to talk and suggested that I come make my pitch at his hotel room. Dennis proved to be an impossibly busy man, taking care of countless details with ruthless efficiency, the sort of person who is absolutely indispensable in any loosely structured organization. Through countless distractions, he took the time to listen and made the fortuitous suggestion that I compare notes with my present partners, Mike and Stu. He then drove his mother and me to the concert and left us backstage while he set upon his rounds. Mrs. McNally was curious about the Grateful Dead and what her son's work was all about. I tried to fill her in as much as possible, all the while watching the flurry of activity all around us.

The backstage dinner was a tasty turkey affair. Only Brent and Bobby showed up while I was there. I was impressed at how gregarious Brent was with the crew and even more impressed to see Bobby seat his friend and then fetch and serve her dinner. While interested, I found myself increasingly uncomfortable just sitting around while everyone else was so busy; when Dennis came to collect his mother I sought the refuge of my friends in the audience.

The concert, as are all Maine concerts, was lots of fun. I finally got to hear my first Box Of Rain. The "We want Phil" chants solicited a big grin and, "Here I is folks." I hadn't heard the revivals yet, and so my first was magic as the song, in particular Phil's voice was far stronger than I had dared hope.

The second set was short but well jammed, built around a three-part Playin' In The Band. Somehow, though, the show itself has gotten somewhat lost compared with the memories of the few minutes spent backstage, realizing just how much hard work it takes to get this magic off the ground.

What a run! I was only going to go the first night, but I wound up getting tickets for the rest. (Surprisingly enough they were also on sale at the door every night.) Toward the end of the first set on the 18th Jerry got a riff going which the rest of the band jumped on. I don't think anybody, including the band, knew what song it was until Jerry sang a little of My Baby Left Me shortly switching into That's Alright Mama. The Music Never Stopped had a long, spacey jam at the end. Being as it was April 18th we got "Earthquake drums" which absolutely shook the place, and the Smokestack which came later did the same. Jerry was playing hot leads while Phil thundered, Bobby's vocals being downright mean.

On the 19th they did a long Playin that was reminiscent of the old days. The 21st was my favorite. Everything they did sounded real tight and energetic. During the intro to Cumberland phil did his old opening bass line to that song. Let it Grow was good also. The second set featured the infamous "no drums and no space" since Brent stayed out with the drummers and did Maybe You Know. A rockin' Goin' Down the Road picked up where that left off and getting an almost perfect Morning Dew after that was too much.

On the last night, they opened with the long awaited Box of Rain. It was played somewhat slower than usual, with Phil's voice having great effect, before segueing into Visions of Johanna. What a treat!

05-03-86 & 05-04-86 Cal Expo - Mike Dolgushkin

It's too bad that a lot of people missed these shows. When I got there, it had been raining and was still overcast, but the mood in the crowd was very relaxed. The first show opened with Cold Rain into Race is On. You would never know that they hadn't done Race is On in years. Later in the set we got High Time and a very hot Promised Land. The second set featured an unusual Goin' Down the Road before drums, and an Other One into Comes a Time. The second day had an outstanding jam featuring Playin, Uncle John's Band, and I Need a Miracle. The Box of Rain encore was one of the best. Before this show I had an interesting conversation with Bobby Peterson. I miss him.

07-04-86 Rich Stadium - John J. Wood

Why did I ask John Scott if I could write on this show?? No, not because it one one of the shows of the Dylan/Dead/Petty tour. No, not because of a memorable performance (the fellas, particular Jerry, had an off-day at the office). No, not because of Dylan's excellent mini-acoustic set (To Ramona, One Too Many Mornings, and A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall). No, not because three songs in the second set (Miracle> Wheel> Uncle John) were broadcasted as part of Farm Aid.

If you were at this show, you will understand what I mean about the antithesis of a Dead show crowd. I was drawn to Dead shows not just because of the music, but because of the aura of peacefulness: a friendly hello, the smell of roses, the feeling of family.

During the fellas' forgettable and short first set, a fight broke loose. Three large, burly guys, hassled this small guy. However, the small guy knew karate and started chopping up one of the guys after he was swung at. One of my friends, whom I was turning on to the Dead for the first time, was shoved in that incident. I restrained my friend, wrapping my arms around him from his back. I said, "No, that's not why we're here." Eventually, order was restored, but tension remained throughout the crowd.

During the second set, I was rapping with a fellow Deadhead, whom I thought was cool... until I got offered a hit of crack!! What th'...crack at a Dead show?? Yes, the drug scene is a staple of Dead shows, but this was a time when crack was constantly in the news, and was proven to be an extremely dangerous drug. Needless to say, I declined the Deadhead's offer, and tried to enjoy the show.

However, enjoying the show was another challenge in itself. Although the show was not sold out (approximately 72K out of a capacity of 80K, I believe), people insisted on crowding the stage to the point that it almost reminded me of The Who show in 1982, which I commented about in DeadBase '89. About the only place where the crowds were worse was at Saratoga: rude, belligerent people talking, inconsideration, and a carelessness that eclipsed the sincerity and peacefulness that a Dead crowd marks.

Oh yes, not to mention the dangerous use of fireworks after the show. Upon leaving, I placed my hand over my eyes, as people and Deadheads (note how I say that) tossed sparklers, firecrackers, cherry bombs, and other assorted fireworks around the parking lot. No discretion or consideration at all was used. I don't care if many people had partied the whole day or were dosed out of their gourds: I have experienced those states, yet had the sense and responsibility NOT to tamper with such things and risk the harm of others. Why can't others do the same and just practice a little bit of responsibility and consideration?! What's sad is the same sort of incidents have been repeated and still exist at some spots today.

For musical purposes, outside a solid first-set Dupree's and the second set opening Cold Rain> Fire (as well as the Dylan acoustic segment and the Tom Petty & The Heartbreakers portions), there is very little that is recommended of this show. While there were average moments, there were embarrassing ones as well (a Tennessee Jed that Jerry remembered very little of), the sloppiest Gimme Some Lovin' I have seen and heard by miles). Jerry, I thought, had a very off-day as well; and considering that this show took place one week before his life-threatening coma, I can look back now and recall that the big guy just wasn't 100%, even if he wanted to be. By Lovelight, it appeared that Bob and Brent gave all they could to atone for Jerry's overall listlessness. I also remember what my non-Deadhead friend had said after the show, "I thought the Dead were good, but they gotta get rid of that Garcia guy." If I wasn't a peaceful man, I would have shot him (literally). Fortunately, two superb Silver Stadium shows in the following two years silenced him once and for all.

07-07-86 RFK Stadium - Phil DeGuere

It was ninety degrees by midnight when the set with Dylan finished up and they played Satisfaction for an encore you could've heard on the moon. Maybe it's because it was the last show before Jerry's illness, but that night was one to cherish.

12-15-86 Oakland Coliseum - Ross Warner

Exactly ten years after the fact, this show is still impossible to examine in a vacuum. Given the events of August 8, 1995, this show began what would become Jerry's "Ninth Life." Maybe it was just borrowed time, but without it I would never have been able to "get on the bus." I couldn't be writing this right now if it wasn't for this show. After slipping into a diabetic coma after the second RFK show, Jerry announced that he wasn't Beethoven, but was ready to strap on The Tiger once again. A Halloween Jerry Band gig served as a nice pre-season gig, but this was the real thing. As we all know, the band welcomes the return of "The Fit Man" with their most fitting anthem, Touch Of Grey. The soundboard that I have reveals some technical problems, but this one isn't about the execution, it's about a feeling. And Jerry certainly has it. By the time the first chorus rolls around, I am told that there wasn't a dry eye in the house. After the song's fitting finale, Bobby explains that they are experiencing technical problems and will be with them in a moment. Phil lends some comic relief by pointing out that "it's like we never left — technical problems, tuning up between songs..."

Bobby offers up C.C. Rider, which allows Jerry to stretch out a bit. Next up is the premiere of When Push Comes To Shove, a song that the band would play at almost every California performance that month. At the show I'm sure people were ecstatic no matter what song was coming out of Jerry's guitar, but this was not exactly the first installment in one of The Dead's more last contributions. However, it becomes quickly evident that Jerry sounds much better than when he was last seen cranking out "Satisfaction" in the sweltering heat of Washington. The show really kicks off with the pairing of BIODTL and Greatest Story. Bobby's vocals lead the way and Jerry has no trouble keeping up. During the latter song, it sounds as though Jerry is through with his pre-game drills. Let's tip it off.

A stirring Loser does just that. Strong and clear, Jerry belts this one out. The jam also gives him another early opportunity to show off his much-improved health. Cassidy serves as the perfect compliment. Garcia is definitely back. His leads are quick and precise. Althea is one of the good ones, and was the song most recommended to me when I was given this tape from my friend Plum eight years ago. The vocals are heartfelt, as Jerry sings it like he's experienced everything in the song. The jam has a nice fluidity to it. The notes sound like they're leaving Jerry's guitar via waterfall. This version truly heats up the space. Not to be outdone, Bobby counters with My Brother Esau. Nice and loose, this rendition is a nice change of pace. Candyman gives Jerry another forum to express the perspective he's gained over the last five months. The "hand me my old guitar" line must have been received with a thunderous ovation, although the soundboard doesn't reveal it. Jerry continues with his liquid playing and the emotional finish segues directly into Let It Grow. This serves as the perfect closer. It's what they've been building up to all set. It bends and breaks like a Porsche weaving through highway traffic. The fret work is blistering and its clear that the band is really clicking on all cylinders. Bobby and Brent's voices blend beautifully and this one takes them into the locker room with the promise of a phenomenal second set unearthed.

They do not disappoint and the second set remains one of my all-time favorites. Song selection? It's strong, but now it's ALL about the execution. Aiko sparkles. Jerry's leads are blistering and he has clearly elevated his game for the second set. Festive and vibrant as ever, the song opens the set with an intensity usually reserved for New Year's. But this show is bigger than New Year's. It's a celebration of the rebirth of the greatest rock and roll band that ever was, as Uncle Bobo put it during the closing of Winterland. The ensuing Looks Like Rain is a classic. Bobby begins the ballad with all the delicacy it requires and then some. Jerry rips through his solo and punctuates it with a signature string bending that makes you want to shout "All right!" With the assistance of Healy's reverb expertise, Bobby begins his finale with a beautiful set-up of "RAY-EEN, RAY-EEN..." Gradually, he then whips himself into a frenzy and belts out the parting lyrical improvisation with all the desperation and conviction he can muster. Get it.

But this is still Jerry's big night and he follows with another premiere, Black Muddy River. Almost appropriately, he mistakenly begins the song with the "When it seems like this night will last forever" verse. It is impossible not to feel the poignancy of the song when listening to it now, especially since almost a decade later it would be the last song Jerry would ever play in public. On this night, his vocals are an inspiration and without the lyrical flubs it would be impossible to detect that this was the first time they were passing through his mouth. Bobby accompanies him with some fiery background singing, highly reminiscent of his work on High Time.

The band follows with a Playin' In The Band that shows all in attendance that there will be no "warm-up show." Jerry never breaks stride and Phil's bass rises to the surface like an angry serpent and fights to break out of my speakers. Jerry fearlessly navigates the band through much uncharted territory before things melt into Terrapin Station. The anthem is the perfect showcase for Jerry's lyrical prowess and he doesn't leave anything in the bag. The guitar work is exploratory yet directed. Bobby-O gives the appropriate dose of support and this Terrapin is the perfect blend. The familiar coda has both fire and focus and by the time Billy and The Vulcan assume their duties everyone has gotten their fill.

The boys stumble a bit out of Space as they have a hard time getting Truckin' started. Bobby charges out of the gate by mumbling the "flashing my keys out on Main Street" verse. The other 5/6 try to recover with a cohesive chorus, but this one needs a second start on the fly. No matter. As I said, tonight's about a feeling. Once it catches, Truckin' metamorphoses into raging beast before seamlessly flowing into Wharf Rat. Like its pre-Drums counterpart, Terrapin, the song provides another celebration of everything that is Garcia. The fret work is mesmerizing and he belts out the lyrics with the experience of someone who really wants to get a new start and live the life he should. "The Angry Bobby" surfaces to provide ample back-up when its time for this one to get up and fly away. Out of Wharf Rat, a pleasant meandering Space develops that leads beautifully into a Playin' Reprise, providing the song with the necessary closure.

The concluding Good Lovin' stands alone with the one from my first show (9/18/87) as my all-time favorite. Jerry begins the introduction with some quiet strumming and his health is really evident by his strong vocals. Bobby is absolutely unconscious. His closing rap is one for the ages. "It ain't no drug. It ain't no medicine. It's a feeling. You need it. I need it, too. Without love, what the fuck we gonna do?" By the end he rips into the vocals so hard that the Looks Like Rain of an hour before seems timid in comparison. As if it needed it, the band encores with a rousing Johnny B. Goode. On this night, the Grateful Dead sound like a brand new car — an instrument with all its faculties in tact. They've revved it up to 100 mph, tested the handling around the most treacherous territory and stopped on a dime all in one night.

04-06-87 Brendan Byrne Arena - Ross Warner

With two Metropolitan Area shows on the Jerry Garcia comeback tour, the band seemed to take two distinctly different approaches to these concerts. With the second one to be broadcast on WNEW and WXRK, New York's only two classic rock stations at the time, they offered up a monstrous set list for those in attendance Night One. While the performance didn't quite consistently reach the same heights, this is a very strong show and a rare one to collect.

This characterization is immediately justified as The Just Exactly Perfect Brothers Band launches into what would become the final version of Dancin' In The Streets. Even in the spring of '87, it was an usual treat and the crowd erupts when the boys launch into it. It isn't as hot as those Greek, Merriweather Post and Richmond '85 renditions, but it's solid nonetheless. It's simply just too damn short. However, a smooth transition is made into Franklin's Tower, completing a most unlikely opening duo. While the jams are also a little too compact, Jerry's sweet noodling brings the intensity and keeps this version from lagging. No musical ground conquered, but very competent indeed. On the audience recording I have, Phil's bass pumps throughout, further pushing this one along. The jamming really begins with the subsequent Little Red Rooster. The bluesy backdrop really lets Jerry stretch his licks out a bit. His guitar work is sharp and precise, yet inventive. Brent gives the proceedings that raunchy edge with his "you ain't shit to me/I ain't gonna fuck with your hen house" verse. The Fat Man continues the trend with a delicate and poignant Peggy-O. His vocals are letter perfect and his piercing solos give this one just the right elements to bring it to the next level.

Bobby-O counters with the cowboy/countryesque pairing of Me & My Uncle-> Mexicali Blues. The former song provides a nice forum for Mr. Weir to showcase his strong singing and the latter provides another opportunity for Señor Garica to lay out some blistering licks. The set comes to a standstill with When Push Comes To Shove, not one of the lasting classics from the Grateful Dead cannon. But any reservations about the opening stanza are immediately obliterated as the band unleashes a mammoth Jack Straw. This song always seems to excel in this next-to-last-song-of-the-set position. And this rendition is on par with the fiery version they would play in the same building two and a half years later. I especially get chills listening to this one, since it's my favorite tune. Phil lays the bass, Bobby belts out the words and Jerry takes care of the rest. The solo peaks, burrows underground and then escalates to unheard of heights. Brent kicks in some nice riffs as the band rips into this one. The only thing to compare the song's building jam and powerful lunges is... well, you know. The ensuing Deal leaves no time for a relaxing cigarette or, in my case, cold beer. Like the preceding number this version takes all in attendance to that hallowed ground. After Jerry has thoroughly sent shockwaves to every corner of New Jersey, the band takes a well-deserved respite.

You know they were fired up for the second set when they opened up with Feel Like A Stranger. The jam was a little compact for my tastes, but maybe that's due to heightened expectations for the song in this high-profile slot. Jerry's leads have chutzpah and when Stranger finally shuts down, they shift cleanly into Cumberland Blues, bringing back flashes of BCT 11/3/84. Cumberland is white hot. Jerry and Bobby simply nail their respective vocal responsibilities. The guitar work has the spirit of the spring season in it as the notes bounce off the walls of the arena. Tons Of Steel doesn't exactly continue the trend of strong selection, but it's nice to hear Phil belt one out. Saint Of Circumstance is a complete triumph. Bobby's singing is inspired and the jam really builds into something special before Mr. Weir finishes things off by asking the age-old question "What the fuck you gonna do?"

Out of the ashes of Space creeps the familiar strains of Terrapin Station. This is my favorite position for Terrapin. Even with the additional pressure, they do not disappoint. The lyrics are sung as sweet as molasses and familiar coda becomes an absolute monster. This was barely two weeks after "Terrapin Tuesday" (3/24/87) had swept through Hampton and this one comes close to that hallowed ground. I've never really been able to distinguish what sent audiences into hysteria with those Spring '87 Terrapins, but this one does a pretty good job illustrating. The key is that while the rest of the band is driving over familiar terrain, Jerry is flying up and down his fret board. Those sparkling notes develop that familiar twang and then take on a ferocious growl.

The subsequent Other One lacks the Phil intro, but builds nicely before giving way to Stella Blue. The song is really well executed on all counts and Jerry issues an "Oooooooo" of delight near the end. Sugar Magnolia is a fitting finale. Bobby claims "She comes skimming through rays of sunshine" for a change. The bass provides a solid foundation for Jerry's picking exploits. The jam really gets it on before they leave the stage. Black Muddy River serves as a nice encore to cap off a truly satisfying performance.

04-07-87 Brendan Byrne Arena - Ross Warner

This show represented the first time I had actually heard a Dead show. I was five months away from my initiation at The Garden and I didn't yet have any tapes. So when one of my fellow 10th graders asked me to tape the show from one of the two classic rock stations that was broadcasting it, I was a little confused as to the significance. In fact, when he told me to make sure that I recorded the show in its entirety, I didn't see what the big deal was. A year later, when I began collecting tapes, this was one of the first ones I got.

While the set list is more standard than the preceding night, the performance is strong from start to finish. And the night is not without a few of those simply magical moments. Touch Of Grey is a strong selection to begin with, as this show represents the Metropolitan installment of many FM broadcasts on the "comeback tour." Jerry and Bobby belt out this anthem with feeling and the solos are sharp and precise. Minglewood Blues provides more of opportunity for Jerry to test his rediscovered guitar-bending prowess. The song still has a bit of that restrained feel that seems to victimize many shows broadcast on the airwaves. Nonetheless, it still packs a punch. Friend Of The Devil is pure joy. Jerry croons with the heartbreak and remorse the song requires. Brent, Bobby and The Fat Man all take their solos in style. The crowd in the Meadowlands certainly recognizes that high-caliber delivery as they roar in approval.

BIODTL is received as the rare treat that it is. Short but sweet, the song sends the message that this one is definitely not on auto-pilot. Stagger Lee also delivers the goods. While not quite as raunchy as some of those '85 versions, The Tiger wails with all the necessary emotion. The pairing of Mama Tried-> Big River is a welcome change of pace. The latter song allows Jerry to offer up a few sparkling leads. West LA Fadeaway gives Jerry further chances to stretch out for the second set. He does not disappoint. Hell In A Bucket is one for the ages, but not due to the performance. After launching into its turbo-powered introduction, it becomes apparent that the band is not in synch. Jerry seems to be going too fast for everyone else. After mumbling the opening line, Bobby states "We're gonna this one again." After bringing this aborted Bucket to a dramatic conclusion, the band plays a powerful version that is met with both genuine and cynical applause. Don't Ease Me In, while short, punctuates a set that hints at an even stronger second stanza.

Remember the days when the second set was the real reason to come to the arena? Recall the era before the infusion of boatloads of new material made it a sure-fire bet that the second set was gonna rage? True to form, this second set was the reason for breaking out the blanks. Even with my uninitiated ears, I knew they were tearing the roof off. Box Of Rain is a celebration. Phil answers everyone's prayers and doesn't seem the slightest bit rusty with singing (this was the only song he consistently had in the rotation at the time). He even sings "What do YOUS want me to do, to do for YOUS , to see YOUS through?" as a playful knock at the band Jersey accommodations for the evening. Almost instantly, Bobby leads the band into I Need A Miracle, in a rare pre-Drums appearance. The crowd sings the back-up and the Jerry weaves his way into a powerful Bertha that really has to move. This reading has all the fire that it had when it was born sixteen years ago (it went through its jazzy and disco periods for a while). I can only assume from the crowd's reaction that Bobby was doing his leg kicks in all the appropriate places.

Jerry then breaks standard convention by offering up his second composition in a row, Ship Of Fools. This song blows hot and cold for me, but this one is definitely hot. It's the type of song that requires that Sen~or Garcia be at the top of his game, and Jerry is most definitely up to the challenge. He nails the vocals and rips through his solo. Bobby counters with a Women Are Smarter that feeds off the energy of the nationally transmitted crowd, before giving way to the drummers.

Out of Space, Phil and Brent throw in their two cents with a smokin' Gimme Some Lovin'. The set's masterwork, however, is the ensuing Morning Dew. Haunting yet beautiful, Jerry shows the world why it's always worth the trip. The jam builds into the frenzy that marks the historic version at what would be my first show at The Garden five months later. He tears the strings off The Tiger in a way unlike any song played that year. As the song reached its powerful climax, the radio broadcast was interrupted with "This is Bobby Weir of the Grateful Dead and you're listening to us live in concert at the Meadowlands on 102.7 WNEW FM." In other words, if you like what you just heard, and if you've got a pulse you'd have to, we're the goddamn Grateful Dead. We'll be appearing at...

Throwing Stones is Bobby's second set statement. He's got center stage and he knows it. He sings with all the desperation and conviction this song needs. Not Fade Away, while not unexpected, is well executed and a fun finale. The radio listeners get a taste as the prerequisite chants bring the band back onstage for a Quinn The Eskimo encore that is perfect both for its selection and its execution. The Mighty Quinn provides a nice sing-a-long all in attendance and sends everyone home with a smile. When I packed the tapes of the show into my backpack the next morning to give them to my classmate, I knew I would have to see at least one Dead show before it was all over. The other 137? They were just icing on the cake.

05-02-87 & 05-03-87 Frost - Phil DeGuere

The Frost Amphitheatre is arguably the ideal venue for the Dead, steeped in the personal histories of all of us from the early days, a victory of sorts over something for the tribes to gather on the hallowed grounds of Stanford where, for a long time, the Dead were anathema. The feeling of anticipation before the first note of music is always palpable at Stanford. The Dead start, the people boogie... and then something odd happens. It's probably my imagination but it always seems to me that the guys hold back a little, as if afraid if they cut loose we'd all go bananas and trash the place and they'd never be invited back.

The first set usually turns sideways a little, as if the band were pacing itself. Then the second set arrives and continues with much the same sense of keeping it under control, tight but not steaming. You go away Saturday feeling great things must be in the wind for Sunday. This year, Sunday came and the first set just didn't hang together. The frustration was palpable. In this context, the second set that Sunday was a monster, fueled by bass notes from Phil like I've seldom heard before. The earth rumbled and it felt like we were all in a cone of energy, watched over benevolently by the thrusting erection of Hoover Tower. I've never heard a tape to know if the effect came through or not.

06-13-87 Ventura - Zea Sonnabend

This was my favorite show of 1987 (out of about 15 I saw). Why? Because the band was so into it and having such a great time that it was totally infectious! That and because of the excellent song choices. Any show that starts out with Mississippi Half Step gets you smiling, then further along they broke out When I Paint My Masterpiece, which was both refreshing and profound. Let It Grow was one of the best ever leaving us all primed and jazzed. We were not disappointed as they came back with the all-too-rare Shakedown Street in which Jerry was doing such wild things with feedback that the rest of the band (and all of us) was gawking at him with their mouths wide open. It was definitely the wildest version of that song I've ever heard but unfortunately the feedback part doesn't come out too well on the tape. An excellent Saint Of Circumstance and interesting Ship Of Fools led into a great Estimated with more superb jamming and a fine Eyes Of The World.

Maybe because it was my first outdoor show since Jerry had regained his good health that made it special, but it just had that extra happy feeling with warm friendliness from the band and within the crowd. Coming out of the great drums and space interludes was that powerful thundering build that could only lead to the Other One and then out of that was my first presence at Morning Dew since Jerry's recovery, which was so deep and moving that (well.....) I could only be saved by those bouncy notes of Sugar Mag that brought us all back to the fun and high energy that the experience is all about.

06-20-87 Greek - John W. Scott

This show boasts one of the finest cover song debuts ever. All Along The Watchtower is a song that was handmade for the Grateful Dead. It was the overwhelming choice for cover song to be added to the Dead's repertoire in the Golden Road Poll (my vote was among them), a poll due back weeks before this concert. The only obstacle in my mind was the wealth of superb renditions of this song by the likes of Jimi Hendrix and Dave Mason. The Dead again prove their musical prowess by creating a unique and exciting version that easily meets the competition.

07-04-87 Foxboro - John J. Wood

This show was the first of the 1987 "Alone & Together" tour with Bob Dylan. There was much anticipation prior to this and the other five shows of this mini-tour. Rumors were flying that Jerry would back up Dylan in a mini acoustic set (which did not occur...damn!), and that Dylan would sit in on the Dead sets (which I didn't believe in the first place).

The spotlight was on the Dead as well, as the successful album In The Dark would be released two days later, and cuts like Touch Of Grey and Hell In A Bucket were already being played on FM AOR radio. I had no doubts about the Dead's comeback since Jerry's coma, but with this sudden burst of media exposure (a cover story in Rolling Stone, now known to me as Tiger Beat) there was a question of how the fellas would react.

This was not the first time Dylan played with the Dead. Jerry did some work with Dylan back in 1980, and Dylan guested with the band at the Akron and RFK Stadium shows of the '86 Dylan/Petty/Dead tour. Also, both the Dead and the Garcia Band have covered a portion of the Dylan catalog since the beginning.

The Dead's two-sets-in-one set started with FOUR straight In The Dark songs: Touch, Bucket, Tons Of Brent and West L.A.. These songs have been in Dead setlists for a good portion of the mid-80's (sans Tons Of Brent, which first appeared in late '85), but it was clear that the media pressure put on the fellas carried over to this show. As a result, while the fellas played well the entire show, they rarely took the chances they would take a few shows later.

The crowd got into the flow by Althea and a fine Box Of Rain. The fellas finally stretched out a bit, thanks to a spacey Playin', but Uncle John's was criminally short. Even the Drums and Space segments were like showcases meant for a first-timer who wanted to see what the Dead are all about.

The rest of the show is standard. A solid Truckin> Other One run was typical Dead. Wharf Rat was fiery, but like Uncle John's, was too short. Perhaps the most notable point of this 13-song (sans Drums and Space) set was the fact that Throwing Stones ENDED the set. I was waiting for the inevitable Not Fade Away, and when I was about to dive into the first power-chorded notes, they were not there and the set ended. A person came on stage and said something along the lines of, "The Dead will be right back with Mr. Dylan." MISTER Dylan??!!

One of the things I'll remember about this set is the lone thrill of Dylan and the Dead together: my two favorite artists, with a rich musical history, together for an actual set. I just wished there were more Dylan fans present, as this was obviously a Dead audience. The proof: on almost EVERY song played I was asked, "what song is this?"

Among the highlights of the set were the opening The Times They Are A-Changin', which was a most appropriate opener, since both the Dead and Dylan have gone through so many changes in their lengthy careers. The first REAL treat, though, was when Jerry would sit down and play a weeping pedal steel (for the first time in YEARS!!!!) for a beautiful I'll Be Your Baby Tonight. Alone, that moment made my drive to Foxboro extremely worthwhile.

Another bright spot is a joyous, bouncing I Want You. One of the biggest mysteries to me is why the Oakland version was chosen for the Dylan & The Dead live album. I have listened to both sets on tape numerous times, and the Foxboro version is tighter, more spirited, and clearly focused; whereas the Oakland version is loose and sloppy. Incidentally, over a minute of the Oakland version was edited out of the album (which was primarily some loose jamming). Also, the Foxboro version marked the only time Dylan played harmonica on the whole tour, and that time period is criminally too brief.

Outside the obvious numbers, the highlight of the show to me was Slow Train. This is a moving, intense version, with the western sounds of the Dead perfect for this song. Joey was moving to me, and was the biggest surprise of the show. Many folks have complained about it, but the song about the late gangster Joey Gallo is a lyrically interesting story, and I hold the opinion that people just didn't open up to this. Both Slow Train and Joey made it to the Dylan & The Dead album.

A strong Watchtower closes, with Jerry's soaring guitar solo propelling this, however, Dylan kept this short, and this version isn't as jammy as the Oakland or Eugene versions. The encore, the obvious Knockin' On Heaven's Door, was moving, and placed the show at a satisfactory level. Of course, most of the Deadheads weren't used to Dylan's phrasing (I can't call it singing anymore) during the entire show, but it was a treat for me to see some great Dylan classics given the Dead treatment. And this Knockin' was nowhere near the powerhouse version played two days later at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena (with the Neville Brothers) sans Dylan.

One nonmusical note: this show was sold out, and MANY folks were seeking extra tickets outside the stadium. During the Dead set, a crowd of over 1,000 crashed the gate. I had seats just off the floor, and seeing the crowd break in was like watching water from a river flow into a lake. It was a downer to see this, and a shame that people resort to such garbage as this. I mean, what's the point?? How many years do the band members have to keep saying, "if you don't have a ticket, PLEASE don't come to the show" in order to get the message across??

The fellas and Dylan would go on to play five more shows of similar quality...primarily hit-and-miss. I also hold the opinion that the fellas and Dylan were underrehearsed as well, as an interview with Weir revealed that the band went on the road with over 80 Dylan songs in their repertoire. Also, a few more shows would have allowed both the band and Dylan to find the REAL musical groove that they would only hit on occasion at each of the six shows. However, as the potential shows in such gems as I'll Be Your Baby Tonight, I Want You, Slow Train, and Watchtower, when those moments hit, the collaboration was very fulfilling and worthwhile.

07-08-87 Roanoke - John J. Wood

I didn't attend, but certainly wished so; as on tape, this is arguably one of 1987's strongest shows. Simultaneously, while the band's execution is first-rate for the most part, the tapes also reveal the dilemmas of the Dead at that time: Because of Jerry's coma the previous year, the band wisely adopted a "back to basics" approached; which meant a more polished ensemble tightness in performance, but also the lack of lengthy jams and overall chances taken in the touring repertoire. Of course, this was also the last of a trio of superb shows played between the Foxboro and JFK segments of the Dylan/Dead tour.

While the Bucket> Sugaree combo was overplayed beyond the hilt in the late 80s, this twofer is played with a driving force. The only snafus of the set come courtesy of some Jerry lyric problems during an otherwise-upbeat Dupree's. Masterpiece, in its early Dead stages, almost threatens to be a flat-out rocker, Weir's playful vocals riding his snappy, joyful accompaniment. Big Railroad cranks nicely, but Jerry sticks to its structure. A swirling Let It Grow closes the set on an uplifting note, with its edgy jams marked by an earnest discipline.

The second stanza is executed almost flawlessly from start to finish, and on those terms, stands among the finest second sets of the year. While the Scarlet> Fire combo lacks in length and jam quantity, it is more than compensated with a blistering ensemble authority, accented by a prominent echo effect in Mickey & Billy's drums that effortlessly propel the remaining players. A perky Estimated maintains the snappy pace before casually unfolding into a smooth He's Gone (a nice change from Eyes at that time), with Brent's harmony vocals provided Jerry with plenty of relief support.

The spark is picked up — and then some — out of Drumz with a rare post-Space Crazy Fingers, a first-class version with every note. In terms of the song itself, we are treated to arguably one of the finest Truckin's of the 80s, with Weir intentionally stuttering his vocal delivery, on top of his game with an effortlessly supreme confidence. The lone downer is the lack of a post-Truckin' jam (typical of that time), where a Smokestack tease goes unanswered in favor of a heartfelt Comes A Time, the last version played until 41 months later in Oakland. Again, though, the closing jam is truncated, and Weir closes with a punchy, but short, Sugar Magnolia. Despite eight songs and Drumz, the set clocks in at under 80 minutes.

A graceful Black Muddy River (regardless of its status, I still love this song) closes an evening full of energetic execution, but short in jams supplied. If you're a fan of strong ensemble performances where the band plays as one unit, you'll like these tapes; but if you're looking for those eLONGated jams, you may want to look elsewhere.

08-15-87 & 08-16-87 Telluride - Fred Heutte

Grateful Dead tapes like these may be better for the nonmusical memories they inspire than the music they preserve. Musically, the Telluride shows were indifferent. I've never been to a show where the crowd was so silent as after the Saturday show, although things finally came alive during a smoking Truckin on Sunday. In part it was the thin and blowy audio of 8700 feet above sea level; perhaps a bit the band's difficulty in adjusting to the altitude and a thicket of equipment problems on Saturday; maybe the "locals" (living within a couple hundred miles of the town) who turn out for the annual bluegrass and jazz festivals were not that familiar with the Dead scene — well, no matter.

Going in we knew that Telluride was some kind of special place, but the reality of the brilliantly clear tree-shrouded box canyon made the reputation a mere one-dimensional travelogue, and provided a setting where the improbable could and regularly did happen: Bill Graham riding around on a motor scooter handing out wads of trash bags... winding your way in the dark through the impromptu campground next to the concert site... members of the band mixing with the fans between shows as they never do at regular venues... Olatunji and his band leading a drumming, dancing parade right down the main street... That's what these tapes recall.

While the new age of the Harmonic Convergence may not have descended upon us as advertised that weekend (aside from gathering at sunrise Sunday morning), the feeling of harmony with nature and each other was genuine enough. Like Egypt, the natural setting put even the music that brought us there in its proper place.

09-18-87 Madison Square Garden - Stu Nixon

The third night of a five-show run at MSG, this was my favorite show of 1987. Always the preferred venue in NYC these days (I am not particularly fond of Nassau Coliseum or Brendan Byrne), this is really the BIG time. As usual on the East Coast, the roar of the crowd became deafening as soon as the lights went down, even though the band wasn't even on stage yet. Now that they had had two shows to get all the bugs out of the system, the sound was incredible, even while they were tuning up.

While the first set was pretty short (only six songs), there were some really fine moments during Candyman and Masterpiece, and a very spacey Bird Song that reminded me of Dark Star a few times. But it was the second set that I'll never forget. Shakedown is THE song for New York and this one was very strong. I don't remember much about the next couple of songs, but from the drums through the end of the set was the most incredible 45 minutes of music I'd heard in years! Goin' Down The Road is one of my three favorite dancing songs (Cumberland and Sugar Magnolia being the other two) and this version had everyone on their feet and in high gear. All Along The Watchtower was one of my all-time favorite rock songs even before the Dead first played it at the Greek three months earlier. Bob really let fly on some of the vocals and had just the right blend of Weir and Dylan going throughout.

Then came the Morning Dew, which was probably the best I've ever heard. Each verse was more powerful than the one before, and each progression between verses was longer and louder, pushing the limits each time. But then on the last chorus Garcia's vocal was so emotional and so intense that his voice just cracked, right at the peak. I was shattered. The music had brought me so high and then so low so fast that I was electrified and crushed at the same time. My legs felt like jello and I had to sit down. I was shaking. What had been the perfect version had turned into total disaster. But out of my depression I heard Garcia continue to play and I thought he was trying to recover a little and trying to manage a transition to the next song.

But the next song never came. They just kept playing and playing Morning Dew! Jerry played the theme again and again, getting louder and stronger each time, to the point I thought he was going to explode. Just when I thought he was going to hit one last loud note and stop, he sang the last chorus again, stronger than I could ever imagine. Unbelieveable! I was sure they were going to stop and leave the stage after that, but instead they went into Good Lovin. And right in the middle Garcia sang a verse of La Bamba that was superb. Weir finished off Good Lovin with such a rockin' version that I was exhausted at the end. Knockin' On Heaven's Door was really sweet, and hearing it in Madison Square Garden was the perfect way to end a truly amazing night.

10-03-87 Shoreline Ampitheatre - Fred Heutte

Audience tapes at Shoreline are superb thanks to good acoustics and some help from the delay towers on the lawn. This show has gained renown because of the virtually seamless

Maggie's Farm> Cumberland Blues opener in the second set, which also featured an excellent digitized light show on the video monitors during the drums, in keeping with the Silicon Valley surroundings.

The first set was even more interesting, leading off with a snappy Hey Pocky Way, one of the last Brother Esau performances and an excellent Candyman. During Minglewood Bob Weir, like the rest of us a little unfamiliar with the surroundings, ran into a snag: "It's right here in — wherever we are, this garbage dump!"

The first half also featured what I felt was the highlight of the weekend as a whole, a sweet and relaxed Bird Song with just the right combination of ensemble playing and exploration. Simply, the most memorable single performance of the shows I saw in 1987.

12-31-87 Oakland Coliseum - John W. Scott

This show introduced me to the intriguing possibilities of remote attendance of Grateful Dead concerts. I expected it to be a shallow happening, much like watching any old Dead show on video tape. Fortunately that was not the case. The fact that it was live made all the difference in the world (analogous to watching the Celtics live versus delayed). It was NOT an adequate substitute for actually being there, (there is STILL nothing like a live Grateful Dead concert), but I found that there were also major advantages to watching via remote. I sat in the comfort of my own living room, watching a live concert taking place 3,000 miles away, making gorgeous video and audio tapes, eating barbecued spare ribs and hot chicken wings, drinking good beer and champagne, enjoying a clear, unobstructed view of the stage, and having quick access to a clean rest room.

There was no long drive home, no babysitters to worry about, no beer spilled on me, no fascist police on horseback (an East Coast experience), no one yelling "Dark Star" during the quiet part of Wharf Rat, no lousy view/sound from the taper's section, no sardine experience in front of the stage. I found remote attendance to be a wonderfully relaxing and gratifying experience.

The execution was professional: great sound and very good camera work. It is nice to be able to count the hairs on Phil's knuckles or watch Jerry's fingers dance up and down the frets. At times the special effects got in the way of the picture (I like to be able to actually see what the band members are doing during the intense jams), but mostly they were applied tastefully. I was not as happy with the stock footage from the So Far video being spliced in. It tended to turn the broadcast into a live rendition of the video tape (the similarities between the song lists didn't help matters either).

Some of the planned diversions while the Dead were off the stage were amusing. It was unfortunate that the powers that be did not set up to show us live Neville Brothers (at least they should have taped more Nevilles and Looters to show us during the intermission). The "Ask The Band" segment was my favorite, but the skits came off well also (I have always suspected that Mickey had some Vulcan blood in him). Bird and McHale made the spontaneous half time show for me (where was Walton?).

While I was originally outraged at the expense of the broadcast ($20 if you ordered ahead, $25 on the day of the show), I would gladly pay that price again. Although I realize it is unlikely, I would love the luxury of having five or ten shows broadcast live each year. They could count on my $$$ each and every time. This could be a powerful medium for the Dead — they wouldn't need to keep playing larger and larger venues just to keep meeting this new groundswell of popularity. At any rate, it was a wonderful New Year's present from the band (I would love to see figures on how many households watched). I have these images of homes all over America filled with friendly DeadHeads, hovering over tape decks and VCRs, sharing what is usually one of the most exclusive events of the year — the Grateful Dead's version of the Harmonic Convergence.

07-02-88 Oxford - John W. Scott

For a resident of the back woods of New England, outdoor concerts normally mean a big, hot cement stadium. Sometimes there are pavilion shows like SPAC, but we very rarely get treated to an open field concert. The last one was at Lewiston in 1980. Parts of the speedway field at Oxford were paved, there were random mounds of dirt and grandstands on one side, too distant to be practical, but it was gorgeous just the same, with a wide-open feeling that is a treat for us. Helped by some excellent music, this was easily one of the best back-to-back performances/experiences that I have seen.

It was ironically fortunate that there was a Monsters of Rock concert there the previous weekend. The masters of heavier metal drew a heavy toll on the towns access and its patience. The twenty-five miles from the Maine Turnpike took people over eight hours to drive (a normal walking pace). The crowds were rowdy and downright nasty. Those events so outraged the town that they vowed never again.

Hence, there was ample opportunity for favorable comparison. DeadHeads were, apparently, much more professional as concert goers. The traffic was no picnic, but it was not an eight-hour morass as many of us arrived a day ahead of time. I slipped in from the North and avoided all but the mildest of traffic. The crowd was well-behaved, and the residents noticed it. Everyone I asked complimented our behavior, especially in contrast to the MOR crowd. One lady told a friend, "Oh, you people are much nicer, quieter, more polite. And you smell better too!." It felt good to be appreciated for a change.

Drug use was obvious, but I only saw a handful of cases of obscene excess. There was plenty of vending, spread out over the huge main parking lot in front of the speedway. Lots of people were selling "ice cold whippets," hence Just Say N_2O shirts seemed to be in vogue. I was looking for the dancin' Calvin and Hobbes shirt, no luck — I settled on a Garcia Surf Club shirt. The bears in jams were just too damned cute.

Getting into the speedway was a little tight. There were only two gates open and patience was running thin. There was some bovine trampling — expectant fans flattened the snow fence that was supposed to keep them in orderly serpentine fashion. But, given the immense opportunity for real problems, the crowd was one to be proud of, particularly when there were about twice as many people as there were tickets. Critical mass had been reached a long time ago, but folks didn't seem that uptight about getting in; many were merely content with being there. Happily everyone was rewarded when the gates were opened after the drums the first night and during Eyes Of The World on the second.

The weather was gorgeous. The first day was lightly overcast, which kept things nice and cool. No rain, just mellow grey. For both shows I was about thirty feet in front of the board and the scene there was remarkably mellow. No sardine action, just good friends, great music, and a little room for dancing. In contrast, the tapers' section was packed behind a very tall soundboard, which was roofed and walled with plastic and not the best place to see, or tape, the show from. The sound up front was fantastic.

The special guest attraction both days was Little Feat, back together and sounding very impressive. An hour or so before the show we were treated to a soundcheck of Apolitical Blues and a piece of Oh Atlanta. Most of their set was made up from their old favorites, but they worked in some of their new material. Craig Fuller, the vocalist from Pure Prairie League fit in very well with the sound. Dixie Chicken was particularly tasty.

The Dead show was one of the best of the year. The first set started with a bouncy Aiko, and then got a second start with Jack Straw. Nice. After West L.A., and a couple bars of the Mexican Hat Dance, we were treated to some of the more exceptional stage banter that I have heard. The crowd had started up with "Phil, Phil, Phil, Phil..." so a bashful Phil stepped up to the microphone: "Don't you think the guys in the band are going to get jealous if you yell for me all of the time? I want you guys to yell for Mickey. I want you guys to yell for Bill and Jerry and Brent, alright? Next time you see someone yell 'Hey Phil, We want Phil', you yell 'We want Brent', or 'We want Mickey'. Alright? Thank you!"

Bobby suggested, "Then you can move through the crew: 'We want Steve, We want Steve, We want Kid'." Jerry extended it further by asking for volunteers from the audience.

Memphis Blues was hot, with some lightning leads from Jerry. Then the crowd continued with "We want Phil" so we got banter, part 2 — Bobby: "Phil can't hear you, he's been stone deaf for eight or ten years now (laughter). If you hold still though, he can see your lips moving (more laughter; 'We want Brent' — Brent gets up). Brent can't hear you because he's run for it." Jerry: "Don't listen to Weir, he's been crazy for years" (major laughter and cheers). The audience's answer was a rousing chorus of "Let Mickey Sing."

Row Jimmy was sweet, possibly my favorite song in the set. With the sound system in top form this song was exceptionally well-presented. The instrumentals were pure and simply beautiful.

It was nice to hear the new material to close the first set. Sometimes I feel that second set debuts put too much pressure on a developing song. All three were interesting, and I found myself strangely excited at this infusion. Foolish Heart was engrossing. The orchestration, though a little rough, was generally strong and featured some nice piano trills. This was a song I wanted to hear again, soon.

Crazy Fingers opened the second set — a strong, pretty version, with Jerry able to hit (almost) all the notes. I am not used to hearing Crazy Fingers in this standing start position, but it seemed to work very well without any warm up. After a fine climactic jam it melted back to nothing, and then to Playin. I don't know what it is about twilight Playins, but they seem to have a magical life of their own, rarely matched indoors. It has to do with finely crafted space and an open, wandering feeling. This version suggested an astral projection back to Lewiston eight years ago, and perhaps all the way back to a field in Oregon in '72.

After this there was no other choice but Uncle John's Band. The mood shifted magically from wondrous intensity to joy and celebration. Arms were for hugging as everyone swayed together, radiant. Everything fell together: the climactic jam was breathtaking. I found myself relaxing, ready for the imminent drums, but was then instead whisked off to Terrapin Station. The last light was just vanishing and the song's shadowy images came to life. The Dead wove an irresistible spell with precise punctuation. I have never before been so enchanted by Terrapin. It is possible that this was not the hottest first half of a second set this year, though I have listened to every show and nothing else immediately jumps to mind.

The Wheel felt proper out of the drums as it built, providing a footing for the rest of the set, and Gimme Some Lovin got the crowd dancing again. The momentum continued to grow. Watchtower was a scorcher. The jams were ferocious and the Dead kept on playing beyond all expectation. It was enough to make one greedy for more, and we got more, much more.

Morning Dew. Wonderful, long version, over ten minutes. Built to great peaks, then softly let fall to near tender silence. The crowd was entranced, so that you could hear the faintest note. The final peak was quickly scaled and we were left gasping for air as our feet inevitably began to tap to Sugar Magnolia. The beat climbed our legs and our hips began to sway. Shoulders surely followed — who could resist?

Quinn was an appropriate encore: fun, with a beat. Everyone looked happy and sated. It took a while to get out of the speedway as the gates had been opened after the drums, and more than sixty thousand people crammed back through two gates. But no one seemed to really mind the slow moving mass. We just smiled and shook our heads.

07-03-88 Oxford Plains Speedway - John W. Scott

This concert, the halfway point through the concert year (40th/80), was billed as the end of their "Last Show On Earth" Summer tour.

As we drove in, it was evident that more people had arrived throughout the night. The newspaper estimates were running as high as 135,000 people. While these estimates may have been inflated, the masses were overwhelming both for this town of 4,500 and for the 35,000 tickets available for each night. It was cozy, but everyone seemed happy. The authorities proved their positive adaptability by opening several additional gates. The entering crowd was better behaved as a result.

Further good will allowed us to bring in filled water containers. This gesture of common-sense faith just may have saved a life on this classic East Coast hot summer's day. Unlike California, if you plan for special outdoor affairs in the East two days in a row, one can expect that it will rain for at least one of them. This one was hot, fairly humid, but with the right solar protection and ample reserves of water, fantastic.

The second day's Feat was pretty much the same as the previous one. I would have liked to have heard some of the other material that they were playing on tour (such as Willin'), but still came away very impressed at this unusually successful rebirth of a legendary rock 'n' roll band.

The first Dead set was solid, even if unintentionally short. Bucket and Sugaree were good openers — they might have even been excellent if last night had not been so fresh in everybody's memory. After Walking Blues, the crowd continued yesterday's stage rapport with rousing choruses of "Let Mickey/Dan/Graham/Steve/Kid sing." Bobby shook his head and approached his microphone looking very bemused, "Now there's a guy down there saying 'Let Mickey sing', he's obviously never heard that." Bobby rolled his eyes. "I mean you can have it, if you want it."

The musical highlight of the first set was one of the hottest Bird Songs that I had heard in recent years. The jams were amazing, and the band knew it. Ominous in the distance, hanging in the air behind the stage, there was a growing speck. It proved to be a large parachute, and as it continued to grow, a tripod under it became apparent. I gather that these gizmos are called paraplanes (a close cousin to the ultralight): oversized parachutes are outfitted with a fan and away they go. So the band was jamming away as the crowd noticed this contemporary Icarus closing fast. As this was Bird Song, the multitudes decided that this was neat, cheering and waving to the pilot. Band members looked up and noticed that the crowd's roar was not for their worthy version of Bird Song. Phil and Bobby, mystified, craned their necks upwards, still playing, and eventually the beast passed over head. It buzzed the speedway a couple times, and the crowd was overjoyed. The Dead had little choice with all this distraction but to close the Bird Song and put a premature end to the first set.

I had no complaints with Touch Of Grey: it was tight and bouncy and its perversely optimistic lyrics were a suitable beginning of the end of "The Last Show On Earth." Hey Pocky Way was way hot, a standard setter. I was surprised at just how much more enthusiasm the Dead afforded it when compared with the first set versions I had heard.

Looks Like Rain was very good, but once again it was the lights that caught my eye. The presentation had changed from the purples and greens of the spring to lightning flashes dancing above the stage — very effective in the heat of the darkening sky. The jams were sensitive and pretty.

The Estimated> Eyes was a long outdoor version, taking us from the intense heat of the burning shore to the lazy summer home with beautiful piano runs and guitar leads. A wonderful journey. It was thoughtful of the authorities to open the gates during Eyes Of The World to let the rest of the crowd in on this treat.

Going Down The Road is one of those songs that I love to hear come rolling out of the drums. Its bluesy optimism (continuing themes from Touch Of Grey) always carries the rest of the concert, ensuring my satisfaction. This one set out at a brisk pace, and was supported by some masterful leads from Jerry.

Going Down The Road finally gave way to a strong Miracle. We knew what was coming next and were not disappointed. The Fantasy> Jude combination gave us a wonderful sense of closeness in this outdoor setting. Perhaps as many as 100,000 people were swaying together, marveling at the perfect synchronicity. The vocals for Hey Jude were especially nice and heartfelt.

The Not Fade Away encore was a surprise. Played at the very end of the concert, this song had an interesting, beneficial effect on the crowd that had swelled three-fold through the opened gates. Expectations and participation kept the audience in the speedway singing long after the band had left the stage. When people did get around to leaving it was in a much more leisurely fashion than on the previous night. Once again lessons had been learned and additional gates were opened; it was possible to stroll out through the back of the speedway.

On this July 4th weekend there were lots of personal fireworks for the festivities. While the visual stimuli was probably welcomed by many, tripping people should not be allowed to play with explosives. I am amazed that there were not multiple debilitating burns and injuries resulting from some of the most stupid and irresponsible displays of mass pyrotechnic fervor I have ever witnessed. The barrage was constant, and unpleasantly abrasive after such a fine show. A number of times we found ourselves having to dodge charges set in the middle of the main paths. Cars were being hit with rockets and candles. I wouldn't trust the gas tanks on some of the rusted vehicles that one sees on tour, and with the very dry summer weather fires were not a remote possibility. A fire inside the packed speedway would have been devastating. If Stephen (or perhaps Jerome) is the patron saint of Deadheads he was certainly watching over this crowd.

In spite of the post-concert insanities, I left in bliss at having experienced such wonderful back-to-back concerts. I realized that this had been much more than the mere sum of two hot shows. The weekend was one of the rare invaluable gems that will always shine in any Deadhead's recollection, no matter how jaded they might become.

These three shows were benefits for the Rex Foundation and broadcast live on KPFA.

Friday night was amazing! Shakedown is always an intense opener and this was a long one. We were on the left side lower steps, about five people in from the left column of speakers, good sight lines and sound. Phil has really gotten thin! I liked Weir's choice of purple polo shirt; it went well with the pink guitar. Queen Jane was really nice, I like to think of the Dylan songs as Weir's new tunes. I like them better than Victim or Blackbird. Dire Wolf was fun to hear, and I enjoyed Brent's Good Times. Cassidy had some good jams as usual, and Bertha was a great set closer.

The second set was great for dancing, fewer than normal slow songs. Scarlet> Fire was strong, and there was an extra jam in Women Are Smarter that made it better than usual. Ship of Fools was very powerful, and Estimated Prophet was wild, as were the drums and space. (Weir tried out a new white midi guitar during the space.) The combination of Miracle, Wheel, and Gimme Some Lovin was exhausting, and the Morning Dew was incredible! Lovelight worked well as an encore.

Saturday we went over to Golden Gate Park at about 1:30 just in time to hear Wooden Ships by Kantner and Slick at the Peace Walk celebration. Then came Zero and after a couple songs, Garcia and Hart and some others joined for three Garcia songs: Think, Knockin' On Heaven's Door, and Goodnight Irene. Garcia traded licks with Zero guitarist Steve Kimock, and it was great to see their expressions when they made eye contact with each other. A truly special moment. There were lots of people near the bandshell and lots of vendors everywhere.

A short time later we cruised over to the Greek and enjoyed the first set almost as much as Friday. Starting with Music Never Stopped was very appropriate in the middle of this three-day celebration. Jerry had a hard time with the vocals in Sugaree, but made up for it during Loser. Memphis Blues was great: another Weir/Dylan combo. It was nice to hear Brent sing Far From Me again, and then Bird Song (with a hint of Dark Star) closed the first set.

The opening of the second set was a bit standard but well played (China Cat> Rider, Looks Like Rain) and Terrapin was great! Olatunji's guest appearance during the drums was a real nice surprise. I was getting a little disappointed by the lack of new songs, but Brent came through with I Will Take You Home after the space. We liked that one a lot being recent parents ourselves. The end of the second set was also a bit predictable (Other One> Stella> Around> Saturday Night) but also very competent. I can't believe Jerry played Knockin' twice in five hours!

Now Sunday was something completely different. It was really hot in Berkeley, well into the 90's. I liked Foolish Heart but I'll have to listen carefully to the tape to get more of the lyrics. After such an interesting beginning, the rest of the first set featured more traditional Dead songs that were played very well. I'm sure that the frequent references to the heat (Althea: this space is getting hot; Uncle: hottest part of the day) were unintentional, but at the time I thought it was hilarious. During the break, Alexander Gradsky, a Russian musician who had appeared at the Peace Walk festivities on Saturday, performed a folk song in Russian and was well received.

When the band returned for the second set, the crowd was calling for Phil, and Bob said, "If you're talking to our bass player, he's been stone deaf for years." Then Jerry said, "Our rhythm guitarist's been crazy for years." After all the kidding around, Box Of Rain was really nice to hear, and we finally got to hear Victim Or The Crime with the Dead. We'd seen Weir play the song solo many times, but hearing the Dead play it adds a lot. After that they proceeded to play A+ versions of five of my favorite songs: Crazy Fingers, Playing In The Band, Uncle John's Band, Goin' Down The Road, and Watchtower — I couldn't ask for more. Even Geoffrey (our one-year-old) recognized some of these songs and was dancing like a true Deadhead (it was his 20th show). Then Garcia did the West Coast premiere of Believe It or Not, which I thought was fantastic. It Reminded me of the first time I heard Black Muddy River. I'm not a big fan of Throwing Stones> NFA to end a show but at this point I was enjoying everything. Well, almost everything, I couldn't help cringing during Blackbird. Brokedown was a given.

Objectively I have to say Sunday was the best show for all the reasons I usually used to compare shows, but personally I had the best time on Friday.

07-29-88 -> 07-31-88 Laguna Seca - Bill Weisman

We knew Thursday night (from a Sign In The Sky) that it was going to be a good weekend. Hiking in the dry bed of the Carmel River near our campsite, we watched the full moon coming up over the hills and saw a "moonbow," a rainbow by moonlight, in the mist from a large Rainbird sprinkler. None of us had ever seen anything like it; it seemed like a good omen.

Most everything sounded real good. David Lindley and El Rayo-X did their usual fine job, with a good dose of reggae included each day. Lindley showed his stuff on guitar, pedal steel (with a wild down-and-dirty intro to "Crazy 'bout a Mercury"), and violin.

What can I say about Los Lobos (or 'The Lobes' as DL called them), my second favorite band in the world? They seemed a little tentative during these shows, as if not quite sure what the audience wanted. It's a whole different scene seeing them here in LA on their home turf, where the audiences are heavily Latino and sing along in Spanish.

David Hidalgo has a beautiful, clear high voice, incongruous in such a big guy, and is a guitar and accordion virtuoso. Cesar Rosas is the more rock-n-roll oriented of the two guitarists, and looks like a total cholo with his shades and goatee. They seemed to feel (probably correctly) that the crowd would respond better to their blues- and rock-oriented stuff than their Mexican folk-music-inspired tunes. In fact, the biggest ovation they got Saturday was for the Cream version of Crossroads, a relic from their early days as a top-40 cover band, with Hidalgo playing Clapton's licks on lead guitar, but FASTER than Clapton — impressive.

Friday was the lightest attended of the three shows. Getting in, getting out, and parking were a breeze — hardly any congestion at all. Got to see the Minglewood Town Council's "burma shave" signs asking people to respect the venue (unfortunately, most of the signs had been stolen by Sunday).

The dry lagoon is an interesting place. It is an extinct caldera, oval shaped, with gaps where portions of the crater walls have collapsed. The stage is near one end, where a large upward-sloping section forms a natural amphitheatre ringed by rounded-top hills. There was a squarish excuse for a lawn between the stage and the soundboard enclosure; the rest was mostly dirt — dusty when dry, and muddy when sprayed with water to keep the dust down. Four big sound reinforcement towers were arrayed behind the soundboard, which I was somewhat surprised to see since there were none last year. There was plenty of room to dance and to hike around, albeit somewhat dangerous to dance in the steeper areas.

Laguna Seca is next to Fort Ord, so on Friday the music was sometimes punctuated by the booming of cannon and howitzer fire, and exploding shells from the adjacent artillery range. Luckily those guys took Saturday and Sunday off. The sound, especially behind the reinforcement speakers, was not too good on Friday, but improved greatly the next two days. As usual, you could move around the venue and discover areas with good sound, and areas with bad.

As noted in the Monterey paper, the whole place was cleaned up in less than 15 minutes after the show ended on Friday. They got the setlist wrong, however, listing a song called "Drums in Space." The review, by a non-Deadhead, was very positive. A much higher percentage of people seemed to be involved in cleanup activities than at previous shows. The best strategy to get people to participate in cleaning up is indeed by example. The Minglewood Town Council and the Cosmic Recyclers deserve our special kudos and heartfelt support for supplying plenty of trash bags, and sparking a major successful cleanup effort over the entire weekend.

Saturday, being a sellout, was more of a zoo scene. We arrived early, and were rewarded for our diligence by being parked several miles from the venue (we had to walk up a STEEP hill) in a pasture rented from a local farmer who wouldn't allow overnight parking. After getting in and situated, we saw many people in Well shirts, including one older gentleman talking with Healey at the soundboard before the show started. We also got a pre-show exhibition of yo-yo tricks by Mr. Healey — he's actually pretty good.

Sunday was midway between Friday and Saturday in terms of attendance. This was almost The Concert in the Fog, which crept into the caldera on little cat feet, threatening to fill the place with murk. Of course the fog lifted when the Dead started playing. This was a very memorable show because I got to spend the entire Los Lobos set and the first Dead set directly in front of the stage. A whole different experience being up close — watching Mickey doing his pre-show pacing backstage, a roadie emptying an entire bag of Hall's Mentholyptus Cough Drops onto Brent's tray, and various little ones with their mommies and daddies backstage, etc. When David Hidalgo came out during Little Red Rooster, I could almost feel his exhilaration, and a little bit of fear, too — it must feel like surfing a tidal wave, trying to stay with the inexorable propulsive shamanistic beat of the rhythm section.

The exceptional nature of this event was evident right from the beginning. As we entered, we were each handed a package of literature and post cards to accompany the evening's agenda. To support the fight against the destruction of one of this planet's most important natural resources, the Grateful Dead were donating the proceeds of $871,875 to three organizations: Cultural Survival, Greenpeace, and Rainforest Action Network. The tickets were appropriately expensive (and tax deductible) at $50, though some of the nosebleed seats went for $25. For only $250, there were also special "Circle Of Gold" tickets for the first twenty rows, which included a reception with the band after the concert.

Bruce Hornsby was not a priority, so we finally made it out of the hotel, across the street into the show with about three songs to go. What we heard was good, though not good enough to make us regret our late arrival. A friend had bought a very respectable block of side seats so everyone got to sit together. One thing I find particularly attractive about Dead shows is the reunions that they provide. Favorite friends from years gone by, now scattered across the United States, appear out of the ether. This phenomenon was in full bloom.

Lots of extra effort had gone into producing the climactic show of the Madison Square Garden run, including video cameras. There were large rear-projection screens on either side of the stage (all the better to see you with, Jerry). In addition to live pictures of the band, there was also breathtaking rainforest coverage, clips from the Dead's United Nations press conference, and other cause-related tidbits.

The real celebration started with the dedication of a new banner to grace the rafters amongst the Knicks and Rangers titles and their retired jerseys. This tie-dyed beauty was to commemorate the 25th concert that the Dead had played at the Garden (ignoring the four dates from 1971 played at the adjoining Felt Forum), a new record for a rock performer. Even though this banner was removed shortly thereafter, it was about as close to an official honor as the Dead are apt to get. This show also marked the longest sold-out run of concerts in Garden history. Also reportedly set: the record for the longest single concert engagement (nine shows) and the fastest sellouts. If the benefit concert proceeds were considered they would have also beaten Neil Diamond's total gross record of $2.9 million with $3.7 million. Some big numbers.

The Dead sets were remarkable, perhaps more so than any other concert that I can remember. Starting with Aiko it was evident that the drummers were exceptionally psyched for this evening's performance: the drums drove a large number of the songs. The high points of the first set were clearly the rocking West L.A. and Rooster (yes, Rooster), both with Mick Taylor (of Rolling Stones and John Mayall fame). The Box Of Rain in the middle of the set didn't exactly hurt things either. But the night transcended song lists, or even individual songs. I had grown tired of all the silly "in and out of the garden" St. Stephen rumors, and I was glad when the Dead did not realize them. This night was important in a much deeper sense.

Between sets they showed slides from rainforests and played a tape recorded in a rainforest by Mickey. It was very restful as the sound washed over us. Kermit the Frog was featured in a filmed plea for the rainforests and their hundreds of unique species, some of whom are Deadheads (an orange fuzzy monster — Animal, for those with children — was provided as proof). Cute — another small example of the effort that went into producing this evening.

The second set started with two songs with Suzanne Vega. Chinese Bones was breathtaking. Suzanne's voice had a reflective sensitivity that spoke to the benefit. I was also very impressed with the Dead's backup. This was definitely the tightest that I have ever heard them play for another artist on foreign material. Neighborhood Girls was wonderful also. I got the impression that Suzanne was not very comfortable with the situation, as if the result was not what she expected, or was used to. This pained me as I was so impressed; it all sounded wonderful to me. The pleasure at this music was sharply contrasted with my disappointment when she left the stage after only two songs.

Rumor has it that the Dead rehearsed two additional songs with Suzanne Vega, but did not perform them due to additional guest stars and other time constraints. If so, this is a crime. Her material was easily my favorite of the night. It really got the band to reach beyond their normal environment and limits. I thought her voice fit perfectly with the Dead's sound. It's nice hearing them with someone who can really sing. I would love to hear her do a tour with the Dead à la Dylan.

The Dead then played Crazy Fingers and Woman Smarter. Even though they were played well, I found these selections a little underwhelming. Jerry showed us some nice guitar in Crazy Fingers, but his voice, already raspy in the first set, was not up to the vocal challenges. Woman Smarter, while technically strong, seemed incongruous.

While Bobby encouraged the crowd to take the minor initiative necessary to read and mail the distributed post cards, the stage was awash with techies setting up new mic stands and amps. I had earlier laughed at rumors that Hall and Oates might make a guest appearance, but now I found myself growing apprehensive. Oh well... The contrasts in style were a bit stark, but the results were better than expected. Every Time You Go Away was about as different from normal Dead fare as I have ever heard them play, but it came off surprisingly well. What's Going On, more obvious Dead territory, was thoroughly wonderful. Once again I found myself appreciating the dimension that saxophone adds to the Grateful Dead sound.

The drum solo was my favorite ever; it was the culmination of the show. Baba Olatunji joined in and the theme was the Apocalypse Now-style river music. Jungle scenes were provided and the experience integrated very powerfully, far better than any of the previous audiovisual efforts I have seen. I pray that the Dead are considering marketing a video to benefit the rainforests, and that the drums are left entirely intact. I would gladly pay a benefit scale price for this gem.

The Wheel was a logical song to mold from Space's chaos. This song's eco-rhythmic cycles were yet another gentle reminder of the evening's serious focus. The messages grew stronger with Throwing Stones, accompanied by some stark, violent rainforest images on the screens. An intense version and vision. Not Fade Away offered some welcome hope/faith, and an excuse to dance again.

The encores were downright fun. Good Lovin was incredibly tight, especially with the number of guest musicians on stage, and a beautiful Heaven's Door left us in an appropriately reflective, though happy, mood.

As a closing thought for this fine evening, we would like to encourage people to investigate the three supported causes. Cultural Survival, Greenpeace, and Rainforest Action Network cover diverse and equally important aspects of the devastating deforestation. A portion of the proceeds from DeadBase II went to these organizations. It is important that the giving spirit from this concert be kept alive.

10-18-88 New Orleans - Dan Levy

In one of the coziest venues I've seen the Dead in years, the band played a passable first set and a supremely intense second set, with a special New Orleans lagniappe of an encore, featuring the Bangles. The first set's highlight was the Bucket> TLEO opener. Whatever intensity was lacking from the first set ended up in the second, which from the first notes was in high gear. Estimated was particularly loose and unstructured. There was a brief glimpse of 1973-style Leshing at the end of Eyes of the World. Drums featured various Nevilles, including Willie Green on traps, who was such a powerful guest on 12/16/86. The Nevilles stuck around through much of space. A seamlessly energetic set, closing with a sizzling Not Fade Away with an unusually hot Jerry solo.

The encore featured the Bangles on Iko and Knockin. They had earlier opened for George Michael at the 25,000-seat Super Dome, and looked a bit knocked out to experience what the bass player, Michael Steele, later described as the "groovy love thing" between the Dead and the Heads. Their singing was barely audible, not surprising given the difficulty of interpreting the "fee na nay's" involved, but they certainly absorbed the spirit of the place. Knockin' was very strong, with Jerry and Phil, hidden behind the singers, playing very powerfully in tandem.

Keifer Lakefront Arena is a small basketball arena on the University of New Orleans campus. The floor was open and very small; the soundboard was at the very back and the stage platform took up almost a third of the entire floor. Delicious. The cops were pretty cool, given it was their first Dead show in years.

12-31-88 Oakland Coliseum - Stu Nixon

The last show of 1988 turned out to be full of surprises.

There were two opening acts: Peter Apfelbaum and the Hieroglyphics Ensemble and the Tom Tom Club.

The Dead opened their first set with Let the Good Times Roll, tied for the most common opening song with Hell in a Bucket (ten shows each since the end of April) following its introduction at the Frost earlier this year. Phil was having trouble with his bass and left the stage at one point. Next came Franklin's Tower, a long-time favorite of mine. Then came the first surprise: Clarence Clemmons played saxophone on Wang Dang Doodle and West L.A. Fadeaway. He was terrific! He fit in perfectly and played as if he'd been playing with the band for years. When he left the stage, Weir instructed the crowd, "Say 'thank you, Clarence'." And Garcia said, "He'll be back later." After that they played Masterpiece, Cold Rain And Snow (Wow!), Cassidy (a really great jam) and Don't Ease Me In.

For New Year's, Father Time (Bill Graham) came in on a giant mirror ball. With all the standard fanfare, the band opened with Sugar Magnolia, complete with saxophone. Clarence stayed on for Touch of Grey and Women Are Smarter, and then left the band to play Terrapin on their own. During the drum solo we were treated to more surprises as Mickey and Billy were joined by Olatunji and another drummer, Sikiru, and then by Kitaro. Amazing!

After space they played The Wheel, Gimme Some Lovin, All Along the Watchtower, MORNING DEW!, and Sugar Magnolia. The ending was weird. In Morning Dew, after the next-to-last verse, Jerry usually brings the song to a very low point where the music is very quiet and then brings it back to a very loud point before singing the line "guess it doesn't matter anyway." This time he let it get so quiet there were two or three seconds of actual silence. During that time someone (it's unclear exactly what happened, see the comments below) started the end of Sugar Magnolia. Not just the Sunshine Daydream part, but a minute or two before that as well.

After a short break, the band came back and surprised us again by starting the third set with Wharf Rat! Clarence came back a third time for Goin' Down The Road and Saturday Night. The perfect ending for a great year!

06-21-89 Shoreline - John W. Scott

To celebrate the Summer Solstice the Dead played a mammoth concert, linking audiences across the nation. Those not lucky enough to be at Shoreline were able watch the show live from the comfort of our living rooms. What may seem like a shallow second best compared with actual attendance is instead a wonderful and unique experience in its own right. Relieved of the hassles of tracking down tickets, dealing with security (no mean feat these days), and all the minor logistical nightmares, the comfort of one's home, filled with a gaggle of friends, becomes the perfect alternative environment for a Dead concert. With a beautiful live picture, full stereo sound and refreshments and rest rooms only a step away one is almost tempted to swear off the more barren stadiums and arenas that the Dead are forced to play these days.

The pay-per-veiw TV broadcast seems like an ideal medium for the Grateful Dead, tackling many problems at once. The most important benefit would be to help keep the ticketless hordes away from hostile venues. Once the logistics are worked out for taking orders and punching in descrambler IDs, this could easily be a profitable venture, a new generation of concert attendance. Once Deadheads got used to having shows available on TV, more and more would pay to see them, encourage their cable systems to carry the service, or arrange to see the show at a friend's house, chipping in to cover the cost. Perhaps a season's pass could be sold, for say, twenty shows, cutting down on the paperwork.

The summer tour would be a particularly strong candidate for TV coverage as they already have cameras for the stadium screens. Other possibilities could also be very exciting: having all of the European shows satellite broadcast would be a wonderful link for American audiences, paranoid about missing an historic tour. On the down side, I had heard that the Grateful Dead were instructed to avoid cover material because of messy royalties, and were also asked to steer clear of the album material. If so, this would be an awkward stumbling block for frequent broadcasts — one can only hope that they are resolved.

As our second child was due, and as I am no great fan of stadium venues, I missed the summer tour of 1989 and this was my only exposure to the beautiful festive banners that flanked the stage. With the parade of setting suns across the top and the billowing beach colors on each side glowing in the twilight, I discovered a nostalgic yearning to be in California on this gorgeous evening. The jealousy quickly faded as I felt newly privileged to at least observe such a golden moment.

Garcia starts the show with the understatement of the evening, "Now we'll really have some fun." Hideaway, which made its last appearance at the Harding Theater in November of 1971, starts out almost as a tuning, but quickly gathers the support to raise it to song status in a nice, loose version. Touch Of Grey gets off to a tentative start; the band seems uncomfortable under the watchful eye of the camera. The kinks, however, are worked out very quickly. In Minglewood, Bobby is the first to exert himself with confidence. This is infectious and soon Phil and Jerry are drawn along, smiling and bouncing a bit. The rest of the set continues this assurance. When the crowd chants for Phil, he rises to the occasion. Embarrassed, Phil smiles and draws a rectangle in the air and sprinkles his fingers over it. Jerry laughs heartily at the charade, and they launch into the ever beautiful Box Of Rain. I like this song anywhere, but it somehow seems truly special when it graces the middle of the set. A hot version of Deal closes the set as the waning light welcomes the cool night air.

The second set is more magical fun. Scarlet is nice and dreamy, even if a little shorter than I might have liked. There is adequate warning for the ensuing Hell In A Bucket, which is played with conviction. Unfortunately, all the Scarlets I have heard in the past year or so have been without the benefit of Fire On The Mountain. It is interesting to hear other arrangements, but I miss the standard pairing. Clarence Clemons is a very welcome addition to the set, though he is not loud enough in the mix for Bucket or Estimated. I would love to hear other musicians sit in more often with the Grateful Dead, and Clarence would be there right near the top of my list.

Thankfully, the video effects are largely confined to the Drums and Space. They are simpler and prettier than those in previous broadcasts, with lots of nice colors and crystal clear superimpositions. Out of technical curiosity, I want to see more clear coverage during the Space so I can see what the Dead are doing; I guess this is just a cry for moderation. Jerry does a mini organ fugue on his MIDI — shades of Lon Chaney, phantom of the amphitheatre. Any toy that can take you through such a variety of spaces is fine with me.

The selections after the Drumz are superb. Truckin> Other One always promises something special. Although the introduction to The Other One is one of the few places that is painfully obscured by the inappropriate use of video effects, these songs are clearly highlights... that is until Morning Dew steals the show. Starting soft and sweet, with Clarence's sax sounding exquisitely mournful, this is one of the more moving versions that I have witnessed. It takes forever to build, and when it does, the contrast is dizzying.

This was the longest show of the year: just a few minutes shy of three hours of solid music. The unfortunate side effect of this length was that the signal was cut on the TV and radio broadcasts just before Brokedown was over. This glitch was the one exception to the otherwise outstanding production work on this broadcast. The sound was absolutely incredible — easily my best sounding tape of the year. The camera work was very good, including some nice unusual angles and, while Candace's lights suffered in the close-ups, they generally translated well to video tape. The picture off my satellite dish was stunning, so crisp and vivid that I often felt that I was there, with the best seats in the house. Clearly whoever was handling the feed and uplink knew their job. All in all, I was very impressed with the evening's efforts by performers and technicians alike.

I can understand the pressures of trying to be creative and spontaneous while being recorded for all posterity on video tape. However, on this occasion, the Dead proved that they are able to overcome such hurdles, and perhaps even master them, given the chance. I sincerely hope that we see many more broadcasts in the future.

08-19-89 Greek Theatre - Stu Nixon

The annual Greek Theatre shows again were benefit concerts for the Rex Foundation, but they came very close to being canceled at the last minute. The University decided it didn't want the shows on the same weekend that students were returning for the fall semester, but there were no alternative weekends available. At one point I heard that the shows actually were cancelled, but then a last minute compromise was worked out that moved them up a day earlier, to Thursday, Friday and Saturday, with the Sunday ticket to be used on Thursday. All three shows were broadcast live on KPFA.

Saturday's show began with a spirited version of Good Times Roll, a song that I always enjoy because it has alternating verses sung by Jerry, Bob and Brent. By the second song, Jackstraw, I was starting to realize that today was really going to be something special because already I sensed that this was an order of magnitude better than the previous two shows. The next song, We Can Run, also blew me away and I started spacing out from pure bliss. Oddly enough, Tennessee Jed brought me back down, as did All Over Now, although Weir's slide guitar work was noteworthy. Loser was also something very special and Memphis Blues was fun and well played. Next we got a treat from Phil who closed the set with Box Of Rain after signaling the rest of the band his intent by drawing the outline of a square in the air with his fingers. It was an excellent version, and left us in extemely good spirits for the break.

The second set that followed was easily one of the best sets of the year. Starting with China Cat the band resumed right where they left off from the first set and by the time they hit the opening of Playing In The Band they were back to the bliss they had achieved at the highest point in the first set. From there the music got truly transcendental from Playing through Uncle John's Band, back to Playing In The Band. This is the reason I keep coming back for more. Those precious moments during that jam I revisited nirvana. Part of me remembers how good the playing was during those songs, but another part of me was light years away.

After the drums there was another very special moment. The version of The Other One that day is surely the most intense I have ever experienced. It had everything you could imagine. During space there were numerous hints of the song and when the drummers returned the space jam continued, sounding more and more like the song all the time, but never quite focusing enough to really become the song and leave the jam. At one point things got pretty wild again with little semblance to the song and evolved into a wall of noise so loud and intense I couldn't believe it! Then they sort of broke through the wall and out came the song riff again. Finally they were all definitely playing the song and Phil even played his trademark rolling intro. But still the jam continued and after a few minutes more Phil did the intro again! This time it really started the song, verses and all. Healy added special effects to Bob's vocals, making them very distorted at times, and Phil even sang on "coming, coming, coming around." The body of the song was very well played and then at the end came the most amazing jam I have ever heard! Another wall of noise and another return to the melody of the song before finally yielding to Wharf Rat. A rocking Not Fade Away (with Phil adding his voice to the bop-bop's) ended the set. The encore was a fine version of Foolish Heart, a song that would do well in this slot, but they could have played anything at this point and it would have been fine with me. It took several days for the joy of these shows to wear off.

10-09-89 Hampton Coliseum - Ken Kaufman

I still get the shivers when I listen to the tape of the second set.

It was a pleasant afternoon in near perfect weather in the parking lot. I had been amused to see the marquee reading "The Warlocks" on the way in; I wish I'd brought my camera to capture that. Once parked, a bunch of us hung out near a car radio, listening to the baseball playoffs. A news crew from the local NBC affiliate brought several trucks by, though I don't know how their report portrayed the whole scene.

They opened the doors (for general admission seating) over 90 minutes before showtime, and a megaphoned voice said to enter now so we wouldn't miss anything. In spite of the ludicrous urgency of the announcement, it got many Heads out of the parking lot, probably providing for a much more mellow scene as far as the authorities and the locals were concerned.

Eventually, we went inside. Stranger was a promising start to the night, and the Boyz came to a full stop after the song. An uptempo, heavily MIDIed Built to Last and a solid Rooster followed. Ramble on Rose was great where we were, right in the heart of the Phil Zone. Soulful work by Jerry and Brent accompanied the omnipresent bass.

We Can Run topped that. They had a wonderful arrangement with Brent adlibbing the lead vocals while Phil, Bob and Jerry stood at the mikes and harmonized. It did, I must admit, look like they were almost ready for doo-wop. In spite of the amp problems Bobby seemed to be having during Jack-A-Roe, one fan standing near me said that this had totally made his night, and he didn't care what happened from then on. Of course, what happened the rest of the way was legendary.

The rest of the first set was unexceptional, though Music began to click at the end. All in all, it was a strong first set, leaving us quite happy.

You just knew it would be a special second set given the Playin' they opened with. Longer jams than in many recent shows, finally giving way to Uncle John, then back into Playin', and I was pleased to hear them bring that song to a full, concrete conclusion, nearly a half hour into the set.

But as the last notes of Playin' were still fading, Jerry played the musical tetragram that is so familiar, even to the casual Deadhead. 13,000 fans digested the notes, and when they recognized them for what they were, an incredible cheer went up from the already exuberant crowd. Dark Star was back, but the cheers practically drowned out the band right up to the first verse. Still, it isn't really Dark Star without boldly going into the farthest reaches of space. Naturally, the Dead were happy to oblige, albeit more briefly than some times in the distant past. At one point during the song, it was the percussionists who were playing lead. And yet, Dark Star was only the beginning!

Right after the "mirror shatters" verse, the full band went into a gargantuan feedback jam for a while before yielding to Bill and Mickey. The other musicians seemed reluctant to leave the stage, and stood there motionless before, one at a time, getting up and leaving.

Drums/Space was above average, and then came a Death Don't that was blissfully close to perfection. Everyone's vocals were full of feeling, and the jams were exquisite. The individual guitar and keyboard solos coalesced, and for a while the entire band was cranking it out as one. The one problem with this was that, as a result, the rest of the set had to have been anticlimactic. A hot rendition of Fantasy/Jude, and an excellent Throwin' Stones got a bit lost in the excitement, then an uninspired Good Lovin' ended the set. Brent's ad-libbing the vocals during the second verse seemed to leave the backing vocalists a bit perplexed.

And then the encore. I was expecting a surprise, perhaps the return of Day Tripper or Revolution in honor of John Lennon's birthday, but they reached even further back in time and unpredictability for their selection. Unbelievably, the Dead pulled out Attics! An even more sincere eruption came up from the crowd. And for the second straight night, the encore was listened to in blissful, respectful near-silence. The song itself was not a capella, but as you might expect, the instruments took a definite back seat.

It is said that the Dead play slow encores to cool of the crowds for their return to the parking lot. I'm afraid this one had the opposite effect; it was totally uplifting. After the lights came up, the entire arena gave a loud ovation, not for another encore, but as a tribute to the magic they had witnessed the past four hours. It only lasted a few moments, but it was incredibly moving.

10-09-89 Hampton - John W. Scott

The promise of a show billed as the Warlocks was intriguing, I knew I would be missing something special. Some minor concession was expected, but certainly not the two night blaster that almost stopped the tour before it even started. Why bother even to show up at the Meadowlands?

The phone lines were afire across the nation after the second show. I got THE call at about 12:30. "They played it tonight." Immediately I knew not only the obvious (what it was) but also that they really had played it. I blinked: "How was it?" "Excellent, listen." Even with poor sound of a D5 speaker over the phone lines I gasped — it was beautiful, far deeper than I would dare hope. This was a serious matter, not just another one of the ugly rumor jokes that serve as flippant conversation entrances. "That isn't all, they also played Death Don't". I swallowed hard. That was not totally new, I was already deeply envious of my friends who had been at Shoreline. "That still isn't all - they played Attics of my Life for the encore." I dropped the receiver.

Normally responsible adults cared not that their sleep was interrupted at 2:30 AM: something momentous had occurred. Undoubtedly, they found themselves unable to sleep, so in turn they infected other normally responsible sleeping friends, and the phone company had a banner night.

10-11-89 Meadowlands Arena - John W. Scott

New York, too close to New Jersey, or so goes the Pop-O-Pies version of Truckin. The Grateful Dead in New Jersey get mixed reviews on this, the longest stand of the year. On the one hand we have four good concerts and one excellent one; on the other hand, we have the venue. Even at my first glance, the barren environment made me wish they had played in New York. Although The City may appear equally unappealing, it has the unique ability to completely absorb exiting Deadheads in a matter of minutes and offers unequalled culture and cuisine after the show. There is no external security at Madison Square Garden, and the police are concerned with more important matters than acting as rainy-day-smile busters. By comparison, at the Meadowlands Deadheads gather in a day-long pressure cooker, filling two mammoth parking lots, providing easy targets for eager yellow-jacketed security squads. Then there is no hint of culture or food, let alone cuisine, to mitigate its desolate situation, and no possible recommendation as the site of a creative performance. Maybe the Pop-O-Pies had the liabilities right after all.

Even so, with the Northeast banished from the Spring schedule, lots of hard-up Deadheads flocked to the Meadowlands to get any glimpse of the band after a year-long dirth, and I counted myself among their eager ranks. The drive down from New Hampshire was long and promising: there is something special about the outward bound leg of a tour trip — the unique excitement of endless possibilities on a mission of self-fulfillment. With the precedents of Hampton, this drive was particularly charged. As the excitement grew with each mile, it was easy to ignore the degradation of the countryside from the rolling hills of forest and field to a smoldering wasteland of cement and chemical plants. When finally the arena loomed on the horizon, an awkward block of cement dropped next to the hulking battleship of Giant's Stadium, I was ready to see the Dead anywhere, even in New Jersey.

Upon arriving it was immediately obvious that something was fundamentally different. It took a moment and then it hit me: where was the bustling marketplace? The vending scene had clearly gotten out of hand last year, and so had the throng that always showed up without tickets. Still, I found myself suspecting that an outright ban was not a satisfying solution. Instead of all the mass mingling and meandering, the crowd tended to turn their backs and clump into little micro parties — it was not nearly as social. Most of those who did wander far were looking for tickets, or occasionally to scalp them. I could forever do without those hawking beers at obscene profits, or those who litter the parking lots with thousands of cartridges from one of the most ecologically unconscionable highs there is, but I missed some of the more innovative shirt and sticker designs. The only shirt I saw was a quick, furtive display of a parody on a popular anti-drug television advertisement. One panel showed a fried egg: "This is your brain on drugs." The other panel showed an elaborate breakfast: "This is your brain on drugs with bacon, toast and jelly, orange juice, and a side of hash browns." The lampooned advertisements are patronizing and obnoxious enough to make the design amusing, but it was a far cry from the wealth of artwork and ideas that normally flood the parking lots. And, if this first night was any indication, the vending ban was having no effect on cutting down on extra attendance: the ticketless were everywhere.

We got into the arena early, anxious to get down to business. I found a friend to run my deck (something to listen to for the five-hour drive home) and headed for our seats. Grateful Dead Ticket Sales deserves special kudos — not only do they provide incredible shop-at-home convenience, but for this stand they sent me very nice floor seats for the first couple of nights. The first set was respectable, starting with a quick warm-up of LTGTR, and then a solid Bertha> Greatest opener. Cassidy provided my first high-level jam in over a year, and was the obvious highlight of the competent, but average set. The closing combo of Just A Little Light> Don't Ease was lackluster, but after a year off the bus, I didn't really notice and was eager for the second set.

During the break I took the opportunity to, once again, check out the inside of this coliseum. Rows and rows of excited fans were thick in their seats, piled high on the concrete, just like so many of the other large faceless arenas on the East Coast. With the internal similarities, it is often up to the external atmosphere to set the spiritual tone for a concert. Fortunately, there have been very striking contradictions to this rule. On this night there was the energy and the comraderie inside the arena that had seemed so lacking in the parking lot before the show. The entertainment highlight of the intermission was the crowd's performance of the wave. It is hard to imagine of a group that so treasures its individuality and often rebels against mainstream America, but around and around raced the wave as Deadheads enthusiastically participated in one of the great American sporting fads.

The second set was solid throughout, beginning with a nice China> Rider. China Cat had a wonderful full sound to it, complete with a regal MIDI trumpet flourish from Jerry — the brass voice sounds good here, I would like to hear more of it. I Know You Rider was built to intense heartfelt climaxes. Bobby pounded away at his power chords, while Jerry tore up his frets in a vicious lead: a contest to see who could break a string first. Miraculously, both guitars survived this onslaught intact, a tribute to the marvels of modern metallurgy. Estimated was mainly remarkable as it was my most sustained live introduction to Jerry's MIDI. This time the voice of choice was a nice deep wooden flute, almost an African sound to it; an unexpected selection, but very effective. Terrapin was beautiful, though uneventful, particularly when compared with some of the other, stellar versions from this year such as that from the Earthquake benefit.

The Space was nice and rich, with a very brief quote from the Close Encounters theme that made several appearances throughout the year. While all the remaining songs were good, Watchtower was truly outstanding; the energetic highpoint of the show. Bobby is the first to get enthusiastic, then everyone is infected and Phil becomes downright thunderous. This was yet another scorching version of a song that has become one of the most consistently powerful post-drum numbers in the Grateful Dead's repertoire.

Even with the energy drawn from a first Dead show in a year, the five-hour drive home was taxing. It helped to have my tape of the show — it did not help to realize that I would be making the same drive after two of the remaining four concerts. One should never underestimate the motivation of a hard up Deadhead.

10-13-89 David Letterman - John J. Wood

On the day off in the middle of the five-show run at the Meadowlands, Jerry and Bob were guests on Late Night on a most appropriate date: Friday The 13th. This was the second time the two were guests of the show (they both appeared during the 1987 MSG run on 09/17). That appearance was most notable for a superb version of Masterpiece and the great levitation trick where Jerry was lifted. Hysterical!

During the television show, Jerry and Bob sit in with The World's Most Dangerous Band, led my musician/arranger Paul Schaffer, on workouts such as Hideaway, the Pink Floyd hit Another Brick In The Wall Part II, and the Otis Redding chestnut I Can't Turn You Loose. During the show, I barely tolerated the Woody Harrelson interview (he was on too damn long and embarrassed Garcia over a band conference) and Julia Child cooking a duck (and wondering if she was drunk on sherry).

Jerry and Bob were last, and they led Schaffer's band in a short, but strong, version of the Smokey Robinson gem, I Second That Emotion. Jerry handled the first verse, and Bob handled the second. The vocal harmonies, though, were a tad rough, but all were having fun. Jerry's short guitar solo shined.

Afterwards, Letterman briefly interviewed Jerry and Bob. Jerry was in a cheerful mood, and when Letterman asked about the possibility of playing Russia and how long the band would stay there, Jerry coyly replied, "Until they let us out." Another great Garcia quote: when Letterman asked the two if they tried some duck, Jerry retorted, "I can't eat them. They're too fuzzy and cute."

10-16-89 Meadowlands Arena - John W. Scott

The special nature of this evening was immediately obvious to anyone but the most casual observer. It started out as mere good karma as the day began, but soon the electricity was too obvious for even the greatest pessimist to ignore. With Dark Star anxiety at a fever pitch after four nights of denial, it was easy to believe even the early specious rumors. But soon tangible threads of credibility began to collect: the phase of the moon had been deemed favorable by a local soothsayer, it was Bobby's 42nd birthday, we got a decent parking place in the local lot, and someone knew someone who had heard that Jerry was quoted as directly implying the inevitable in a local radio interview.

The vending had grown slightly each day and finally there was barely enough variety to make the lot circuits interesting. Late in the afternoon, as we meandered through the crowd, a friend and I could scarce believe our eyes as our political tell-it-like-it-is hero Jeff Greenfield appeared — another surreal signpost that this was no mortal Dead concert. Jeff was chatting comfortably with an assortment of Deadheads that would have intimidated, if not overwhelmed, other ABC heavyweights. Even the most frazzled freak managed to provide lucid, interesting answers when asked the right questions in the right manner. The crowd interview spots were to be included in some show other than Nightline — I didn't catch the name.

Inside the arena someone was passing out birthday cards for Bobby. One of the designs noted the supreme significance of the number 42 as "the secret of life, the universe, and everything" in The Hitchhiker's Guide To The Galaxy. I love these threads that twine and bind; the more random, the better. The birthday boy opened the show with the East Coast debut of Picasso Moon. As this was new to most of the audience, it required some effort to digest and the crowd noise was attentively subdued. I was surprised at how much tighter this Picasso Moon sounded on tape than it had live to my untrained ear. Half Step, brimming with self-confidence, appeared to be the real opener for many, as the audience jumped in with both feet. Jerry seemed to think so too, almost shouting the last "On my way." Skipping the lazy river lyrics (but not the jam), the Dead went into a Stranger, filled with all the funkiness of a hot Shakedown. Three openers for one show — the x-chemistry was already musically evident and the show had just begun. "You know it's gonna get stranger, so let's get on with the show."

Good Times has lost some of its candy coating over the years, leaning a little more instead towards traditional blues. It is versions like this, without much of the hotdogging that impress me. Built to Last was nothing special, but after Memphis Blues (the first-set Dylan songs are so common and consistently strong that it has become boring to comment on them) we got our next sign. Jerry toyed with Happy Birthday and, as a gift, he then gave up his turn, presumably letting Bob close the first set. Let It Grow started out impatient, wanting to race. No one musician seemed to be rushing it, instead they all urged it forward at a breathtaking pace. One moment Phil was pushing it onward with an uppity bass, the next Jerry was laying down lightning licks, daring the rest of the band to follow. The drummers were always there with a solid footing for the rest of the band, perish the thought that anyone should stumble. Jerry's use of his MIDI reminded me of this song's roots in the horned versions from September, 1973. This was my favorite rendition of the year (admittedly with some prejudice), and I was amazed when it was not the end of the first set.

Deal to follow Let It Grow?! This practice was almost common in 1981, but was now extinct: the last time that they played these two songs in the same show was 11/07/85. A little deeper examination revealed the last time that these songs were played as a combination was 09/11/85 which happened to be Mickey Hart's birthday, Mickey Hart's 42nd birthday! The secret of life, the universe and everything once again reared its little paisley head — no wonder the Dead were chosen to write the Twilight Zone theme. Synchronicity aside, Deal smoked. Even though Jerry had outdone himself on Let It Grow, he still had plenty to give on this number, and he gave generously. With three set openers and two set closers, this was the meatiest first set of the year, a wonder to behold — I could scarcely wait for the second set.

While we sat around arrays of delectable Chinese dumplings that afternoon, four pundits had arrived at three possible scenarios for the placement of a Dark Star. The most obvious was for the band to gather some momentum from Playin (which they had not yet played at the Meadowlands Arena) and roll on into IT as they had in Hampton. The next most conspicuous alternative was for Dark Star to materialize out of the greater depths of Space. The final, dark horse possibility that we agreed upon was that of a second-set opener. I was surprised and thrilled when the Dead chose the third option — it proved to be the most powerful. From a standing start the introduction was long and hauntingly beautiful, the fullest of any that year. I stood there, with an old friend and glowed. Stunned beyond hope and even imagination, I found myself glad that I had not yet been prejudiced by hearing the full version from Hampton. In a span of some twelve minutes I was bewitched by a variety of jams and spaces so rich that I still shiver when I listen to the tape.

After what had seemed an eternity, Dark Star wound into Playin In The Band. Playin was wonderful, equally visionary in it's exploration, quickly soothing any disappointment that the Dead had forgotten to sing the second verse of Dark Star. In a year when the Playin> Uncle John's combination had become common, these versions were exceptional. Filled with lots of extra spacey jams and given the running start from Dark Star, it almost seemed like 1972, but with a new sound, a distinct and beautiful signature. I have never attended a concert with so much innovation throughout. Jerry overcame embarrassment when, accidentally repeating the first refrain of Uncle John's Band, he was amiably corrected by Bob. Instead, he channeled his energy into crafting a masterpiece, then slipping back into a wonderful Playin jam of many themes. Brent was loathe to let such a golden moment pass and added a pretty piano chord run before he joined the rest of the stringed instrumentalists offstage.

I Will Take You Home and Miracle brought us back to the Eighties for a few minutes. Not that this was a rude awakening — they were both good versions, but I had allowed myself to stray too far into fantasy and the contrast was stark. The dose of reality was short-lived, however, as we were suddenly back to the early Seventies: Dark Star somehow wound out of Miracle for the forgotten verse. The Dead don't split it up very often: more is the pity as the result is so very satisfying. Based on a simple, but beautiful melody, Dark Star is designed to provide a great wealth of opportunities for exploration. As such it has an almost unique ability to bind an entire set if it is allowed to span a number of songs, influencing them with infectious jams. This was certainly true on this night.

Dark Star fell into Attics — another song that I was not adequately prepared for. Although the vocals were not quite as strong as they had been in Hampton, they were still much better than on any of the original live versions that I had heard. It had been difficult to enjoy, or even appreciate, the older live versions as the harmonies struggled and grated. It was such a beautiful song on the album that it was particularly frustrating that it did not succeed in live forums. Hampton proved that the song can live up to its recorded expectations, and the Meadowlands proved that this was no fluke. The final Playin reprise was short but sweet and very appropriate, completing yet another thread to tie the set together with that wonderful skewed symmetry.

I had heard tapes of the other We Bid You Goodnights, so I was prepared to hear a full version, with the complete set of vocals. And still I was thrilled by what I heard. We left the arena with a warm glow that would take hours or even months to evaporate. I had come to the Meadowlands after a year's absence seeking some sort of rejuvenating tonic. After five shows I had finally found much more than I ever would have dared hope for. This dose would last me for a long time indeed.

Upon reflection this concert was even more remarkable than it had seemed at the time. It was not a particularly long show; instead it was incredibly deep, every single note and beat counted. There was length where it mattered: Playin and Dark Star were two of the three longest songs of the year. It is even impressive that the Dead managed to avoid every song that had been played over the Meadowlands stand (the previous night they had played three repeats). Still, my immediate appreciation for this event had been tarnished by a self-suspicion of chauvinism: I must be inflating this show because I was there. Not so, this was a momentous concert — the sort of privileged experience that has only been shared a handful of times in the past decade. It is incredible that it happened twice in one week. What October 16th lacked in surprise, it easily made up in invention: it was a wonderfully expressive, even innovative concert, filled with lots if unusual jams and spaces. I made a special tape of this show for my Golf, putting the second set on a 100-minute tape, with the Let It Grow and Deal on the end of the second side. This tape is already well worn, and will undoubtedly need to be replaced soon.

10-26-89 Miami - Peter Lavezzoli

The last show from the infamous 1989 Fall Tour is a show that helped give this tour such notoriety. Of the three Dark Stars played on this tour, Miami had the longest and most fully developed, as well as the most fearsome. This entire show is an excursion into darkness, and is not for the faint-hearted. The entire first set builds on its power in startling ways. Foolish Heart is deceptively upbeat as an opener, but the plaintive nature of the song belies its tempo. Then comes the downward spiral into the lower recesses of the human psyche. This version of Rooster is the most violent and aggressive ever done, with Brent practically spitting out his vulgar henhouse verse, and Phil responding by dropping powerful bombs. Both drummers are angrily assaulting their kits, and this is no ordinary blues number! Jerry responds with Stagger Lee, and the violence has now worked its way into the lyrics. Group interaction during all of these pieces is razor sharp and intense. Uncle>River is also deceptively upbeat, while perpetuating themes of death and loss. BE Women is another wolf in sheep's clothing, as we begin to feel the pain in Jerry's voice as he tells the tale of addiction. Both band and audience erupt for the line, "Drink down a bottle and you're ready to KILL!" Geez, some party. The theme of addiction and death further intensifies with a first-set Victim that reeks of desperation and despair. Healy creates a swirling mass of quadrophonic white noise that paves the way for the sonic carnage of the Dark Star in the next set. As if nothing was happening, the Dead snap back into jolly mode for Don't Ease, and they're off the stage. Not exactly an easy landing. This was one of the blackest first sets of their career.

Not to give anyone any false hopes, the band comes back from a long break and starts the second set with a brooding Estimated Prophet, the first time this song had opened the set since its earliest performances of May 1977. Needless to say, the choice to open the set with it carried much more weight now than it did in 1977 when it was still in its infant stages. Here it was a conscious decision, and an unsettling one. Bobby evokes Manson with his Messianic rants and raves, and the closing jam slowly descends into darkness. The rhythmic structure eventually dissolves, and we are suspended in a few moments of atonal Space. It's clear that we're not getting Eyes of the World. What we do get is the most furious Blow Away ever done. This version does not extend into the compassionate rap that Brent would sometimes do with this song. Instead, he just curses and howls into the mike with a terrifying venom, as the band hammers behind him. This show has been so confrontational up to this point, one has to wonder what could possibly be on the band's mind tonight, as if they were addressing a specific person. After a spacy tuning introduction that feels like the calm before a storm, Jerry responds with Dark Star. The large banner that had been hanging from the balcony reading, "5603 days since the last Florida Dark Star," gets released and drifts to the floor as the crowd goes into a frenzy at the sound of the opening notes.

Ironically, the last Florida Dark Star was also from the second night of a two-night stand in Miami, back in 1974. That version started cold and then drifted into complete weirdness. This version would follow suit, although in a much more unnerving manner. The Hampton and Brendan Byrne Dark Stars seemed as though the Dead were still getting reacquainted with this song's powerful implications. But those were both before the devastating San Francisco earthquake. This is a different beast altogether. For this third attempt of the tour, the terrifying power of Dark Star returns with a vengeance. This is the longest post-1989 version that was done as a single piece with both verses, not broken up into parts. The group interplay drips with psychedelia, very loose and bottomless. Jerry stays rooted in A Major, while the rest of the band is all over the map with little sense of structure. The rhythm section swells and recedes minute by minute. The interaction is so taut and responsive, you can slice the tension with a knife. Black holes of open space interrupt familiar patterns at an instant. Jerry's voice is frail and tentative for both verses. After the second verse fades, the holocaust begins. Phil snatches the bottom out from under our feet as he spirals down into the lowest reaches of his bass, and the band follows him with notes that smear and ooze downwards, as if the entire universe is sinking. The drums have abandoned rhythm, and begin exploring electronic sound. Brent begins extracting sickly outer space noises from his synthesizer, interspersed with jarring attacks of white noise that Healy swirls throughout the arena in ways that Victim only hinted at earlier. The sonic landscape in this post-verse jam is brutal and black, the sound of spiritual terror, an outer space ghetto filled with evil spirits ready to channel through the music into our open psyches. Jerry and Bobby's MIDI sounds are shrieking in pain as the disorienting swirls of white noise accelerate and intensify. Suddenly we are thrown into an energy vortex that spins out of control, the sound of impermanence. It takes tremendous courage for band and audience to tap into these energies without flinching. Some people begin running out of the building from the sheer force of the sound. Most are unable to move, transfixed. When the band finally relents, we feel as though we've just witnessed genocide.

As the swirling hurricane of white noise subsides, a very calm and tribal Drums ensues. Suddenly we feel as though we're slowly paddling down a jungle river, and Drums has an atmosphere similar to the Apocalypse Now Rhythm Devils sessions. Talking drum, timbale, cowbell, all create a primitive yet gentle landscape to contrast with the electronic carnage of before. Mickey never leaves the stage, and remains on Beam throughout Space, providing a gentle low drone in D. This gives Space a melodic foundation, and we continue to feel as though we're canoeing through a peaceful jungle. Combining this tranquil atmosphere with the earlier massacre, we may speculate that the Vietnam War could be the prevailing theme, a speculation enhanced by the similarity of this Drums and Space with the Apocalypse Now soundtrack released ten years ago.

The remainder of the show explores themes of death from a more compassionate standpoint, in contrast to everything leading up to Drums. The Wheel ever so gently materializes out of Space, and finds the band in much brighter spirits. Jerry's leads sound very ethereal. Then comes a very sudden segue into one of the most furious Watchtowers ever done. Jerry has rarely ripped such fast and furious leads on this song as he does here, and Phil's strong bottom end is a solid foundation for Weir's pleas. This version succeeds in capturing the essence of the Hendrix version from the late 60s, but in a style unique to the Dead. Very appropriate for this show! Another brief transition into Stella follows, and Jerry's voice is cracked and fragile, but the emotion of the song comes through very poignantly—particularly in the closing instrumental jam which starts off pensive and then soars heavenwards. NFA comes right on Stella's heels, and this version is very tribal and colorful, with swirling Hammond organ and heavy sustain from Jerry as he uses his pan-flute sound during the jam. The drummers also regain their earlier thunder before the band slowly lets the crowd take over the NFA chant. With the post-Space segment of this show focusing on rebirth and survival, the band comes back ready to finally bid us all Goodnight. Thus ends the legendary 1989 Fall Tour, and the final East Coast show of the 80s, a show that changed many people.

12-06-89 Oakland Coliseum - Mike Dolgushkin

The Grateful Dead can always be counted on to give a hot performance for a worthy cause, but in this case it was for a reason that hit very close to home. The earthquake of October 17, 1989 affected everyone in the Bay area to varying degrees, so for the local residents in attendance, this benefit took on personal meanings that others might not have. Besides my own experiences during and immediately after the quake, my place of employment, the Psychedelic Shop, sustained some external damage. There were many anxious days before we were officially declared safe for occupancy.

The day of the benefit I had to work until closing, then BART over to the show, entering the arena during the middle of the expected opener — Shakedown Street. What I did hear of it was excellent, Jerry seemingly trying every effect he could think of. The much-played Walking Blues came next, followed by the not-so-much-played Friend of the Devil. (Years ago it seemed like Friend of the Devil was done at damn near every gig.)

The song selection for this set was nearly impeccable — Queen Jane, Jack A Roe, then two of the new songs that illustrated just how far that material has gone, especially compared to the album versions. Just A Little Light had a somewhat different beat than usual, and there is also a spot where the song gets quiet and the band has room to stretch out. This time they did, coming up with a nice little mini-jam. Victim or the Crime came next, earthquake music in full force! Phil, in particular, was thundering away, and the song eventually went into a bizarre, loud jam — quite out of character for a first set. The music seemed to go into a swirl, with Candace's lights adding to the effect. Bobby slowly signaled the end, after a momentary silence came a rousing Don't Ease to end the set.

Needless to say, expectations ran high for this show because it was the Dead's first West coast appearance after the revivals of Dark Star, Attics of My Life, and Help on the Way. While none of these songs, nor any unusual material, were played, this gig pointed out another facet of the Dead's recent resurgence, namely that the jams, regardless of which songs they're tied to, have become longer and more interesting. This obviously has a lot to do with the new MIDI setups (Garcia reportedly has barely scratched the surface on his) but for whatever reasons it's gratifying to see the band exploring new directions and clearly having fun with it, no matter which songs they do.

Another fun feature of some recent shows is the band's tendency to mix up the standard repertoire, sometimes doing songs where you least expect them. At this show, the second set started normally enough with Scarlet Begonias. After a short jam they made a tentative stab at Fire on the Mountain, which didn't really click so, following a short moment of indecision, came Sugar Magnolia. Now, I will take Sugar Magnolia anywhere in the show at anytime, so I was quite happy with this choice, but not ready for what they did with it — Ship of Fools started as soon as the vocals to Sugar Magnolia ended! It almost seemed preplanned.

Terrapin came next, during which Clarence made his first appearance of the night. Terrapin is obviously a song that he knows and feels comfortable with. Once the song was over, instead of going right into drums (as has been the usual practice for years and years and years), the whole band stayed onstage for an unusual and lengthy jam. Jerry was trying every trick he could think of, and Bobby was coming up with interesting effects, and Phil was playing some very loud chords. Just when I'd think the stage was about to be left to the drummers, the boys would come up with some new twist and explore that for awhile.

Of course, the Drums had to show up sometime, and what a Drumz it was! Earthquake percussion at its heaviest! Mickey in particular was going off the deep end, and towards the end he was literally KICKING the Beam! You had to see it to believe it! Well, the Space picked up on that energy, and we got some very loud, strange noises before the band settled into The Wheel, seemingly saying that in spite of natural (or other) disasters life goes on. Clarence was back on stage at this point and stayed until the end of the set, playing tasteful little fills for the most part. Next came a rippin' Watchtower, something I'd specifically hoped for, and then Standing on the Moon. For many people this was the highlight of the show. I've certainly never heard a better rendition, and the end of the song with Jerry screaming, "I'D RATHER BE WITH YOU" over and over, had Morning Dew intensity. I thought that it might actually end the set, but they hadn't finished Sugar Magnolia yet so they did.

Expectations for the encore ran from California Earthquake to Attics, but we got Black Muddy River instead. Expectations aside, this show is a prime example of what the Grateful Dead are up to these days. I would urge anyone to seek out a tape of it!

There is something unique and vital about the spring tour in the Northeast. Winter, fresh in November, has grown very stale and it seems like it will last forever. The Grateful Dead have been the harbingers of spring for so long that when they skipped the Northeast in 1989 it set my biological clock back two months. This year, still charged from the New Jersey shows, I was very excited about their return to lead the rite of Spring. Sensibly, I had originally planned on waiting for the Albany shows, but the temptation of celebrating Phil's 50th birthday proved overwhelming. So, while in previous years I had always been content to allow the Dead to warm up down south before braving the early spring weather, I was happy to break this pattern. There is a special excitement about the first shows of a tour: the endless possibilities of no preconceptions, and I wanted to taste it for myself. The fortunate thing about this tour is that the Dead defied preconceptions again and again throughout their dates — bringing a breath of fresh spring air wherever they went.

We left New Hampshire with the early morning fog rising from the last heaps of snow as they melted into mud season. As we headed south the climate warmed and dried, collapsing this malodorous and unpleasant season into a mere nine hours. When we arrived, eager Deadheads were basking in weather so beautiful that winter was only a distant memory.

The Prince George's County highway patrol were not impressed by the weather. On the first night there were lots of selective speeding traps, some complete with K-9 support. Where the vast majority of the blatant speeders were driving BMWs or Acura Legends and wearing designer suits, all the cars I saw stopped were more modest forms of transportation, each full of Deadheads. One trap had netted four or five brightly stickered cars with several tie-dyed folk in handcuffs — not the friendliest welcome to Maryland.

The Capital Centre is a large saddle-roofed structure that could have been dropped in any metropolitan area on the East Coast. Washington, D.C. and Baltimore provide lots of interesting diversions between shows, handing this generic arena a small advantage. The audience and their enthusiasm parlayed that advantage into a significant improvement over most of the current venues in the East.

Security was quite reasonable for these shows, particularly when contrasted with the horror-show stories from 1988, or with the PGC highway patrols on the way to the arena. Indoors the authorities were mainly interested in keeping people in their seats, a function that we older Deadheads sometimes actually appreciate. Outdoors there was a solid police contingent, many on horses after the show, but for the most part they stayed out of the way and I saw very few hassles each night.

Vending was confined to the dirt auxiliary parking lot. The only access was over a small bridge that crammed with people each day, taking up to fifteen minutes to cross. Once there, the lot was devoid of police and security — anarchy reigned supreme. Beer, food and balloons dominated; creative merchandise such as shirts were almost nonexistent. With such a lack of interesting wares, the lot was largely populated by folk desperately seeking to beg, buy or trade for a ticket. The miracle seekers were in abundance, and I must admit that I smiled at the "Roses are red, hippies are hairy. I need a ticket 'cause I'm Jonesing for Jerry" poster.

While many people had hoped for rare set lists featuring the debut of Unbroken Chain, what we got were relatively standard lists that were played exceptionally well. The tour, like they are apt to do, opened with Cold Rain, a favorite of mine; it seemed a very appropriate song to bid farewell to winter. The band added extra effort as they built to the heartfelt final chorus, as if to say they, too, were excited about the new tour. A tight Stranger confirmed the excitement for the band and the crowd alike.

While the entire set was strong, the revival of Loose Lucy was truly wonderful, the rocking highpoint of the night for me. My friend and I scored major points in the tuning prognostication game, but most of the audience remained clueless even during the opening chords. It was only when the lyrics started the place exploded, thousands of hands slapping to foreheads in unison: "Oh, THAT'S what they're playing." The audience cheered and then sang along for "Thank you for a real good time," and alternated "Yeahs" with Jerry — pretty good for a crowd criticized for being long on youth and for a song that hadn't been played in fifteen years. Deservedly, it received the sort of fervent applause afterwards that is normally reserved for the end of a hot set or show. Through some unfortunate twist of fate this was to be the only Loose Lucy that I saw out of the eleven versions the Dead played in 1990. In retrospect I would not have traded it for any two others.

The set was rounded out by a very nice Let It Grow, Jerry using the MIDI horn to good effect. All in all, the set was both tight and healthy: spanning 1:12:59, it was a strong beginning to what was to become one of the more memorable Spring tours in years.

A beautiful Crazy Fingers opened the second set, featuring rain-drop lights with a ripple effect from Candace. While Playin and Uncle John's Band have become almost inseparable in the past year, the combination never ceases to enthrall me. Playin was deep and spacey, and Uncle John's was as joyous as ever. The return to Playin was purely instrumental, woven deeply into the ensuing space, with Jerry leaving before the rest of the musicians. Although this segment was not particularly long by 1990 standards — not even thirty-four minutes — it was quite satisfying: very tight and of a like mind.

The percussion played heavily on the quad speakers during the xylo-drums to good effect. The post-drum fare was rather standard, although well received by the enthusiastic audience. I was only slightly surprised to notice that the second set ran only an hour and eleven minutes, a shorter time span than the first set. Still, I left very content after the first night of the tour, an experience well worth the travel. The tune on my lips? Loose Lucy, of course!

Phil's 50th birthday was the night of great expectations. The Unbroken Chain rehearsal rumors had been floating around for a few months and while they weren't exactly ugly, they did have hopes high; perhaps too obvious to be a surprise on Phil's golden night. Typically, the band delivered, but not quite in the way that everyone anticipated — proving the adage, "It doesn't matter what they play, just as long as they are on."

The opening one-two punch of Jack Straw> Sugaree led immediately to the evening's first surprise (yes, there were surprises). At first, Easy To Love You seemed an odd, even disappointing, choice for a revival. Brent's Go To Heaven Material had never thrilled me; it never seemed to fit in with the Dead's other material. I was happily surprised by the refurbished version; a clear improvement over the song that had been last played in Springfield on 9-3-80, almost a decade ago.

After each song "We want Phil" could be heard from some corner of the arena. Finally, after Althea, the chants came to a head and were answered by... Tom Thumb Blues — again unexpected, and very welcome. Played at each of the last two stands in Oakland, I hoped this was a sign that Tom Thumb was to become a regular part of the rotation but, alas, that was not to prove the case. This was easily the most fun I have heard Phil have with this song: he savored each and every line, improvising and emphasizing with gusto. The perfect vocals were complimented by some beautiful guitar from Jerry, making this a memorable version of an exceptional song.

Indeed, the birthday boy provided inspiration for his cohorts. Jerry sang Tennessee Jed with the same sense of conviction and fun, even letting the audience fill in a "You better head back to Tennessee, Jed": in all respects, a crowd-pleaser. Next, Bobby was not to be outdone with a pretty Cassidy — I like it when he gets competitive. Everyone had greeted Phil with their own version of that special spark, with the audience as the happy beneficiary of an exceptional first set. And the real festivities were yet to come.

The second set began with the audience wishing Phil a happy birthday — proving that it is impossible for 18,000 people to sing in unison. The phasing time-lag aside, the enthusiastic effort (the celebration, after all, had brought many of us great distances) seemed genuinely appreciated by a bashful Phil.

The band then jumped into a charged China> Rider. While my friends ranted about China Cat, it was the I Know You Rider that I found exceptional. From the announcing fanfare to the guitar-pounding finish this song had both the band and the audience jumping. Favorites aside, each song had something special that night: Jerry added intense licks to Samson, Terrapin was particularly soft and beautiful — and yet it was not a song, but a theme, that stole my heart that night.

The jam before the drums was simply gorgeous; centering on a theme which I had not heard before and which haunted me long after, it wandered over eight heavenly minutes, through several different strains. Twice, it seemed as though the Dead were going to stop the jam after only a few minutes, then Jerry turned it up a notch to a catchy Mojoesque phrase. Finally, he added a couple more twists — tying it together very nicely — then let the improvisation slip into the Drumz. Second only to the pre-drum jam of the first night at Albany, this remains one of my favorite moments of the tour.

While the remaining list might look boring on paper, the Dead took the opportunity to prove that a concert is 99% inspiration. Wharf Rat and NFA both stood out as examples of how hot the old standards can be. And the Dead saved another surprise for last: the Revolution encore was particularly enthusiastic; a very appropriate song to revive in the nation's capital.

03-16-90 Capital Centre - John W. Scott

By the last night the scene in the lot over the bridge had grown to such a frenzy that one glance towards the bridge kept me away from the mayhem. Rumor has it that the law enforcement community ended two nights of on-site complacency and cleaned the lots, much like the PGC police had stripped the routes of unsightly tie-dye blemishes on a nightly basis. The vans with nitrous tanks that had been raking it in on the previous two nights with fifteen-minute lines finally met their match.

Without the vendable distractions and with the promise of precipitation, there was little to do but get in line early. Unfortunately, we were not the only ones this occurred to and the lines were already long. The ushers showed no heart when it started to rain — if anything, the doors opened later on this night.

There were two focuses in the first set. While the young crowd raved over a strong Blow Away, the revival of Black-Throated Wind, one of Barlow's finest lyrics, was the hands-down winner for me. The new lyrics were hard to digest in the first listen. As I was so fond of the original, any changes were bound to hold some disappointment, but I did find the replacements interesting. The song was absolutely beautiful, with an ending that was stronger than the versions from 1974. Indeed, the set was full of intense songs: Loser was great, Bird Song amazing, and, yes, Blow Away was hot, with Jerry stopping his guitar to clap a beat for Brent.

Once again, the second set was very well executed — and, once again, it was the pre-drum jam that got my attention. Woman Smarter ended, and after a moment of silence the drum duet apparently started. Instead, the Dead slipped into a nice four-minute calypso improvisation, with a hint of Eyes of The World tacked on the end. The Last Time encore was novel enough to usurp Black-Throated Wind as the song running through my head as we left the arena. I found myself wholly satisfied with three wonderful nights of music, and surprised to discover that the one song I regretted missing was Victim Or The Crime.

The warmest most striking aspect of these shows was the audience. They were wonderfully responsive and supportive, far more so than the normal Hartford/Northeast picky Deadhead crowds that I am used to. In Landover the audience got very excited, even over the ordinary numbers, providing additional fuel for the band. The bummer of the run goes to the "Deadhead" who broke into my friend's car (license plate "TAPES") and ripped off a dozen of my favorite tapes, while forsaking more marketable items. All in all, though, I left the shows very satisfied and curious about what lay ahead.

03-24-90 Knickerbocker Arena — John W. Scott

Driving into Albany on Saturday was like a first date. There were the jitters: finding one's way from the highway, not knowing where to park, wondering how the city would react. Then there was the anticipation of an unsullied arena for the Dead, better yet, one in upstate New York which always seems to brew extra chemistry, the possibility of a new relationship. The jitters were quickly settled. The route from the highway was quickly navigated by following bumper stickers and the trail of tie-dyed ticket seekers. Parking was a breeze; I used the same indoor garage each night, and there were huge open lots on the other side of the arena. As soon as my wife and I got out of the car it was obvious that the relationship with the city was off to a good start. The garage attendant was in a cheery mood and police officers smiled and chatted amiably with anyone who stopped.

We wandered along the sidewalks and small parking lots on the front side of the venue where I was impressed to note that streets had been closed to traffic — a rare show of accommodation, even in a friendly city. The result was one of the most pleasant and interesting pre-concert scenes I have witnessed, a relaxed carnival that surpassed Hartford. There were many vending spots: tents, tables or blankets displaying clothing, jewelry, crystals, the usual assortment of Deadhead food, and lots of beer. When I finally made it out to the giant lot to the left/rear of the arena on the following night I was disappointed: there was lots of random milling with little vending (mainly food and beer), and long lines for balloons — more of a series of closed parties than a marketplace. It did not seem as warm or friendly as the streets on the front side of the arena where most of the best shirt designs were still being hawked. A couple of tie-dyed shirts for our sons later, Terrie and I headed in to check out the Rock-virgin venue.

The novelty of Deadhead crowd control for the venue staff was painfully obvious by the clumsy way they controlled the doors. The procedure was tortuously slow. The masses, on the left side anyway, were informed that no backpacks would be permitted inside unless empty and rolled up. Feeling oh so foolish and pissed-off, Deadhead after Deadhead emptied his or her carefully packed bag and squeezed through the turnstiles with the contents cradled in their arms, only to be quickly crammed back in on the other side — another pointless hoop jumped through, anything for a Dead show.

Inside we discovered a pristine arena, where even the back seats did not seem as distant as at many other East Coast venues. Security was rigorous: checking tickets and clearing the aisles at regular intervals. On this first night one thing they were not prepared for was the volume of smoke. It appeared there was little ventilation to compensate as a thick smog hung heavy in the air, obscuring the far side of the arena. Strict enforcement of the state no-smoking law on the other two nights solved the air quality problem, but alienated much of the audience in the process.

The Grateful Dead christened this wonderful new venue with a monster show. This wasn't Godzilla bringing down the roof in the Hartford Civic Center, rather it was a finely crafted tour de force, a towering djin of irresistible magical powers, a beautiful captivating siren who, on a whim, leads her charges safely through the most intense improvisational waters.

I confess that the novelty of Let The Good Times Roll has worn off for me, and I now find it to be more of a tuning style warmup than a real show opener. It gets my toe tapping, but the beat stops there. Therefore, I was feeling that the first set hadn't really begun yet when suddenly the Dead jumped with both feet into the second set. They had broken precedent with a first-set closing Help> Slipknot> Franklin's last year at the Meadowlands; tonight they were to take that a step further and cast a new tradition, its role as a show opener. The combination was particularly welcome as none of the wonderful revivals from last fall had been played yet on this tour, in spite of many excellent shows, feeding fears that perhaps they were to remain just a happy memory of 1989. The Dead rose to the historical occasion with strong full versions, especially on Slipknot whose rhythmic content was even more interesting than usual. Candace added to Franklin's spell with beautiful orange, pink, purple and green lights — favorite colors on a favorite song.

The rest of the set may look boring on paper, but each song had that magic spark that keeps us coming back night after night to catch just such an occasion. Walking Blues, featuring Jerry on slide and lots of hot licks from Brent was followed by a smoking Loser, an excellent slow Desolation Row with some nice piano(my favorite Bobby/Dylan song, I am glad they brought it back into the normal rotation this year), and the perennial crowd favorite, Tennessee Jed. The set culminated in a rocking Saturday Night, full of Phil; it is easy to see why this version was included on Without A Net.

Playin opened the second set — demonstrating that the Dead are still able to get behind a version of one of their most common elements. While it is difficult to write original thoughts on a song which has been played so well for so long, exhausting my metaphors, this one is worth a listen: beautifully spacey, with Phil pushing it along when necessary. I was genuinely surprised not to see a version of Playin> Uncle John's on the album; the Dead had seemed determined to produce the perfect rendition, over-playing the pair as a result. That was a pity as each provides wonderful possibilities for subtle entrances and exits with all sorts of other songs. However, while I would like to see them split more often, the combination can still bring tears to my eyes. The warm rush from this Uncle John's Band was as satisfying as any I had heard. The glow lasted the length of the song as I smiled and swayed in unison with my wife — a celebration of family. It built to an intense climax and then yielded to...

Terrapin: another cliché when associated with the previous two songs. This version is an apt demonstration of why — the three are kindred spirits, different expressions of the same magic. On this night the combination was magnificent, a singular piece of perfect artistic intent, delivering us breathless onto the Drumz. And while the Terrapin was beautiful, it was the resulting, haunting improvisation that stole the show for me.

The Mind Left Body Jam was absolutely stunning: long (well over seven minutes) and incredibly gorgeous; with my eyes closed it had to be 1973. Brent's piano was painfully exquisite, the crowning effort on this interlude in heaven. Already one of my all-time favorite themes this version wooed me anew, patiently thorough, as surely as were I an unblushed novice. It was, perhaps, the finest example of the pre-drum thematic jams that flourished this year — a tradition certain to make a born-again Deadhead of even the most cynical and hardened expatriate.

The Drumz started with a rainforest Space — complete with what sounded like natural recordings of birds and other jungle sounds, setting the tone for the rest of the Primal Dead excursion. The ensuing Wheel seemed an obvious choice for the night; carried off well, it paled compared with the more energetic numbers still in store. In particular, Watchtower — a godsend among cover tunes — was one of the best that I had heard live, with jams bursting at the seams between each verse. At 7:46 it was also longer than any played last year. After a respectable Stella Blue, the set was closed with a rousing Not Fade Away, complete with Caution-style fan chords. After countless perfunctory renditions, it is reassuring to hear the Dead belt out a version like this one.

I smiled when the band walked out without their instruments for the encore. They stepped to the microphones and sang — Bobby, with his hands in his pockets — a beautiful We Bid You Goodnight. Perfect: anything else would have been overstated and superfluous. Given the margin on 90-minute cassettes, it is possible to squeeze this second set on a 90 tape. But it is well worth the extra dollar to put it on a 100-minute tape, and keep the encore where it belongs. I should also mention that the soundboard I have heard slights Brent in the mix — a loss that is particularly painful during the Mind Left Body Jam.

This night still stands as one of the finest Grateful Dead concerts in a year of exceptional shows, doubly remarkable for one that didn't contain a Dark Star or a guest musician! If you weren't there, get a tape and be there now.

03-29-90 Nassau Coliseum - David I. Greenberg

It had been five years since the Grateful Dead last played the Nassau Coliseum. The March '85 run is, to this day, widely regarded as classic. The return of Mississippi Half-Step and the debut of Tom Thumb's Blues the first night; Truckin> Smokestack Lightning> High Time to open the second show (!) and a hot Terrapin to start the third night's second set. A tough act to follow. But this is the 90's and the floodgates are wide open as it were.

As a former Long Island resident, I felt it was my solemn duty to fly back from the Bay Area to attend the '90 run. I felt a bit of trepidation as previous Nassau shows had become notorious for the harsh treatment of Deadheads by the Nassau County Police. Indeed, Jerry swore he'd never play there again after an inordinate number of arrests at the September '89 Garcia Band gig. But the shows went on. Never did I imagine that they'd actually surpass the '85 series!

The opening show was hot by any standards and included the surprise debut of the Band classic The Weight; High Time, Loose Lucy, and Easy to Love You were dusted off earlier in the spring tour. Night three was also a barnburner, opening with Help> Slip> Franklin's and featuring an amazing set 2 pre-drums: Aiko> Playing in the Band> China Doll> Uncle John's Band> Terrapin. An Attics encore closed the show. But it was the middle night that was completely over the edge — an instant classic.

The show opened with a blistering Jack Straw> Bertha combo, followed by rock-solid versions of We Can Run, Ramble On, and Masterpiece. Then the fun really began. Bobby introduced a special guest, jazz-great Branford Marsalis, and the boys charged into Bird Song. Unbelievable. Branford, alternating between tenor and soprano sax, added textures and counterpoints to the jam that elevated this Bird Song to the level of one of the best in recent years. Upon completing the song, Branford left the stage, leaving the boys to close the first set with an incendiary Promised Land. It never occurred to me that the Bird Song was just a warm-up for what was to come.

The band returned for the second set with Branford, tuned up for a few minutes and opened with Eyes of the World. Sixteen minutes worth! With a slower, more deliberate tempo than usual and extended jams featuring Jerry and Branford trading solos, this rendition felt like it was straight out of 1974. At one point, Jerry began a solo using a MIDI Choral/Flute combo and continued a theme that Branford had been playing with his sax. It sounded like angels were flying into the Nassau Coliseum!

After an extended final Eyes jam, Bobby plunged into Estimated Prophet; a switch on the usual sequence. This version smoked, with Branford again contributing a very confident sax line. Branford's influence on the music was phenomenal; he seemed to have more than a working knowledge of the Dead's music and truly played as if he were a member of the band. And he wasn't afraid to grab the bull by the horns, frequently stepping out and taking charge of the jamming. Phil in particular seemed to be quite effected by Branford. He played a linear, decidedly jazz mode throughout the evening. The Estimated jam proceeded full steam ahead; led first by Branford then by Garcia. After a while, the jam veered to a spacier realm and gradually decomposed into a segue opportunity. But what would they segue to? Terrapin? He's Gone? No, Garcia led the band into the single most appropriate song they could do at this point: DARK STAR!

They jammed intensely for over five minutes before literally coagulating into the first verse. What followed was eleven minutes and nine seconds of the most outside, exploratory music I've ever heard thrust out of the Grateful Dead's PA. The band pursued a multitude of different themes, my favorite of which was a Coltrane-esque segment that my friend Jonas pegged as "something out of a Phillip Marlowe movie." The interplay between the musicians was astounding. They effortlessly switched from one musical mode to another, with various band members leading the way at different junctures in the jam. Garcia and Weir both effectively employed MIDI horn sounds at times, to complement Branford's warm sax tones. After a cumulative total of 18 minutes of Dark Star, they finally found their way into the Drum Duet.

As the Drums and Space progressed, I hoped they would ultimately finish this Dark Star at some point, as I was denied the second verse at the New Year's show. I was not to be disappointed — the boys melted into the "mirror shatters" verse out of space. What a satisfying way to conclude the song!

The rest of the second set contained excellent readings of The Wheel and Throwing Stones and was capped off by an explosive version of Turn on Your Lovelight. Branford's sax solo during this tune was absolutely stupendous! The encore was a lilting Knocking On Heaven's Door.

This was easily one of the best shows I've ever attended. I still get chills up my back when I listen to the tape. Not only did Branford Marsalis add awesome musicianship to the Grateful Dead, fully integrating himself into the band, the boys rose to the occasion!! Even the New York crowd was exceptionally well behaved, focusing intently on the music. All in all, a truly amazing concert and a night to remember for a long time to come.

03-29-90 Nassau Coliseum - John W. Scott

I am always paranoid about missing the big one. When the dates were released I scanned them carefully placing my bets. In the final count I couldn't stand the thought of Nassau Coliseum, and I missed the biggest of the big ones.

From the tapes it is immediately obvious that the band was on this night. Jack Straw and Bertha are filled with fire. But it is, of course, later on that the true possibilities are known. For me, the jazz influences on the Grateful Dead have traditionally led to many of their finest improvisations. Two of my favorite years in Grateful Dead music are '73 and '74, because of the strong Jazz influence. My other interest is tapes with guest musicians performing with the Dead. This night was my wildest dream come true. It took me a long time to come to terms with this tape. Sour grapes stood in the way of true appreciation for a long time.

Eyes of The World is perhaps the most obvious choice among the Grateful Dead's repertoire to play with a Jazz master. The resulting fusion is visionary, rivaling even the wonderful versions of this song from 1974 for top honors. The Without A Net CD would be worth the money even if this were the only cut on it.

The Dark Star is nice. Branford adapts well to the Space.

After the Drumz is stronger than it is generally given credit for.

06-15-90 Shoreline Amphitheatre — Stu Nixon

After some initial rumors that vending would not be permitted at Shoreline this year, the issue was resolved in time to allow the tradition to continue once again. As was the case last year, DeadBase shared a booth with the Psychedelic Shop, and we enjoyed talking with the many people who dropped by to say hello. As a venue, Shoreline is really growing on me. The acoustics are better than the Greek or Frost, and what we've lost in intimacy has been somewhat offset by increased creature comforts (more rest rooms, refreshments, easier access). It's also the most convenient venue for me, now only 15 minutes from my home since moving down the Peninsula from San Francisco two years ago.

The first show opened with the Help On The Way> Slipknot!> Franklin's Tower that we Bay area folks had long been waiting for. Since its return on the East Coast last year, many of us had been wondering if we'd ever hear it here back home. This version was jubilant! I was just amazed at how perfectly it was played. The Minglewood that followed was powerful too, and flawless. Bob even sang "it's T right here at Shoreline." Just A Little Light and Stagger Lee were energetic and well-played, and Desolation Row was also perfect, Bob singing with real feeling and most of all, getting all the words right, and there sure are a lot of them! The second set started off with a similar feeling to the beginning of the first set, with a version of Scarlet/Fire that contained several excellent jams. The rest of the set was hit and miss for me, the "hits" coming in He's Gone, The Other One and Around & Around.

In sharp contrast to the first show, I found the Saturday show at Shoreline to be absolutely amazing, probably my favorite show of the year. The opening combination of Good Times Roll into Truckin' into Touch of Grey was as well played as it was unexpected. Later in the first set was another surprise: Big Boss Man!

The second set also had it's surprises, but not in the song selection but rather in the oddness of the jams. They warmed up by opening the set with China Cat/Rider and We Can Run. Then all hell broke loose! Estimated Prophet was very high energy with typically wild vocals (accentuated by a great echo effect) and explosive playing, with an incredible jam at the end that led into Terrapin Station. Another lengthy jam containing several interesting musical themes followed Terrapin, and then things really got interesting. As the jam was winding down towards the drum solo, Brent and Phil left the stage, but Bob and Jerry stayed on. After several minutes with two guitars and two drums jamming, the drummers left first!

An early "space" jam resulted with some amazing special effects, and then Phil rejoined them after a little while. Then Jerry left and Bob and Phil jammed together for a slightly different flavor of "space." When they left the stage a while later, the stage was empty, but far from silent. Some loud booming sounds were coming from the back of the stage, and suddenly Mickey reappeared for some work on the Beam. After several minutes of weird sounds and special effects, Jerry and Bob returned and Mickey left again. However, the guitars quickly hinted of China Doll and the rest of the band hurried back to start the song. A good version, complete with harpsichord sound, and then whammo — Sugar Magnolia. A little early perhaps if you were expecting more songs in the second half, but by that time this wasn't your standard set format anymore. As usual this was a real dancing closer, everyone in the place up hopping and bopping! The encore was Baby Blue.

07-12-90 R. F. K. Stadium — John Vansant

Prelude: Potent Portent

The four shadow wings beat ominously about the stadium memorial, a great circular band, the Lady of the Ring, poised on the east corner of the Capitol diamond, eyeing the thrust of Father George's great headstone needle at the opposite end of the cross-axis piercing the seat of government. The architectural reveal: Football Über Alles! But! In summer, the concrete Jericho stands sweltering, alone and vulnerable; and the lure of Dead dollars unlocks its fortified gates to the great infidel horde, who claim, for one day each summer, the potential of this power spot on the hexed grid of the City of the Father, and chance to feel and heal the Forces which threaten to tear us from the axis.

Summertime in Washington. Ahh, yes. It is ironic that this should be the home of the Redskins; because no native American would have been fool enough to build a city in this miserable swamp. By the middle of July, like Zimmerman says,"... everyone with any sense had already left town..." (but then again, he showed up here in '86 in 99° sunshine, fully decked out in black leather...). For today, the government forecast warned that violent low-pH thunderstorms would be the finale to a thick, hazy afternoon.

The threat of tempestuous weather told a tale that the Forces would be turbid tonight. It soon became clear that many of the assembled were aware of the gathering portent. Beadily bearded eyes beamed from behind a board bearing this benediction: "6241 DAYS SINCE THE LAST RFK DARK STAR." Another offered the promise of "DARKSTÄRVERGNÜGEN." So the rationalists are turning on... O Hope! O Nope...

Openers: Weather or Naught

Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians opened to a collecting crowd and suspicious skies, but their sound pressure was no match for the dense air amassing in the Kennedy compound. I know not why the decibels were doled out so begrudgingly during this set (or the rest of the show, for that matter), but any opening act for the Dead deserves a gratefully sound opportunity. The absence of volume only complemented my confessed inability to appreciate Edie Brickell's songs and sent me scurrying to the stands for a seat in the shade.

This tactical withdrawal proved fortuitous. As the Bohemians yielded the stage, Mother N stepped out to present the half-time show. Axial forces clashed above the charged sepulchral bowl, releasing from the pregnant air a baptismal rain on the madding crowd, or at least those who weren't covered by the cuspid roof of the stadium. As the downpour began to assume Noah-esque proportions, it became clear that this was no passing squall, and the Headliners took the stage to challenge the elements.

Set One: The Stranger

The Dead warmed up the moistened masses with an under-ampli-fied rendition of Let the Good Times Roll and then turned it up a little as they launched into Stranger, introducing the leitmotif of the first set, the Outsider, the Non-conformist, with his own foreshadowing, "...things are gonna get stranger...." And wetter, too, as it happened. Perhaps Dan Healy was ensuring that no one dry heard the concert, but the sound was really meager in the stands; and it was soon obvious that the real show was happening down on the sodden sod, so I descended back into the fray. On stage, the slack string quality of the opening song had tightened up around a tautly terrific three-minute jam to bring the Stranger to a thundering climax. There was a pause for a smoke and some fiddling around with Finiculi, Funicula, before Jerry wound up a rollicking Bertha.

He struggled with the words until he "... ran into a rainstorm...," which he belted out with gusto, as Phil's thunder rumbled overhead. Bertha remains for me the most inspiring rainstorm song short of hearing I Know You Rider at Rain Rocks in the Forbidden City of Morrison.

Continuing in a stranger vein, the Dead lit up A Little Light. It was visible but inaudible from where I stood, but it sounds pretty good on tape, save for some muddy vocals. Jerry then provided a tasty intro for Queen Jane, which featured, as usual, some fine piano from the late Mr. Mydland and strong singing by the Weir Bob on the tune by the Dylan Bob. Another couple of "rogue" songs followed; first, a punchy Stagger Lee, and then a wild, driving Cassidy, powered by Billy and Mickey's manic drumming on the edge of a magic spiral, faster and faster. The pace eased a bit as Jerry followed with the summertime standard, Tennessee Jed, which was enlivened by an enthusiastic crowd, Garcia's cherry-picking guitar work, and Brent's sprinkling piano rain. Bobby closed the set with the outdoor concert anthem, The Music Never Stopped. And neither did the rain. Each new wave of precipitation precipitated a new burst of energy from the crowd, dancing crazily, ankle deep in turf puree. The Dead matched the intensity of the environment with a cascading jam which brought the Act to a close. Aside from the minimal measure of volume, the first set was a perfect accompaniment to a phenomenal meteorological event.

Set Two: The Phases of Phil

Night fell transitively on the saturated throng, which continued to suck up rain like a sponge throughout the extended break. The Main Act opened with the phased face of Phil flashing afore the phrenetic fans, proffering an elegant, vintage Box of Rain, from which we drank thirstily. Bobby then shifted gears, veering vehemently into the vexing vortices of Victim. The searing, twisted chords were accompanied by Diamond-visions of violence and repression, a curious set of images to serve up to a sea of neurons in a feeding frenzy. I thought that a more appropriate film subject would have been Mayor Marion Barry, a man who, at the time of the show, was strapped to the horns of the dilemma like no one in recent memory. Again, the mood shifted, and, easing into Foolish Heart, Jerry played a delicate and extended overture above Phil's ventricular bass line. The vocals were somewhat strained, but the two instrumental jams were explosive. The first jam built up a rapid pulse, with Phil applying low-frequency electroshock to the aortic rhythm as Jerry titillated the capillaries, reaching a cardiac climax that, for me, was the highlight of the show. The second jam soared briefly and then eased jazzily down from the peaks- transitive notes fell through searchlights casting about the diamond-eyed multitude. Asking, "Shall we go?," the band indulged the sodden faithful in a delightfully long, meandering introduction to the Dark Star — a liminal zone through which the remaining crowd gleefully passed — and the concert entered a new dimension. Get a tape and listen to the many moods of this Dark Star; don't waste your time reading about it.

From the depths of interstellar space emerged the Rhythm Devils. If ever a crowd needed an entertaining percussion performance, this was it and that it was, penetrating a number of deep, sub-aqueous passages as Drumz transmogrified into Space. The Space plumbed the far depths of the planet, leading the moist masses on an angst-filled aural adventure, culminating with some screeching feedback, out of which the Watchtower literally exploded. After a brief, blazing lead-in, Bobby launched powerfully into the first verse and the train was steamin'! Driven madly by the rolling thunder of the rhythm section (which was stellar all night long), Jerry seemed on the verge of spontaneous combustion as he wailed through the first two solos at nearly the speed of light. No reason to get excited??!! The third solo featured some great chops by the Bobby as well as some inspired Santana-like licks by Garcia. (For more on that, see (hear) the show from Calaveras Co., Ca., 8/23/87, with Carlos on Aiko/Watchtower.) This last jam segued easily into Fantasyland, the last journey to that realm for many of us east-coasters. Brent was into it, too, belting out the plaintive lyrics with a raspy resonance. The inspired play of the rhythm section highlighted the first two instrumental breaks; and after the last verse, Jerry steered the band east across the ocean for a Hey Jude refrain. Brent managed to weave Mr. Fantasy back into the vocal fabric while Phil, Jer, and Bob were still singing with the walrus — and it worked. Jerry responded with a blistering solo that brought us all back to Fantasyland. Without missing a beat, Jerry leapt from the Fantasy jam to Touch of Grey, a brilliant choice which lit up the throng like a bolt of lightning. The song was occasion for the unfurling of a huge (40'?) skeletal puppet, which danced on stage for the duration.

Encore: Take a Load Off

As icing on the cake, the "old kids on the block" treated us to The Weight, one of the great cover tunes of all time. The stanza that Brent sang so beautifully turned out to be grimly fateful in retrospect, but the joyous audience was blissfully ignorant of the wind yet to be harvested, and joined enthusiastically in the sing-a-long. Thus was the promise of the opening song fulfilled, for the good times rolled and soothed our souls. Good advice: if you were there and couldn't hear the show, get a good tape and play it loud; if you weren't there, get a good tape and play it in the shower.

09-14-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

Historically, Madison Square Garden has provided me with some of the more special moments in my Deadhead career. A large populist arena nestled in the heart of Manhattan, the Garden handles Deadhead crowds in a thoroughly professional and unruffled manner. The surrounding city offers a myriad of cultural and culinary distractions before and after the show, effectively diffusing much of the twenty-four hour carnival that alienates many cities. In these days of hostile venues, this one has earned a special place in my heart as my favorite arena in the Northeast. The twin stand in September of 1990 reinforced these sentiments far more than I could have imagined.

My arrival in New York on this particular evening was a little more nerve-racking than most. While this expatriate's pulse quickens whenever he returns to The City, and a fresh run of Dead shows always releases that little extra adrenaline of anticipation, this night was fraught with a special tension: I was to meet Mike Dolgushkin, close friend and DeadBase co-conspirator, in person for the first time. So, upon climbing out of the car, it was strangely comforting to be greeted by an old friend: the mammoth inflatable King Kong from the '88 run, back atop his perch on the Garden's marquee with his tie-dyed shirt flapping in the breeze. A quick look around yielded little hope in terms of vending — a mixed blessing — so I headed in to find my cohort. Armed with a seating chart, and having seen photographs, I spotted Mike as I made my way down to our seats on the floor, next to the soundboard. Perhaps because I am so used to running into old lost friends at Dead shows, it was more reunion than introduction. By the time I settled into my seat, all trepidation had vanished — I was home again.

One of the musical highlights of this run was rumored to be a guest appearance by Branford Marsalis. Stories had swarmed for months; I was thrilled by the possibility of being treated to the phenomenal fusion that I had missed at Nassau. I learned that the rumor was not totally unfounded: equipment had been set up on stage for him, at least for this first show. But, Branford was for the moment a question mark, and this was the night that Vince Welnick was to be under the microscope. Bruce Hornsby was scheduled to join the ensemble tomorrow for the rest of the stand, so this was my only opportunity to really see what the permanent member was all about.

From our seats the sound was very good and we could hear Vince well in the mix, which apparently was not the case in other spots. Yet, the right side of the stage was bare with only a single keyboard in the place of Brunt's additional organ and other equipment — a melancholy emptiness that kept on bubbling up in my visual consciousness throughout the evening. Vince's sound however, while obviously lacking Brunt's seasoned qualities, showed plenty of raw promise for the days when he is more comfortable with the Dead's large repertoire.

The show opened with Feel Like A Stranger — appropriate enough for the beginning of the Garden run. One of the longer versions of the year, this hardly sounded like the work of a recently reconstituted band. The entire first set was surprisingly strong. Ramble On Rose, for example, was the sing-along hit of the evening; you could feel Jerry drawing off the audience's enthusiasm. Though at times choppy, playing repetitive cookie-cutter chords, Vince was already more comfortable than I had expected. Time and time again, I would notice places where he was more aggressive, broad flashes of promise for the future.

One of my happiest "ruts" for 1990 was to have heard the first three revived versions of B.T.Wind. I found it curious that the Dead had ignored it since Albany, and felt privileged to earn a hat trick on such a wonderful song. On this night Bobby took it another step back towards 1974, reviving the original lyrics. Call me conservative, but I was partial to the original words, and Bobby apparently has decided that he is more comfortable with them also — he sang it that way for the rest of 1990.

Cassidy was the remaining strong-point of the set; one of those versions where they squeeze seven minutes of jamming into a six-minute song. It also provided our first opportunity to audition Vince's voice: more promise in an area in which the Dead can certainly use some help. Then, during Don't Ease, his one full solo of the set — although a bit rusty — was very well received. The crowd was clearly pleased by Mr. Welnick's performance, enough so that the chant that erupted to open the second set was "We want Vince."

The Yang to my Black-Throated Yin was also answered on this night: by some cruel twist of fate I had been denied every Scarlet> Fire for over three years, my last being 4-2-87, Worcester. This unfortunate celibacy was broken by one of the best versions of the year, no facile feat in the year of the long-jammed Fire On The Mountain. Indeed, it was Fire that I had missed each time, and it was Fire that shone on this night — easily the highlight of the evening. This was one of the places where I noticed Vince's contributions frequently, but it was Jerry's towering solos that turned the song into a show stopper.

After a minute's respite, the Dead jumped into Truckin. The second New York City song of the night (no big surprise as the runner-up in the sing-along contest) was no slouch version, with Phil joining in enthusiastically on the vocals, but it was still overshadowed by the even more impressive surrounding music. For this was also the year of the killer Terrapins: nearly half were either phenomenally long, or else inspired some of the best thematic improvisations of the year. On this night it fit in the former category, spanning just over twenty minutes. Much of that length should be credited to the impressive trailing improvisation, barely lacking the independent thematic quality that would have distinguished it as "Jam" in DeadBase. Technicalities aside, the closing themes were beautiful — the perfect counterpoint to the scorching jams of Fire.

The bulk of the Drumz (lit with a pretty variety of rainbow lights that I had not seen before) were nice and low key — providing an opportunity to collect one's self. They also provided a peaceful platform to build on for maximum effect when linked with one of their explosive songs, say... The Other One. The Dead seized the opportunity: the introduction was well crafted — long and full, with Phil doing his bit towards the end. The Other One itself proved long — partially dissolving between verses before Phil refocused the band. Even Healy put in his two cents: distorting lyrics to both verses, just enough to excite the crowd without rendering all the words unintelligible. The set was closed with a rocking Sugar Magnolia, one of the hottest versions I have heard live in a while. I was, therefore, neither surprised, nor disappointed when the band didn't have as much left for U.S. Blues — it had been a full evening for everyone, and this was after all, just the beginning.

After the show was over, and following a plate of chic organic food (apparently no longer an oxymoron), hours after mortal cities have closed for the evening, I found myself drinking estate bottled beer from Belgium — a label once favored by Napoleon — in a deceptively small and shabby gourmet beer parlor, still intoxicated from the evening's music. Only in New York.

09-15-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

Once again, Mike and I met at our seats. This time we were sitting up on the side, close enough to have a decent view, and far enough back to enjoy good sound. The seats were, however, directly below one of the gates. Don't bother trying it out for yourselves; sitting (or even standing) under one of those railed entrances, particularly at shows where beer is being sold, is not an experience to be savored. The only bright side of the constant sprinklings of beer and cola was that they stopped the accompanying showers of cigarette sparks from igniting anything valuable.

This was the night that I forgot about Branford and learned an important lesson in prejudice. I confess that rather than being excited about the addition of Bruce Hornsby, I was mildly concerned. Not only did things seem complicated enough breaking in Vince, but I harbored some xenophobic fear that Bruce might infect the band with some dreaded Top-40 virus. My focus was split between hoping to see Branford and that Bruce wouldn't get in the way of the improvisation. Later that night, when the smoke had cleared, I felt ashamed as well as exhilarated by one of the finest nights of Grateful Dead magic I had ever experienced. For the next five nights Bruce lit up the stage, enticing the band to new heights of improvisation and filling out the Grateful Dead's sound in a manner not heard since 1972 when Keith and Pigpen shared the stage.

Even before the band took the stage, Bruce's presence was inescapable: the void on the right side of the stage where Brunt's keyboards had been was finally filled. Indeed, the grand piano took other extreme, as though someone had parked a Cadillac there, eclipsing half the stage. The acoustic quality of the sound from the behemoth was equally inescapable; in these digitized days, it is refreshing to come across such a strong example of the virtues of analog. It was to become the keystone for the beautiful full sound of the remaining shows. Complimented by Vince's digitized keyboards, we were treated to the best of both worlds. Bruce, a reported fifteen-year Deadhead, had one further contribution: a strong working knowledge of the material, a useful asset during Vince's initiation.

It was interesting watching the relationships develop on stage. Most of it happened pretty quickly, perhaps catching many of us unaware. In retrospect, the first set started normally enough: the openers were hot, to be sure, but well within normal Grateful Dead bounds. Candyman was also very good, with Vince's harmonies reminiscent of Donna, to a pretty and nostalgic effect. But, half way through the first set it was clear that Jerry's interest had been piqued, and by the end it must have been obvious even to the neophyte that something special was going on. For me, one of the first realizations came during West L.A. Fadeaway. It was a nice microcosm of the set, building on the strength of one musician, in this case Phil — perhaps spurred by the chants of "We want Phil" before the song — and grew musician by musician to an incredibly rich version, the likes of which I had not previously heard. West L.A. was also the first song where I kept on being drawn to what Bruce was doing on piano; the preconceptions were already melting.

By Bird Song the cat was out of the bag: it was absolutely wonderful, easily the best version of the year... well, maybe excepting the two the Dead played with what's-his-name. A song that is often Jerry's domain, this version had no master — beholden to a fusion of superb performances from all the band members. There is so much going on in this song: Phil was stellar — including a hefty bass solo, Bruce's piano was delicate, Jerry's guitar passionate — all fit together with precision. After a dozen listens, I still have not sorted it out — this version will remain fresh for many more.

The "We want Phil" crowd was dumbstruck after Bird Song, failing to pick up their persistent chant. Their wishes were respected anyway: the set closed with a beautiful Box Of Rain. Bruce's piano gave the song an acoustic quality, a pleasant step back towards the American Beauty version. Then I was glad for the set break, it allowed me to confirm that my impressions were not just the result of wishful delirium from some exotic New York fever. And the rest was yet to come...

My live introduction to The Weight was everything I had hoped. This was perhaps the finest of the Dead's everyone-sing-a-verse songs, and Bruce fit in very nicely. The harmonies were not perfect, but the heart was, and that is what makes this song work. The arrangement was pretty, providing opportunities for features rather than solos — making it more a group effort, and setting the stage nicely for the rest of the pre-drum fare.

Playin> Crazy Fingers> Uncle John's seems such a natural progression that I was surprised to discover that this was only the sixth time it had been played. Even more curious was the last time it was played: two shows ago in Philadelphia. For some reason, twice before the Dead have picked up this combo, played it a couple of times in close proximity, and then forgotten about it — it must be some sort of cyclical thing. In any case, I was glad to catch one of the cycles. It proved to be a natural progression — not in terms of finely woven transitions, but of like-minded songs following at exactly the right moment: a chain of complementary emotions.

Playin was somewhat short but intense, with a wonderful layered effect as it skated its way over miles of improvisation. I was impressed to notice that Vince was a major contributor here. His dreamy-jammed style smacked of 1972 and was absolutely perfect for the song. Bruce's piano completed the illusion, a freshly polished jewel for the new Europe tour. It is little surprise then that the Dead played this song at three of the last five shows at the Garden, making it a theme of sorts.

Crazy Fingers drew us from the determined jams of Playin to the sweet and contemplative — an easy, crystalline version. Bruce's airy piano was gorgeous, once again filling out an impressive group effort that seemed more at home in years gone by.

Uncle John's was fun, an extroverted feel-good release after the introspective Crazy Fingers. My only complaint was that, as with Masterpiece, it was difficult to pick out Bruce Hornsby's accordion in the mix. Although I had been looking forward to hearing piano on this song, I suppose that the warm folksy feel of San Francisco's adopted instrument would also be well suited. As this song, like The Weight, depends more on heart than anything else, the flaw in volume was far from fatal. Jerry built a nice crescendo before the final chorus and everybody was happy.

The percussion was louder and more aggressive than on the previous night, with lots of pounding and some nice long notes on the beam. Vince was the only one who did not participate in the long Space that followed, but he was a solid contributor for the rest of the set. Perhaps the post-Drumz agenda had been planned with the new musicians in mind, centering around three well-known cover songs. In any case, while the Dead's own material was good, the standards excelled — the common ground proved the rocking peaks of the night, each a bit higher than the previous.

Gimme Some Lovin' was first out of the gate, with an enthusiastic Phil leading the march. The Dead had shifted gears from the artistic improvisations before the Drumz to good old Rock & Roll, and they were determined to see how far they could take it. Watchtower has long been a favorite of mine; one long guitar solo, punctuated with words. The jammed nature of the song is even more striking with special guests because of its classic status: it is one of those songs that beckons musicians to tinker and invent; everyone seems to have an interpretation. In this case, however, you have to listen carefully to catch Bruce's beautiful piano around the edges as Jerry can't seem to help himself from jumping right into searing lead after searing lead.

The band seemed ill prepared for the mood change of Stella Blue, taking a moment to settle. It was a sweet, understated version, though without much of a climax for contrast. Likewise, Throwing Stones had strong moments but was slow to start — never seeming to find that special spark by which the rest of the second set had transcended normal Grateful Dead parameters.

The Dead saved the best of the cover songs for last: a blistering Not Fade Away. This song was born for versions like this, with everyone giving more than they knew they had left, trading leads back and forth in a miraculous tangle of Rock & Roll. They recaptured much of that energy during the Saturday Night encore. It was one last entry in a tour de force through classic Rock, one of the best compilations of the genre I have heard the Grateful Dead play. It was then breathtaking to remember that this was only one aspect of a long set; what had transpired before the Drumz was equally impressive.

Back in our new favorite gourmet beer parlor, our tables buzzed with the evening's events — keeping us and our friendly barkeep up well beyond our bedtimes. While some of my friends had been quite optimistic about Bruce Hornsby's prospects, none of us had imagined that it would turn out like this. Only one thing troubled us: although it seemed there was nothing they could not handle in this new configuration, it was hard to imagine how the Dead could possibly match tonight's performance, and they had four more to give. Naiveté.

09-16-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

As I started this review I discovered a strange sense of dread. After two long pieces on the previous shows I was drained and lacked the energy to even listen to this first set some half-dozen times. The second set I was excited about, there was plenty to say about that, but the thought of a first set left me a bit cold. So, I took a deep breath as I popped the set into my car deck this afternoon — time to work. Almost immediately I found the hairs raising on my neck, a smile breaking on my lips. It had been five months since the shows, but the veil was beginning to fall. During Cold Rain, I shivered and was lost in a rush of warm memories from that night. If there is one lesson from this sextet of shows, it is that each and every set is an absolute must-have, and that even the first sets deserve frequent play.

This night we had good seats (third row, in front of the keyboards) — fortunate, as it was a night with plenty to see. While things worked well onstage last night, tonight the relationships were forged. Perhaps confident in their experience, the band came to play and explore rather than work. Jerry had a wonderful time; he kept turning to Bruce Hornsby with a huge smile, exchanging licks with him at every opportunity. I have never seem him relate so closely and enthusiastically with another musician. Bruce was refreshingly gregarious on stage, even with the audience — finding time to acknowledge individual cheers with a friendly point and smile. He was also exceptionally considerate of the other musicians, never stepping on anyone's toes, and taking it upon himself to make sure that Vince got solos.

The list for the first set was normal, even mundane, but the execution was phenomenal. Once again all the songs were group efforts, gaining their strength from everybody on stage. There was, however, an important distinction: Bruce Hornsby was much more confident and aggressive on this night, taking full advantage of the frequent leads that Jerry handed him. His piano transformed almost every song into a set-maker. Check out Cold Rain, or Rooster, then Stagger Lee and Queen Jane — one might as well recite the litany of the set list.

Nothing in the first set was ordinary. Bobby forgot a verse of Bucket (a relatively rare event this year) to the audience's great amusement, and then rallied the song to a strong finish. Bruce was particularly thoughtful as his fingers tapped out soulful lines during a stunning Cold Rain, and Rooster was a good indication of how the relationships onstage had matured overnight. Last night Walking Blues was very good, but this was a different experience: the Dead doing Blues as they had done Rock the night before. Jerry and Bobby were both armed with slides, Vince scored a nice organ lead with Jerry beaming his approval, and then there was Bruce.

It was the same with each song, possessing a life that even surpassed last night's exceptional performances. Tennessee Jed was king of the traded leads, with Jerry and Bruce going back and forth forever. Cassidy (a surprise repeat from Friday) was another example of how far the Dead had come in just two shows: with some extra effort from Phil it easily surpassed that excellent version. The set closed with a fiery Deal — this one was all Jerry, rivalling even his better Garcia Band performances.

The second set explored new forms of improvisation. Last night it was structured jams (Playin In The Band, Crazy Fingers) and solos (Watchtower, Not Fade Away); tonight the focus was to be on the less organized: the free-form jam (after He's Gone) and lots of Space. There was one common denominator throughout the second set: Phil Lesh. From our seats his bass was amazingly powerful, filling my body without hurting my ears.

It is ironic that improvisation played such an important role, as the set began with three discrete songs. These were certainly not to be discounted. Samson was its Gospel best. Iko Iko (now here is a song that really needs an accordion) saw Bruce climbing back with his alter-instrument to jam with Vince; the two seemed to be on the best of terms. This good-old-fun version rates a very respectable second-best for the year, behind the one the Dead played with Michael Doucet in Oakland. Bobby sang a very pretty Looks Like Rain with Phil thundering out the end — the bass loses some of the power on tape, but was quite unforgettable live.

For most of the audience this was the first He's Gone since Brent died. The Dead certainly had this in mind as they developed one of the most poignant versions I have heard them play in recent years. The vocals, even the harmonies, were heartfelt and strong, with everyone joining in on the chorus. Jerry summed it up for many of us, placing extra emphasis: "Nothing left to do, but smile, smile, smile." Phil added a physical dimension to the emotional pang, his bass tugging at the pit of my stomach — cause or symptom?

The drummers left after He's Gone, leaving Phil onstage with Bruce and Vince — the raw improvisation that resulted stands unique, even in a year of exceptional jams. Phil started a bass solo, while Bruce and Vince played diverse lines around it. The various instruments would pick up different themes, pass them on, then drift off on a different tangent, moving in and out of phase with each other in a very rich unstructured work. At times Bruce sounded like Keith Emmerson on an Aaron Copland binge. Absolutely wonderful — I cannot think of a previous instance of this sort of American Classical piano influence used in a Grateful Dead jam.

The Drumz started nice and simply with percussion. Mickey moved over to the beam after a few minutes, tipping the scales to a beautiful, even Space. Bob and the keyboards were the first ones back — it was soon clear that Vince and Bruce were very happy with the improvisation with Phil and were anxious for more exploration. I was struck by how comfortable they were in what must have been a relatively foreign medium. Vince, who had seemed indifferent to some of the Dead's material, was very expressive, having found an important niche for himself. Bruce Hornsby looked particularly serious, carefully weighing each move. With five instruments and two percussionists this was an exceptionally rich Space, with everyone taking great care and allowing enough room for the other musicians.

Standing on the Moon — very effective out of Space — continued the reflective mood set by Looks Like Rain and He's Gone. In addition to Jerry's moving vocals, I kept noticing the beautiful piano: filling a void in the song that I didn't know existed. Obviously having enjoyed the previous two bouts with free-form improvisation, the Dead slipped back into Space. It was the natural and perfect resolution; I was more impressed than surprised.

An energetic Miracle proved to be the only Weir song in the second set since early on. Once again Vince's vocals reminded me more of Donna than Brent, but without her sometimes shrill manner. His aggressive organ was another plus on this song. The final selection of the second set was inspired — Jerry instantly returned us to a reflective mood with Morning Dew. It is curious that the Dead ignored this song in Europe — perhaps they were satisfied, or even intimidated, by this well-considered version. The touch, the phrasing was exquisite. Again, Phil's bass swallowed me whole. This wasn't a flashy version: I have heard others that got louder, but few that were more powerful — confident and full as it reached its peak. Unfortunately, even 100-minute tapes cut during this song; I recommend squeezing Samson and Iko Iko on the end of the first set tape.

The encore was Baby Blue, absolutely the perfect choice as it completed Jerry's run for the evening. I cannot think of a recent show with three such powerful Garcia songs after the Drumz — each speaking to He's Gone, completing the emotion. It seemed as though much that had been suppressed in the past few hectic weeks was finally laid to rest at this show. Now that new musicians had gotten the feel and fresh magic had been cast, it was time for the goodbyes and to look on to the future.

This night a car-load of us were due back in New Hampshire and Vermont for a variety of familial and professional duties. Contented with a third full show, we only stopped briefly to load up once again on New York pizza. The sights and smells of the city, even our unforgettable repast in Cantonese heaven under the guidance of the Doctor of Dim Sum seemed less real with each passing mile, but the music stayed with me. Driving through the rain, the haunting bass played a continuous jam in my head. Finally, arriving just as my wife was ready to head to work, I was surprised to discover the early morning chill. Late Summer had suddenly become Fall. I was thankful to have heard enough to keep me warm through the cold New England winter months ahead, and eternally grateful that three more concerts lay just ahead.

09-18-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

The weather was distinctly chillier than on Friday — Fall seemed determined to beat the autumnal equinox. We arrived to a somewhat unpleasant sight: the powers that be had introduced a new form of crowd control — the wrap the line around the block and squeeze everyone through a single entrance method. Confuse and annoy your opponent, it works every time. Even at Madison Square Garden, the most impervious of sites, teeming Deadheads were becoming a problem. At least New York was handling the situation with its normal aplomb; this inconvenience was still a far cry from the aggressive search and destroy approach used by security and police at many venues. Further in, the opposite approach was taken at the gate — in addition to the traditional ticket, several of the folk at the doors were taking hard cash. A lowly $20 bill seemed to be enough to sway some of the gatekeepers. The results had become more apparent each night as fewer of even the worst seats are left untaken, and still more of the aisle space is disappearing.

Tonight was a rather special first for me: front row seats. They were absolutely wonderful — once again we were on the keyboard side, where most of the action seemed to be. While the rows were closely packed, there was ample room between the seats and the barrier for dancing. The barrier itself appeared brand new and was both very solid and clean, providing welcome support as the evening wore on. While crowd-control failed in front of the center seats, the security managed to keep the wing sections free of interlopers. I am too old to play the sardine game for any length of time, so it was a rare treat to enjoy this space so close to the stage. So close, in fact, that I was amazed that the gentleman in the seat next to me had not only brought binoculars, but used them frequently throughout the show — I hope Jerry's fingernails were clean.

The second series started on Tuesday night with what some considered to be one of the weaker shows at the Garden, but which still stands out as one of the better shows in an already exceptional year. The relationship between Garcia and Hornsby continued to grow — I have never seen Jerry having so much fun night after night, and the infectious excitement fired the whole band. As they walked on stage the band looked confident, eager and well prepared. Bobby had changed from shorts on the first three nights to long pants for last three, apparently he had also noticed the slightly premature change in seasons.

Even after a night off, everyone was on from the start, as was obvious from the first set. It was exceptionally long, spanning almost an hour and twenty minutes, one of the longest of the year. The opening Half Step was outstanding, with Phil singing enthusiastically and Bruce Hornsby adding a nice honky-tonk sound. Minglewood, the first of three repeats from the opening night, completely eclipsed the previous version thanks to Phil, Bob, Bruce... well, everyone gave new life to an often tired song.

As with all the first sets on this stand, it would be just as easy to read the set list as enumerate the exceptional performances. Even Picasso Moon, not my favorite Dead song, rocked harder than ever. Jerry brought out a beautiful version of the seldom-played To Lay Me Down (Phil joined in on the vocals again — I have never heard him sing so much as at these shows). Jerry belted out a heartfelt ending that I will not soon forget. Bruce Hornsby was so roused by the end of the set that he ended Promised Land playing the piano with his foot.

The second set contained only six songs, perhaps a source of discontent for some, but the versions were long and exceptional. In fact, they were lengthy enough to give this show the longest average song time of any show this year. The opening Eyes (a 1990 tradition of sorts) was gorgeous; the full sound of the two keyboards playing off each other was enchanting. At over seventeen minutes, it was this year's longest, and more than twice as long as many from last year. A friend commented that if Branford had played on it, this would have easily been the best version of the year. This Eyes of the World needs neither apologies nor excuses. With Bruce Hornsby's fresh perspective it captures the same explorative energy as its more notorious counterparts with one of Jazz's rising greats, and deserves the same sort of consideration.

The ensuing Estimated provided one of many examples of Vince's promise: he had the song pegged on each chord and note, as if he had been playing it for years. About halfway through the song Vince changed his keyboard to a funky saxophone voice, reminiscent of the old Traffic sound — an unexpectedly powerful twist for this often-played song.

After Foolish Heart a dazzling jam between Garcia and the keyboards filled out the first side of a 100-minute cassette. It turned out to be largely a game of tag between Jerry and Bruce, a culmination of the bond that had been growing between the two. Building on a central theme, the communication and response between musicians was phenomenal — very different from the loosely structured improvisation at the previous show. At times they would reach wonderful diverted conclusions, then tumble back to the grounded theme to find something else new to explore.

Following an adequate percussion and Space we were treated to a roaring Other One, complete with Phil's introduction and a hot-and-heavy between-verse jam. Afterwards, the Dead stopped the song on a dime, paused for a couple of seconds, and then rolled into The Wheel, exhibiting the control and grace of a world-class gymnast. The Wheel proved both soothing and satisfying without the depressing aspects of the songs that often occupy this position. The set concluded with a hot Sugar Magnolia, Bruce having a wonderful time, tearing into the song as if he had all his energy left.

The Heaven's Door encore was introduced with perfect "Oooh" harmonies from Bobby, Jerry and Phil — a beautiful end to an underrated show.

09-19-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

The New York taxi cab is one of the most important icons of this fun city, a fact that did not escape the designer of this year's official MSG t-shirt. We were treated to a variety of fascinating drivers during the course of these six concerts. I was impressed at how intelligently opinionated they tended to be. The topic of choice was Saddam Hussein, but a variety of others turned up, all well thought out. This night we were able to help our driver out with a problem. Turning around to talk earnestly to us while driving — one of those unnerving New York talents — he asked us why all the Deadheads walked around aimlessly with one finger held high. He explained with some exasperation that he kept stopping for them, but not one got into his cab. He took the ticket-search explanation with a grain of salt and dropped us two blocks from the Garden to avoid the morass of traffic that had grown with each show. With a smile and a wave he turned left, downtown, to saner parts of the city.

Wednesday night was the best overall show of the run, with much of its strength lying in its energy and consistency. My friend had come up with tenth row center seats: perfect for dancing off the afternoon's wandering feast at the San Gennaro's Festival in Little Italy while still seeing every little nuance on stage. There was plenty to see — from the opening Jack Straw to the closing Mighty Quinn the whole concert crackled with the intense interpersonal energy that had been building throughout the stand at the Garden.

The first set was easily the best from either series. After a hot Jack Straw, filled with lightning leads from Jerry, we were hit with a Bertha so tight — every note and chord perfectly placed — that it prompted me to scribble, "Tonight is THE night" in my notes. Nothing in the middle of the set dissuaded me from that opinion, not the cowboy medley, not even It Must Have Been the Roses. Me & My Uncle rocked (as has often been the case throughout the years), but Big River was amazing — Jerry, Bruce and Vince traded so many leads that it is easy to see why this was the longest version of the year. As was true throughout the stand, even the maligned standards were getting something extra. Score one for Cowboy Bob.

Many (if not most) Deadheads have pet peeves, songs that they would just as soon avoid. Often these are cornerstones of the Dead's repertoire, favorites to any reasonable ear, but which leave a handful of grumpy heads cold. For me Roses is such a song — the slow pace and one of Hunter's more depressing lyrics tend to dampen a first set. On this night, however, Roses was the acid test that proved the set. Exceptional harmonies and background piano produced one of the prettiest versions that I have heard, smoothing over the gloomy words and resulting in an attractive asset rather than the wet blanket I have come to fear. Memphis Blues, a personal favorite among GD-covered lyrics, provided yet another of many examples of Bruce's comaraderie and consideration when he stepped back behind Vince with his accordion — no easy feat among the cables and other obstacles — so that Vince could take his solo in the clear.

If I needed any further persuasion that this was, indeed, THE night, it was provided at the end of the set: Help> Slipknot> Franklin's, at 24:36, was the longest of the year by nearly three and a half minutes. The trio was so obvious from the tuning that I was puzzled why we were the only ones jumping up and down like idiots. Finally, with the first notes, the house erupted. While Help On The Way was uneven at first — Jerry's vocals and guitar were tentative to start — the song soon rose to exceptional form. The resulting Slipknot was easily the most exciting that I have experienced; drawing energy from Bruce Hornsby's fresh perspective on piano, the jams were extended and thoroughly explored. Jerry and Bruce wandered wild as they were wont to do during this stand — a particularly impressive feat on such a complex song. The result was absolutely phenomenal, and has to be heard to be believed. The culmination of the triumvirate, Franklin's Tower, was another one for the record books: at over 13:39 it was by far the longest of the year, and almost four minutes longer than 1989's maximal version. It was, of course, fantastic — its bouncy best, thanks once again to the humble but nimble fingers of the pianist (that not-so-elusive Hornsby quotient), leaving me fully sated for the break.

Sometimes, after a particularly hot first set, the band has trouble reconjuring the magic in the second. This was certainly not the case on this night. The opening Playin' In The Band was beautiful, a nice full bassy version spanning wonderful open jams. To close the song, the Dead whipped up a quick whirlwind of Space very early in the set, resulting in... Ship Of Fools? I confess that, like It Must Have Been The Roses, I find that Ship can undermine a set even though the lyrics are excellent and often seem timely. Because Ship is a slow song and is usually played discontiguously from the surrounding material, the rest of the set often has to start cold, without the benefit of the previous momentum. By imbedding this song inside Playin In The Band the Dead solved the problem of inertia. The transitions out of and back into Playin were flawless; all the precious energy was sustained in a beautiful seamless jam. Like its first-set Roses counterpart, Ship was the acid test, proving this wonderful energetic set puncture proof, or perhaps Fools proof.

The closing Playin jam was pretty and spacey (with the full Playing Reprise notably absent) — the perfect bridge to Uncle John's Band. Jerry's first repeat of the Garden stand was a warm steady version, with a nice bassy bounce. It served as a joyful diversion before the Dead got down to more serious business.

Cantering along on Uncle John's Band the band gently squeezed this responsive steed with their heels and the gate extended to a full gallop and the beginning of Let It Grow: a magnificent smooth transition. Listening to the tape, I still get chills of anticipation when I hear the MIDI flute that precedes this golden moment. It was a masterful call by Bob Weir — why Let It Grow hasn't made it into the second set more often escapes me. This marathon version was breathtaking, with everyone playing as if possessed. Phil was particularly prominent, thumping out his lines with gusto. The drummers attacked and nailed each and every beat, and Jerry tore into his solos with an intensely focused expression on his face. Bob's vocals and guitar were gifted; he was clearly enjoying one of his finest moments of the stand. The keyboardists rounded out the sound in the wonderful complimentary manner that had become a trademark of the run. The result was one of the most inspired treatments of Let It Grow in a decade.

The masterpiece was capped by an awesome jam featuring Bob, Bruce and Jerry. From the closing strains of Let It Grow, the music tumbled into an open and spacey improvisation — fun but unfocused, it seemed destined for the drums as no one could find a thread strong enough to follow. But, just in time, Bobby founded a framework which Bruce, then Jerry eagerly built on. The base allowed the trio to build an intense meandering jam, each taking turns changing the direction. Once again, it showcased Bruce Hornsby at his best, demonstrating a skillful combination of creativity and cooperation. The improvisation closed with a compound of elements from the previous two nights' pre-drum jams: an American composer's game of tag. A word of warning: the music runs very long, and it is well worth using a 110-minute cassette to keep it intact.

The percussion and Space segments were nice and meditative. While I already welcomed the opprtunity to relax and breathe deep, I had little idea of how felicitous this quiet, cleansing time would prove...

The sparks continued to fly after the drums — each song a reference-standard of how far it can still be taken. The Goin' Down The Road Feelin' Bad came roaring out of the Space like a runaway locomotive in the night with its MIDI horn blaring; fast and furious, it had me dancing harder than any other song of the stand. An intense group effort built the song higher and higher long after it seemed the best had already been given. Then Jerry landed on top of each and every vocal of a crystal-perfect Stella Blue. This song was entrancing — soft and gentle, it was punctuated by piano as Bruce sat back waiting for each perfect moment to place a tasteful phrase. Around, so often perfunctory, was fantastic — an extra long version, complete with a funky blues break dropped in at the end. Each of these three songs stands out as the best version I have heard live; combined, they were a phenomenal post-drum segment that belies the modest set list.

To wrap it all up, the Dead reconverted me to an encore that had worn thin. Hornsby's piano drove The Mighty Quinn into a wonderful, rousing experience, leaving everyone upbeat and happy as they exited into the cool misty rain. A lone vertical tower to the East was floodlit near its top providing a rare nighttime rainbow. "Franklin's Tower," a passerby commented as I pointed it out.

There are several benchmarks by which to measure this show. Over one-third of the songs were longest versions for the year: Big River, Slipknot, Franklin's, Let It Grow, GDTRFB, and The Mighty Quinn. Those songs, not surprisingly, were absolutely amazing — each of them set a new standard among my live experiences (excepting Franklin's: 10/27/79, an understandable exception to prove the rule). They were not, however, alone in their length: Bertha, Me & My Uncle, Help On The Way, Stella Blue, and Around were each second-longest versions for 1990. Nor were the former alone in their excellence — on this night there was a direct correlation between quality and length as numerous extra jams padded most of the evening's fare. I do confess that for a while I suspected myself of chauvinism, that standing in the tenth row dead-center had colored my experience. However, after having heard the tapes over a dozen times they still thrill me, and I heartily recommend them to anyone who enjoys live Grateful Dead at its most innovative and inspired levels.

09-20-90 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

We arrived at the Garden to a bittersweet feeling on Thursday night; expectations were tempered by a sorrow that the stand was almost over. Perhaps the management had already grown weary and was anxious for the Chaos to be over as King Kong had been removed from his perch atop the Garden marquee. I suspected that the city would be relieved to see us go, particularly the Penta Hotel across the street. The cattle-line to enter the Garden had grown, wrapping around for two city blocks to the Penn Station entrance. Most folks seemed to be taking the delays in good spirits, eager but not anxious.

Inside, it was easily the most crowded night of the stand — I have never seen the Garden so packed. Several thousand extra fans had slipped in, many passing currency to the ticket takers. Almost every seat in the arena was occupied, leaving the taped-off obstructed view section and maybe 50 open seats behind the stage all the way at the top. Every aisle was crammed with happy Deadheads, including sections of the floor that had been successfully kept clear on the previous nights.

The final night in the Garden, while not as consistent as the previous, was the logical and spiritual culmination of the stand. The first set was solid, but paled a bit compared with the previous night's tour de force. The Dead opened with Feel Like A Stranger as they had done on the first night. It proved to be appropriate symmetry as Vince gave a very strong performance on this now familiar territory. It was, however, Bruce Hornsby who shone, once again, throughout the set. I was first struck by his piano as he stretched an excellent Althea to the longest version of the year. He then elevated a confident All Over Now to a classic Dead version, inspiring Jerry's own peppy solo. His accordion — readily audible — worked well on the only El Paso of the year. And, again, Bruce's fresh piano on Brown-Eyed Women was stunning — chalk up yet another longest-and-best version for the year to his credit. Afterwards, the audience started an insistent "We want Phil" chant. The bassmaster obliged by jumping into Greatest Story — an introduction that was the highlight of the song. Like Greatest, the set-closing U.S. Blues was solid, but a bit hurried; they were both relatively unremarkable compared with the rest of this auspicious stand.

The second set opened with a hot, well-jammed Truckin, largely lit with the telltale color I now call Hades red. The focus of the pre-drum segment, however, was bathed in purples (a different power color for the band, one of improvisation) — the New York hold-out of the tour: China Cat> I Know You Rider. Somehow the Dead always pull out killer versions of this combination while they are in the Manhattan area — this one set a new standard. The China Cat was excellent, but the Rider was epic. The full sound with keyboards and piano reminded me of Europe '72. This song was absolutely magnificent, particularly as Hornsby tore into his solo; he even stood up to play at one point — Bruce Knows Rider. Jerry then (with a serious and focused expression) was not to be outdone with his own searing solo. Together, the kindred musicians produced the longest Rider of the year, and the finest version I have heard live — friendly competition at its finest.

I must confess that on this night I harbored an almost militant optimism, even when the Dead went from a short Woman Smarter straight into the Drumz without the slightest hint of the awesome jams that had become the norm over the past few nights. It was easy to give the band the benefit of the doubt; I had not despaired at the merely above average first set, nor at the third shortest pre-drum segment of the year. Instead, I suspected the Dead had something up their sleeve, a purpose for which they were anxious to get on. Although I dared not speak those two fateful words, my fingers were crossed and my attention piqued for tangible clues. Perhaps the Dead had their stopwatches going also, for they countered with the longest post-drum segment of the year, and, I would venture, the most significant.

A special video of Mickey was shot during the drum duet from the row directly in front of us on the side of the stage. The two-man crew arrived shortly after the drums started, sporting one of the largest and fanciest video cameras I have ever seen. They got some great shots, particularly as their quarry dug into the beam, but stopped shooting the moment the other musicians returned to the stage. It was an excellent night to get select footage of Mickey, but I couldn't help regretting that the rest of the evening wasn't archived on video tape, particularly from such an advantageous position with quality equipment.

The Dark Star was woven deep into the ensuing space. The clues were everywhere, the teases became almost unbearable as the tide swelled and the Dead finally broke into one of the finest renditions of this magical song since its 1989 revival. The fusion of the beautiful theme, two deep Spaces and the Playin' Reprise delicately balanced in the middle was phenomenal. Once again, the full sound of both piano and organ gave this set-within-a-set great depth, and, once again, a first-time version for the two new members made for some exceptional exploration — a wonderful spacious experience.

The first verse had an extended introduction of the sort that can make this song all on its own, and was then followed by a long, satisfying theme before the Dark Star disassembled again. The transition back into Space was so complete, with the theme already thoroughly investigated, that I expected the Dead might forget the final verse and continue on to some new territory. Indeed, they took the opportunity to finish the Playin' In The Band from the previous night — an interesting and graceful diversion. Immediately after the timely reprise I felt a second happy shiver run the length of my spine as that beguiling and irrepressible theme popped up again. The Dead had revealed their munificence; by splitting Dark Star, we were treated to two deep chills for the price of one.

The final Space was memorable as the most intense of the stand — perhaps Bruce was overwhelmed as he pounded at the keys with his fists. The hyper heartbeat towards the end was riveting in the finest Pink Floyd tradition. At a total of 21:17, Dark Star was the longest song of the year; there were only two Drumz segments that were any longer. More importantly, Dark Star was the perfect musical climax for this stand in improvisational paradise.

The Throwing Stones that followed was so hot that Bobby had apparently forgotten to decide what would come next. After a brief moment of indecision and blank stares Phil started a lively Touch Of Grey — yet another benchmark version. The energetic Lovelight encore wrapped things up perfectly, leaving me very happy and satisfied until next Spring's tour, my mind reeling from the promises of tapes from Europe.

If you caught any of the concerts at Madison Square Garden this fall, you were very fortunate; this stand will be remembered as one of historical proportions. The fresh, enthusiastic improvisation is likely to prove unique as the Grateful Dead become more comfortable in this new configuration and the novelty wears thinner. Undoubtedly we will continue to see sparks, but those who were in attendance on these nights may come to realize that not only did they witness the genesis of a new Grateful Dead, but also one of its finest moments.

10-27, 28-90 Zenith, Paris - Zea Sonnabend

I was eagerly looking forward to the Zenith, a small venue which was also general admission, because it had been since about 1971 that I had had the chance to see the band in such an intimate and flexible environment. Sure enough, the hall was so small that the soundboard was almost at the back of the seats although probably the same distance from the stage as usual and the floor was quite wide but not too long so that the seats started up practically spitting distance from the stage.

I was pretty amazed to see just how many miracle ticket people there were outside; there had been some in Berlin but there were more here: Americans who somehow had gotten together the money to come over but neglected to bring the money for a ticket. I was glad that the Zenith was on the outskirts of the city so that there wouldn't be the feeling of overwhelming deadhead presence that there was in Berlin and some other cities. We went for seats slightly towards Phil's side the first night because I was bringing my dad, stepmother and sister to the show. We were a little above the level of the stage and yet so close to it! Relatively few French people were to be seen inside but plenty of other nationalities: Germans, Australians and even Spanish people although a large amount of Americans, too.

I was definitely hoping they wouldn't make too many mistakes that night so that my dad could appreciate the music without wondering why these guys were so sloppy. Sure enough, they pulled out a respectable first set with an excellent mix of tunes for a first timer. Notable were the fine Sugaree and Ramble on Rose, which was my dad's favorite. Birdsong is still a little hard for me to get used to without Brent and this one was fairly restrained, and then Promised Land rocked us to the break.

Set 2 was a superb and inspired experience for most of us there. After a rollicking China> Rider the return of Saint of Circumstance somehow seemed just "right" for Paris and it went into a fine and fragile Crazy Fingers. The opening bars of Playing in the Band often give me the sensation of being "home-away-from-home" and this was especially appropriate here because France felt much more comfortable to me than Germany. The drums this night were excellent and never have I had such a great view of the drummers. The absolute highlight of this show for me, however, was the transition from Playin' reprise into Stella Blue; Jerry pulled it masterfully from the cosmos and grounded it so impressively into Stella that I have rarely heard anything so absolutely absolute. The Stella Blue was like a pure clear crystal, shining and delicate, personal and poignant (that's "pregnant with feeling"). After that the Throwing Stones> Not Fade Away didn't seem so repetitive as usual because they could do no wrong. A great show!

The next night was also very good although not quite as cohesive as the first night. A unique feature of the evening was that it was the first show I've ever been to where it rained. What I mean is that it was absolutely pouring outside and the roof leaked quite a lot, so it was coming down significantly inside. I was next to the f.o.b. tapers on the floor for the first set and they were bumming out about it. But the drips only made us dancers stay cool easier. This was my first chance to hear Vince sing and it was a thrill to see them share the verses of Maggie's Farm. Another highlight of the first set was that Bruce played one of his own songs at the end of the first set. The song struck me as being a great song for Phil to play on but not having much room for the rest of the band, and also being absolutely not catchy as far as remembering what it was like.

For Set 2 I joined a friend over near the front on Phil's side and got my first close view of the new keyboardists, although I couldn't hear them too well from over there. A well-developed Victim led the set followed by the perfect Europe song: Eyes of the World. From the world to the burning shores was an excellent transition and then into the quintessential Grateful Dead song, Uncle John's Band. Jerry's melodious guitar flowed so smoothly that it hardly mattered that it was a little weak on the lyrics, inspiring a huge cheer when he came in with "how does this song go?." The standards at the end of the set, Other One, Wharf Rat, and Sugar Magnolia, had the international crowd absolutely thrilled. It was nice to leave the Zenith well fortified for the arduous channel crossing the next day.

04-07 -> 09-91 Orlando Arena - John Whitehead

This is a great venue! It's a brand-new 15,000 seat arena. The four outer walls are double-paned glass blocks, which let in a lot of diffused light. It is really clean (even for dancing barefoot!), the hallways were so wide that they were never crowded even during set breaks, no one I know (male or female) ever had to wait for the bathroom, the staff was courteous, the inner part doesn't have a bad seat, it has an inner walkway which you could traverse with no problem even with dancers and people standing there, the sound is very clear and evenly volumed even in the inner walkway under the balcony, the police were pretty cool, the Florida weather is beautiful; I could go on... I sure hope the Dead return to this place soon, as it was mutually beneficial! One sort of strange thing about the security was that they didn't check for tickets to enter the assigned-seat locations until the second set of the third night! And the ushers inside were wearing surgical gloves — why? I don't know. (Those sweaty dancers can transmit LSD if you touch their tickets!) (Which reminds me, in commemoration of the beginning of baseball season we were treated to an intermission of baseball songs etc. during set break third night, including the Abbott and Costello "Who's on first" routine).

Sunday: This show was kind of interesting because it was an oldies night. The newest song that they played was written in 1978 (Reuben And Cerise), and the oldest was Goin' Down The Road; nothing from Terrapin Station, Shakedown Street, Go To Heaven, In The Dark, or Built To Last! The first set was wonderful (Jack Straw, Sugaree, Wang Dang, Row Jimmy, Black-Throated Wind, Reuben, Promised Land) and the second was jam-delightful (Crazy Fingers> Playin> Uncle John's> Jam> Drums> Space). The jams on both ends of drums were the highlights. Although Space had hints of Dark Star, it wasn't as obvious as the first night of Greensboro (or the second!). As soon as the drummers took their seats, though, Phil turned to them, drew his box, and we got our first-ever Box Of Rain out of Space.

Monday: We went to Disney World today... Not too many Deadheads there at all; the 15-mile drive and $35 admission kept most away. We decided that next time the band plays here, they should get Disney to stay open 'til 3 AM after one of the shows and grant admission to Deadheads with ticket stubs. Eyes Of The World was nice, but not as involved as Greensboro's or Landover's. I'm tired of Women Are Smarter, but nonetheless it wasn't too bad. Truckin' had a brief jam after it, but yet again we got no New Speedway Boogie. Miracle was really powerful, and Dew was nice — Jerry started his solo with a moderately loud MIDI sound, but then brought the level way down and did straight guitar to build it up again. (WHEN are people going to stop clapping during the quietest part of this song? Ack!)

Tuesday: The final show of the tour got off to a slow start as Bob had nasty buzzing problems during Hell In A Bucket and Cold Rain, but the band picked up as the set went on. Bruce played his small accordion/concertina thing for Cold Rain and Masterpiece. The only Must've Been The Roses of the tour and the long-awaited Let It Grow ended the first set on a high note. (And if anyone picked up my Birks after that, let me know!) But the second set didn't feature the Scarlet> Fire or New Speedway Boogie we had been hoping for, absent since Nassau. Instead we got a China Cat> Rider (heard in Greensboro), and Saint> Foolish Heart> Drums> Space> Other> Rat> Throw> Away, all which appeared in Atlanta (the post-drums was identical to 4/5). Geez, the thanks you get for going to too many shows! It wasn't as bad as some tour-ending shows — Foolish Heart in particular was quite nice despite dropped lyrics — but it left a few of us ingrates wanting more...

04-27-91 Las Vegas - Zea Sonnabend

Even the health food store has a neon sign! We cruised wide-eyed into the Crystal City the evening before the shows with FUN on our minds. The first show was my birthday, and one of those decade ones with an "0" on the end at that, so how could we not go to the party capital of the world and PARTY ON! (The last time I got to see this band on my birthday, the Beach Boys showed up). Anything could be in store for us in Vegas.

We quickly decorated our block of hotel rooms with balloons and banners and went out to check out The Strip. Ogling wildly at the day-glo/night-glo neon rainbow of The Strip was way fun; absolutely check out the Flamingo when in suitably altered condition for a real thrill! Our style of gambling was for maximum entertainment value: one person sits at the slot machine and puts in a quarter while the other eight or so gather around and cheer them on. Then we switch places. Nobody loses much and everybody gets the thrill.

The day of the show dawned beautiful but windy. I survived that first inevitable birthday chorus. Since cars were at a premium with many of our crowd flying in, we piled in to the max and then spent what seemed like hours stuck in traffic on the way to the corner of town where the UNLV Silver Bowl was. Finally I got out and noticed that this was going to be a very tough ticket for our two friends who didn't have them. People were waving hundred-dollar bills in the air out of desperation. Once inside we quickly found the blankets that the early contingent had put down in the Phil Zone.

How could I be critical of a show on such a special day? So I won't. I had fun dancing to the first few songs and waiting for the pace to really pick up. By Maggie's Farm they were starting to roll and when they whipped out the fine and frolicy Loose Lucy I knew that Jerry had heard it was my birthday (suurrrre.....) and played one of my favorites from the old days on purpose. An inspiring Cassidy and the now rare Might As Well rounded out a satisfying first set.

Wow! Sugar Magnolia! What a great way to open this second set! That led into a wonderful long Scarlet Begonias with a bounce to it that isn't often there. Then the Fire On The Mountain built into its incendiary pinnacle with peak after peak of blazing glory. Back to earth for Playing in the Band which has been paired so appropriately of late with Uncle John's Band. The two together just tugged on my nostalgic being with such a sense of belonging and "rightness" that it created a strong sense of unity with the other 38,000 revelers who had joined me in my birthday celebration. How great to have a party with such a BANG! Drums and Space were really in the groove and then we danced away through the barreling I Need a Miracle, moving Black Peter, and the other song they did just for my birthday: One More Saturday Night (my last name means Saturday Night in German). "Think we'll have a big ole party, think we'll call it planet earth," Las Vegas, Nevada, USA!

Taking that last advice to heart we proceeded back to the hotel room to PARTY ON. Out came the birthday cake which Kris made at home and brought along (really yummy!), more balloons, and other accouterments of MORE FUN. I survived another horribly embarrassing but well intentioned birthday musical onslaught and received some wonderful gifts. About 30 of us in an average size hotel room proceeded to have a wild balloon fight at which point that "0" at the end of my age slipped away and left me acting like what was left.

05-03 -> 05-91 Cal Expo - Blair Jackson

If I had a dollar for every time someone I know has said "Cal Expo is the only good place the Dead play anymore," I could afford to quit my day job and tour year 'round. But it's true. In an era when spring and fall tours mean seeing shows in faceless basketball arenas, and summer tour is usually a combination of stadiums and what are known in the touring biz as "sheds" (partially covered outdoor facilities that mix reserved seating with general admission areas in the back), Cal Expo is a refreshing exception that really does hearken back to such '80s GD venues as The Greek, Frost and Red Rocks. OK, it's not really as cool — make that, as cosmic — as any of those places, but Cal Expo is relatively intimate, with literally no bad seats (and how many places can you say that about?), excellent sound and that wonderful grass field. It's all general admission, and because it's so well set up, people don't get quite as psychotic about seat-saving as they do in places where half the seats suck. About the only drawbacks I can think of are that getting in and out is usually a bit of a chore, the perimeter of the field gets very dusty, and they sell lots of beer (boo, hiss).

The band has traditionally played pretty well at Cal Expo. The '84 shows weren't anything to write home about, but the '86 and '90 runs rank up there with the best shows of those years and the '89 shows had many great moments. The May '91 series was solid, if slightly predictable, and overshadowed by the fantastic Las Vegas shows the previous weekend and three concerts at Shoreline Amphitheater the next weekend. But it was still Cal Expo, which means it was a stoned-soul picnic and a righteous good time. Bruce Hornsby was absent from these shows — which was fine by me — and Vince really stepped out nicely as he had at the February Oakland Coliseum shows.

The first of the three shows was dismissed by many people for its pedestrian songlist, but I thought it was very well played and energetic, from the opening Bertha> Greatest Story until the closing Lovelight. Let It Grow was a little uneven (especially compared to the magnificent version they played at Cal Expo a few months later) and the energy dipped during He's Gone, but the China Cat was rockin' and the Stella Blue was truly among the best I've ever heard — I was calling that one "Stella Dew!"

Day two was more ragged, but also more inspired. In the first set, Sugaree, in particular, sounded gnarlier than usual, all jagged edges instead of gently flowing curves. As has happened a couple of times before, the Saturday show coincided with the Kentucky Derby and so we expected to hear The Race Is On. It always amazes me how well they play that song, considering they perform it once every couple of years and, as far as I know, never rehearse it. The one disappointment in the set was New Speedway Boogie, which just never quite got its rhythm going — it was slightly slow, Garcia screwed up the words and it sort of petered out at the end. Fortunately, Bob took the reins and charged into a fine rendition of The Music Never Stopped to close the set.

The second set was nice and spacey, with a harrowing Victim to kick things off, but then nice melodic excursions through Crazy Fingers and Uncle John's sandwiching a fine Playin. Although he stumbled at the bridge of Standing on the Moon, Garcia turned that tune into a real tour de force, ripping into the ending jam with an intensity I'd seen him achieve only once before — at the '89 quake benefit show. I dubbed this one "Standing in the Dew." And though I know a lot of people think Saturday Night is a throwaway, I always love it. This was a hot one, as was the Touch Of Grey encore. I'm always happier when they leave us rockin'.

Most people I talked to seemed to like Saturday best, but I thought Sunday was the real jewel. The Help-Slip-Frank opener was greatly appreciated, of course, and Picasso Moon had turned into a very potent tune since I'd last heard it. The entire second set was very tight and beautifully executed. The Eyes was long and flowing, exactly the way you want it to be on a warm May evening. The Truckin' jam was completely out-of-control for a couple of minutes, and that led nicely into a Spanish jam before dropping into a great Terrapin. That song once again was followed by a long jam. The post-Drums offered a songlist that veteran tourheads have seen a million times, but you'll get no complaint out of me. It sounded fresh and alive, from the first peeps of The Other One to the last fade of Not Fade Away. Forget the list. Listen to the playing.

06-14-91 R. F. K. Stadium - Al Kemp

On the long drive home from 1990's Grateful Dead show at RFK Stadium, I told myself that it was my last summer tour. Not that the music wasn't mind-blowing — that show remains one of my favorites on tape. I just felt I was getting too old for the general idiocy (i.e., the pushing, the shoving, the trash, the rude behavior) involved at stadium shows.

Just blow off summer tours from now on, I told myself, and confine my touring to the relative intimacy of hockey halls. That' s what I told myself. But here I was, one year later, speeding down the interstate toward the nation's capitol for yet another Dead show at the monolithic RFK Stadium.

The wheel of fortune known as GDTS had surprised me and my wife Cindy with a pair of reserved seats on the field very close to the stage, so we decided to wander inside early and check out some of Dwight Yoakam's set. We made our way through a fenced-off labyrinth of folding chairs as Yoakam began drawling a country-ish Truckin' that had the other early arrivers leaping and dancing in the aisles.

It was almost twilight when the Dead came on. Garcia started the set in fine fashion with a high-powered Cold Rain And Snow, with Hornsby happily tooling along on his accordion. Weir swiftly settled down into a long, smoking Wang Dang Doodle. It's great to hear this song in the rotation. I'll take it over Rooster or Walkin' Blues any day!

The set took on a honky-tonk feel as Hornsby hogged the spotlight with his piano playing on Jackaroe, Big River, and Maggie's Farm, in which all but the drummers handled a verse. Garcia cooled things off with a chunky Row Jimmy, followed by Weir's impassioned rendition of Black-Throated Wind, one of the highlights of the set.

The band capped the first set in identical fashion to the 1990 show, with a rollicking Tennessee Jed followed by The Music Never Stopped. Is there anything better than a stadium full of people singing Tennessee Jed with the Dead, and loving it? Jerry's guitar playing began to suffer a bit during Music. It was a decent set-closer, but it didn't match the showcase version played at Landover in the spring.

As the time for the second set approached, the field seating arrangement had become a pathetic joke. No fence has been invented (perhaps electric?) that could hold back the flood of humanity pouring mindlessly toward the stage. This scene was predictably out of hand. Promoter John Scher finally came on the PA. He begged, he pleaded, he issued futile threats that the band would not come back unless the clogged aisles were cleared. But the band came back and immediately unleashed one of the most exhilarating sets I've ever heard.

The saying goes: Writing about music is like dancing about architecture. Trying to describe the Dead's music at its best is like reaching for the proverbial gold ring that just slips away.

But I'll try.

When Garcia launched into the first Help On The Way of the summer tour, and the video screens flashed to life in an explosion of shattering glass that dissolved into live shots of the band, the crowd went absolutely and totally insane.

Call me a heretic, but until this night I had never been a huge fan of the Help> Slipknot suite, simply because it usually seems to sag in the middle. But this was something else entirely: a titanic version, with mesmerizing, epic-scale jams that kept me hanging on with every note and phrase. I don't know what glue held it together, but the playing was both free-form and cohesive at the same time. I had never heard a version quite like it.

By the time Franklin's Tower arrived, I felt like something had lifted me up, taken me for a few orbits, then set me back down. It was that familiar sensation the Dead sometimes give me, the feeling of "having just been somewhere." The segue into Franklin's brought another rush of energy and we were off on another long joyride. Garcia confused a couple of the lyrics along the way, but that was entirely forgivable in light of his guitar performance.

Meanwhile, the tapestries surrounding the stage, which had already begun to take on a surreal glow in the dusk, began to achieve new dimensions, offering visions of oceans and orbits, canyons and caverns. And those giant Mitsubishi screens really open up a whole new world to the Dead audience, capturing nuances such as Weir's boyish bravado, Garcia's meditative trances, Hornsby's goofball expressions, and Mickey Hart's astonishing intensity at the drum kit. From where we stood, there was such a feast for the eyes we didn't know where to look.

Estimated Prophet was ultra long and jazzy, the most memorable section being the closing jam, where Vince hogged the spotlight with his "saxophone," giving voice to some nice accents and spine-tingling runs. As the jam built in intensity, the subtle accents gave way to insistent, contrapuntal attacks on the keys, as the band maintained a smoldering 7/4 groove below him. It's clear Vince gets a kick out of his part in this newly juiced-up arrangement, and he milked it to the hilt in an extended closing jam.

When Jerry steered the band down into one of his musical limbos, I was expecting He's Gone or even Comes a Time to emerge. But after a series of teases — actually, they were more like false starts — a beautiful Dark Star was born. Like last summer's, here was another masterful version. Each instrument gently wove its colors into an unstrained melodic tapestry, all knitted into a whole by Phil's delicate fretwork.

Jerry gave his all in the Stella Blue that tip-toed tenderly out of space, before Bobby capped off the night with Lovelight. By then the boys were coasting on fumes. And who could blame them?

08-16-91 Shoreline - David I. Greenberg

I like the Shoreline Amphitheater. A lot of people apparently don't but for a variety of reasons, I do.

First of all, in the reserved seating area, there truly isn't a bad seat as far as sightlines are concerned. The rows of chairs are in the form of concentric semi-circles so that every seat, even those on the ends, face the center of the stage. The rows are also graduated high enough and far enough apart that there's lots of leg room and, even in the very back row, you can see fine. The sound is a bit situational (it's real mid-rangey at the end sections) but overall, it's very good.

The vast G. A. lawn is admittedly quite steep and the band looks like fleas from so far away (big video screens help) but with the help of an array of incorporated delay towers, the sound can sometimes be better than down in the seats.

Then there's the open pavilion area that wraps around the back of the amphitheater. For Dead shows, vending is allowed so this area takes on the ambiance of a carnival. There are speakers out there so even if you're out wandering around, you still feel like you're a part of the show. In fact, a lot of people go out there to dance because of all the room.

If you have reserved tickets, you can still access the lawn and the other sections. As a result, one of the things I like to do at Shoreline, unlike other venues, is to move around and experience the show from different perspectives.

For opening night I had third-row seats, so I started out there. During the opening Jack Straw, Phil debuted a new green bass that sounded like the strings were loose. It was pretty weird! He gave it up after Bertha.

After fine renditions of All Over Now and Ramble on Rose, Weir dragged out a Desolation Row. I figured this would be a good time to wander.

I bopped up the stairs that lead outside and ran into Shauna, Kira, Luana, April and Daisy, who were holding down the fort at Spinning Central. Shauna thought it might be nice to check out my third-row seat for a bit and since it was nearing the end of the set, I gave her my ticket. I mean what could happen?

As Shauna skipped down to my seat, to the closing strains of Desolation Row, I considered the possibilities. She'd probably enjoy a killer Deal, or something like that, while I floated around the outer area. As the intro to Dark Star wafted out of the P. A., I wasn't sure whether to laugh or cry.

After the exquisite Star rolled into a thunderous Promised Land to end the set, Shauna promptly handed me back my ticket and informed me that she would no longer be requiring my third-row seat. Oh, thanks. Maybe I'll get to see a Victim or the Crime up close in the second set.

Having regrouped, I settled back into my seat for the Set Two opener: Scarlet>Victim or the Crime. Well as fate would have it, this Victim was amazing! The segue from Scarlet was brilliant. The jam at the end was spectacular and the transition into Fire on the Mountain — YEAH! — was mind blowing. At one point I swear they were playing both songs at the same time. Jerry took Fire for a serious ride and then everyone pounced on Truckin'. From the first note of Scarlet to the last notes of Truckin', there was not a moment of hesitation. All four numbers were played as if they were one song.

Out of Space, they reprised Playing in the Band — the one from three shows ago at Cal Expo! There were some forgotten lyrics on Standing on the Moon but it was still nice to hear. Good Lovin' is relatively rare these days so it was all the more enjoyable, and I don't mind U. S. Blues as an encore too much lately, especially when Bruce Hornsby plays on it — he lends that '74 sound to it.

Overall, a great show but remember: if a girl named Shauna asks you for your third-row ticket at an innocent time like the middle of the first set, DON'T GIVE IT TO HER! She probably knows about an impending Cosmic Charlie!

09-09-91 Madison Square Garden - Jeff Silberman

Whenever I attend a Dead concert that I very much enjoy, like this particular night, often I wonder how I can relive this glorious experience in years to come? Perhaps, I will be able to remember the exhilaration. However, as my memory fades as I advance in years, I will need a memory aid. Many people take pictures to recall such moments. Others, like myself, take sonic pictures to memorialize the event. A good audio recording makes it possible to relive the concert; a great recording can give me goose bumps! While not unmindful that the act of recording a concert relegates — to some extent — the participation of a recordist to that of a spectator, it is a small sacrifice given the prospect of re-experiencing many years from now the transcendence that was the Grateful Dead.

Regrettably, few realize, much less appreciate, the recordists' contribution. We have been given a bum rap as an annoyance, a nuisance, or worse. Our merit, however, must be reconsidered in the context of time. Armed with camcorder video technology, suppose one could travel back in time to the Avalon Ballroom, circa 1968, but were stopped at the door by a Hell's Angel guard enforcing the band's prohibition against videotaping. Is there anyone who would now say that it would have been wrong to sneak it in? Similarly, by the year 2000, only the most entrenched among us will not appreciate a great audio recording in front of the board (the only place where they can be made) of the Dead with Branford Marsalis or a videotape of the rebirth of Box Of Rain at Hampton Coliseum in 1986. Provided my conduct respects the people around me — a condition I confess that is not always fulfilled in practice — I worry little, and care less about the prohibition against audio recording in front of the soundboard and video recording behind it. I realize that the band may wish it otherwise, but I cannot respect a wish which I believe to be ill-advised and shortsighted.

There is a great deal at stake here. The musical prowess of the Grateful Dead is greater than the sum of the musical skills of its individual musicians. How many bands, after all, have played together for over a quarter century? Given the economic pressures of the modern music industry, it is no exaggeration to say that we may never again see the likes of it, at least not in our lifetime. It is for this reason that I am so passionately committed to capturing and recording the spectacle of a Dead concert as best as humanly feasible. And technology has never been better to do just that! In the realm of hearing, virtual reality has arrived via a technology known as Ambisonics. Unlike every stereo (two-capsule) microphone technique currently used by tapers, ambisonics employs a unique four-capsule microphone (thereby necessitating a four-channel tape recorder) which accurately records a 360-degree soundfield. When you are experiencing a live concert, the sound surrounds your head from every direction — front, back, left, right, up, down, and a million points in between! By faithfully recording the entire spherical soundfield (not just half of it as does stereo) and reproducing the recording via a special decoder, two stereo amplifiers, and four speakers (two in front of your head and two behind it) the 360-degree soundfield can be replicated in one's living room just like it existed at the show. All this may sound far-fetched, but one of these days, just as soon as High Definition TV makes its appearance in the U. S., ambisonics will be as well known to you as stereo is today.

I do not know whether the band has yet explored this technology. I do know that the time is long past due to record a Grateful Dead concert ambisonically. How ironic it would be if Healy does not take advantage of this technology and record the soundfield created by his P. A. considering that he has devoted a lifetime in perfecting it. Given the poor acoustics of the venues in which the band is obliged to play these days, the only soundfield suitable to record exists in the space in front of the soundboard. What a pity that the band does not have the foresight to make the best audience recordings possible. Though I can appreciate and enjoy the direct recordings, e.g. Without A Net, such recordings are incapable of creating an illusion in the listener's mind that he or she is at a Dead concert. A direct recording transports the musicians to the listener's home; a recording of the soundfield in a given space at a given show transports the listener to that particular concert. An ambisonic audience recording is the closest thing to "being there," and as far as I am concerned, "being there" is what it is all about.

Unfortunately, there was nothing played during the first set of this show that was particularly worth saving for posterity. The second set, though, provided some memorable moments. The Iko opener was average, but the Looks Like Rain that followed was above so. The New Speedway Boogie was one of the better versions that I have witnessed. Then came a Playing reprise. I could hear Playing every night because it illustrates the band's talents. Whenever the band plays a cover song, it is squandering its talents, for any band can play, say, All Along The Watchtower, but how many, if any, can play The Other One, Dark Star, or Playing with the finesse and spontaneity of the Dead? The reprise on this night was excellent, and the Uncle John's that followed was very good. After the Space the boys launched into The Last Time, which always has an ominous ring to me. Morning Dew ended the set with its accustomed flourish and was one of the better versions that I have heard of late. A Mighty Quinn encore finished the night off.

We are very fortunate to have the opportunity to experience the Grateful Dead first-hand and have an obligation, I believe, to share our fortune with others as yet unknowing and unborn. Consider the future, then, by abiding the recordist, audio and video taper alike. Let it not be said in the next millennium that you could have done something to preserve for someone the inestimable experience known as the Grateful Dead. Unless we strive to make enduring recordings, all that will remain when the boys have played their last will be our fading and dying memories.

09-10-91 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

When I solicit reviews for the annual editions of DeadBase, I make certain that I have at least one review for every concert by someone who was in attendance. Sometimes, however, a concert can have an even greater significance for those who did not attend. Such was the impact of this concert on me. When I looked at the fall tour, fifteen shows seemed like a greedy impossibility, so I thought I should make an adult decision and select six shows at MSG to complement the half-dozen I was certain to see at Boston. Carefully I examined all the relevant factors — from the normal cadence of a long MSG run (typically building a slow, solid momentum to a last-night peak) through the impracticalities of having to make two round trips to NYC (six hours each way) to calculated suggestions from connected friends, runes, the Tao, and chicken bones. All the sage advice I could muster for this fateful run failed me in a dramatic fashion.

Once I had burned my bridges and the stand started, the knot in my stomach began to tighten when a friend informed me that Branford would be in town and had a free night on Tuesday. After the first two nights I was even more uneasy at the strong reports of the shows, though this unease was tempered by the promise of a run that was starting off on such a strong leg — if my premonitions held, then the closing nights would again be legendary.

On the third night, however, my packing was interrupted by an alleged friend, eager to run salt into wounds I didn't even know I had. "You missed it," he said, "this was definitely the show of the run." "Yeah, right," was my immediate response, as I continued my errands. It sounded like a vindictive overreaction on his part (I mean, even if they had played Dark Star, there was plenty of room left — this was Madison Square Garden after all.) "No, really," he continued, "Branford was there." Ouch — I had missed him again, but that was not unexpected, and his run at the Joyce would finish before the Dead's so he could return later. "No, man, they played Help> Slipknot> Franklin's and Dark Star in the same set, I'm telling you this was it." I surely dropped the receiver as I sank into deep denial.

It is only many months later that I have overcome the trauma and am able to acknowledge this as the finest show of the year, above even the first and last shows of the Halloween run, as well as any at Boston. This concert was particularly noteworthy as the only show with both Branford and Bruce Hornsby in attendance and benefited greatly from this richness. Surprisingly, no one seemed to trip over the other musicians on the stage — this was an impressive display of an almost Zen relationship among such a large configuration of the Grateful Dead.

The first set is wonderfully robust, featuring an all-star set list. My favorite moment is the C.C.Rider> Train To Cry. While the standard blues spot has benefited somewhat from the addition of this combination (and more recently The Same Thing), Branford successfully transforms the moment into a near-religious experience — I suspect that even a Minglewood would have been exceptional. The song selection and execution continue to excel throughout the set. It isn't that Branford is always on top of every song, rather, having him on-stage seemed to inspire the rest of the band to be on individual best behaviors. Each song is a highlight in its own right, from the gentle and beautiful High Time to a spectacular Cassidy which gains more from the lineup than I could have imagined. This is definitely one of those shows where both sets are a must for any self-respecting tape collection.

Perhaps the most unusual aspect of this show was that its highlight is not Dark Star. The Help> Slipknot> Franklin's which opens the second set usurps the traditional show-maker. When Branford was rumored to be playing with the Dead again it was natural to fantasize about what songs they might perform with him — particularly those they did not cover in the first two appearances. Among my favorite wishes were Scarlet> Fire and Help> Slipknot. The open jazzy nature of the latter pair seemed a natural, and so it was. This is among the finest versions that the Dead have performed, rivaling older ones, as well as last year's exceptional MSG performance. The jazz master goes wild in his explorations, producing a wonderful spacy fusion in Slipknot. This is one of the moments where Bruce's contributions set this show apart from the previous two Branford performances — the depth of the textures is astounding. The pace of Slipknot is a little fast, but then again, that contributes to the breathless nature of the song.

That the set's greatest strength was its opening trilogy in no way demeans the rest of the set. An exceptional Estimated followed close on the heels of Franklin's. A song born for sax and all-too-frequently underestimated, this jazzed-up version was near or at its best. Then, of course, there was Dark Star. One has to wonder whether Branford thinks that the Dead are stuck in the sixties, playing Dark Star each and every night. Indeed, several friends independently reported that Branford looked somewhat bored by comparison with his two previous performances. Still, this Dark Star is beautiful, one of the more thematic versions of the year. And the fusion Space after the second verse is fascinating — Branford's interest must have been piqued again.

The rest of the set is very strong, though I confess that the first side of my cassette gets much more play than the second. The Standing On The Moon is particularly powerful, with Branford matching Jerry plea for plea. And Lovelight provides the common ground for Branford to really let loose in the realm of good old rock and roll; it is another version that eclipses its recent brethren.

In the end, my only criticism of this wonderful show is that the Dead put all their eggs in one basket on this night, leaving the rest of the stand barren by comparison. The subsequent six shows I saw were rather perfunctory affairs, without the rumored return of Branford, and with the Dead unwilling to play either Help> Slipknot or Dark Star twice within nine shows (in direct contrast to repeating both in six shows at Boston). Given their special guest, and the level of execution on this night, it was not necessary to play so many special songs in one concert.

09-14-91 Madison Square Garden — John W. Scott

On this night, the powers that be decided to close the back doors to the Garden, and the line out front was a horror show as a result. Once inside, the place was packed, the most crowded I saw it on the six nights that I was there. When we got to our seats we discovered that what had looked like tolerable 200 tier seat on the right were terrible: two hanging speakers strategically blocked the entire band. Only during the most tortured crouch or lean would I catch occasional glimpses of Weir. I couldn't see Phil or Jerry at all, and had virtually no idea of what was happening with the lights. An attempt to move to lesser, but unblocked seats soon proved futile — the venue was so overcrowded that there was little for us to do, but return to our blackout seats and concentrate on the audio portion of the program. Fortunately there was much to hear as this was the tightest of the three shows I had seen so far. While a couple of friends thought tonight was even stronger than the show they saw with Branford, all my wishful thinking could not help me concur. I found this to be a solid show, even very good at times; it was, however, cumulatively shy of that wonderful show I had just missed.

The first set was strong — even the opening Let The Good Times Roll had an added spark, and by Jack Straw I was already feeling that they had the potential for an excited performance. Bruce picked up his accordion and joined Friend Of The Devil enthusiastically — from our awkward perch I caught glimpses of lots of smiles onstage. The first sets were improving. Sitting near the speakers, the music was loud and early in the first set and I was afforded an opportunity to try out my new concert toy: a pair of high-fidelity ear plugs. It immediately became evident that these were not toys. For a brief moment the music seemed too quiet, I had to listen to hear. Then, magically, my ears adjusted to the abated assault, and there all the music was in sparkling clarity. Even a rocking Promised Land at such a close distance reached my ears at a clear, moderate level where I could hear even subtle features that would normally be lost in the din. The first set was universally strong, and without enumerating the performances, I would recommend the tape as eagerly as that of the second.

The second set opened with the only 1991 performance, out of twelve shows in the New York City area, of China Cat Sunflower> I Know You Rider. The crowd was certainly excited: a loud cheer erupted as soon as the tuning was identifiable. The songs proved robust, though shy of their amazing counterparts from the Garden last year. All the pre-drum selections were well-played; nothing among them was outstanding. While the Dead never sunk below the very upper levels of competence, they only managed to graze the lower levels of inspiration on each song. This was somewhat disappointing given the impressive six-song selection, and the band's apparent enthusiasm on stage. When Truckin's closing jam managed to gather some promising steam (Bruce even stood up to play his top keyboard) I expected that the subsequent Spoonful might excel, but it did not. Spoonful is always welcome, and tonight each musician had a contribution, but the song lacked sustained focus and the passionate guitar that can grant it a special life — a liability of potential. Jerry hurried into He's Gone — although short, this was probably the best song of the set. It was a strong group effort with heartfelt performances all around (I cannot recall such full enthusiastic vocals as Jerry rarely sang alone). I did begrudge it the lack of any sort of closing jam as the rest of the band turned the set quickly over to the drummers. Again a liability of potential.

The Drumz featured a long bout of pure percussion with Billy going wild. Mickey was impressed: he stopped outright to watch while his partner soloed. He then worked out a call and answer beat with Billy — one that the audience soon started chanting their own responses to. This would later develop into the "hey" audience response beat that Mickey revived several times over the remainder of the tour. The drummers closed the segment with dramatic gestured beats in one of the more entertaining displays I have seen them do of late. Mickey's bout with the beam was energetic, with Bill remaining onstage through most of it, providing more traditional percussive support.

Bob was the first melodician back, then Jerry, Phil, Bruce, and Vince. The Space was pretty with flights of cohesion. Candace had the psychedelic lights projected on the screens above the stage again. They appeared absolutely gorgeous, though I had to strain to catch them. The improvisational highlight of the show came shortly after Space: a short jam, carved out of what was already obviously Watchtower. Jerry uncovered a theme, a hybrid of Russian Lullaby jam from Albany and part of Half Step. Bruce joined in immediately, and his piano added a beautiful haunting new dimension for Jerry to play with. This was the first night that I saw Jerry looking over at Bruce; the old interplay was back to an extent as demonstrated by this jam.

The resulting Watchtower was compact: energetic but short. Bruce played quick percussive keys on his top keyboard. Even on tape this stands out as one of the better versions of Watchtower in 1991 — a year which has seen the song tamed somewhat. China Doll was very gentle and very welcome; Vince contributed some pretty harpsichord, while Bruce was very pensive on piano. The set was then closed with Saturday Night. I found it an appropriate ending: very hot, but still slightly disappointing. The Weight encore was beautifully done, the best encore one could reasonably expect to cap a very good night of Grateful Dead.

Admittedly, this show was somewhat frustrating for me. It was the first concert I had seen in 1991 that approached the special energy that had dominated their magnificent stand at the Garden in 1990. But there were significant contrasts, and tonight fell short of achieving that dream. The 1990 run boasted the year's longest versions for twenty-eight songs, while tonight China Cat, He's Gone, and Watchtower were each the shortest of 1991. Tonight's second set also had the shortest average song-length this year. While, as with the post-drum jam, there were hints of the improvisation of that now fabled run, but it was not nearly as pervasive.

I should close by noting that even from disadvantaged seats, this was a very good show; I suspect that this was an even better show from the fifth row, or anywhere with a good view and more balanced sound. Both sets are memorable as the best of Series 2 at Madison Square Garden.

09-16-91 Madison Square Garden — John W. Scott

The weather during the run was not what one might call pleasant. Instead of the perfect temperate day I would expect at home in New Hampshire for this time of the year, I had a Turkish bath for an environment. While the humidity had been bad during all my days in New York thus far, today it was easily the worst, the sort of sweltering torment one might expect here on a mid-July day. The only refuge I could find was a plate of exquisitely hot curry, taming the inferno that awaited outside by comparison. On the other hand, the sticky environment and self-imposed walks for most of my transportation were the only things standing between myself and dangerous weight gain in this city of gluttony.

Thankfully, inside the Garden it didn't seem as crowded as on Saturday night. The room to breathe was very welcome. Our seats were at the back of the venue; I was able to sit for several songs and see the whole stage — too much walking this afternoon had taken its toll. I had a good comprehensive view, though lacking the detail from a closer vantage point.

For those of us who had missed the performance with Branford on the tenth, this was the day of reckoning for hopes of his return. His run at the Joyce Theater was done, so it seemed to be now or not. Unfortunately it proved to be not. We were, however, treated to arguably the best show from the last six concerts at Madison Square Garden. One of the advantages of a long run at one venue is that it forces the Dead, in order to avoid redundant repetition, to bring out seldom-played material, and to move other material around, keeping shows fresh. Tonight they did both.

The first set was a fine example of an unremarkable list played very well. It can be argued that Bob's material was the strongest of the first set: a Stranger that rallied to a strong finish, a hot Minglewood (kudos to Bruce and Vince), Music

Never Stopped (a scorching finish), and even a pretty Queen Jane that found a white-haired usher across the way boogying to the music. But, tonight was destined as Jerry's show, as was evident even throughout the first set, and as we would see more dramatically later in the second. While he excelled on every song, his protagonistic highlights included a strong Bertha, a rousing Dire Wolf (his second song in a row, following immediately after It Must Have Been The Roses), and a rocking West L.A. Fadeaway. Jerry was aggressive, not only playing two songs in a row, but also providing an encore for the first set with an unexpected Don't Ease after Music (I appreciate the song more when it follows a more substantial closing number). Bruce's efforts are not to be discounted — he contributed throughout the set, but was a major force in Minglewood, West L.A. and Don't Ease. I was later reminded of the relative nature of highpoints when a new and respected friend identified a pretty (and surprisingly rare) Roses as her favorite song of the set.

The second set was beautifully engineered as a seamless series of musical dreams, though it seemed more haphazard at the time. One reason it fit together so naturally was that Jerry dominated the set — he was the protagonist on five out of seven songs, a rare and generous evening. The mood was soft, warm, and contemplative, and the improvisation was extended and unexpected — not even the band members seemed to know, or even care, where they were headed. Appropriately, the Dead began with a surprise. Second-set Half Steps are rare these days; a pity as the song deserves more attention and does very well in a second-set berth. This one was upbeat and enthusiastic, Jerry shouted out the final "On my way." It was disconcerting to watch smoke billowing from the lower-left speakers during the song — pyrotechnics are not exactly the sort of special effect that the Dead are famous for. Although the smoke continued for a while, it was eventually discovered and solved without interrupting the fragile energy onstage.

Saint Of Circumstance was spacy and strong; afterwards the Dead indulged in the sort of wide open noodling and searching that hinted of Dark Star. I don't think even that could have been as special or as beautiful as the Comes Of Time that resulted instead. Jerry's touch on this song was confident and exquisite. His vocals were exceptionally well considered — as if he not only thought about each word as he sang, he surely felt them. The images were very vivid, and I found this song to be in my top ten for the year, standing among even the heartfelt versions in the days of old. After Comes A Time the band again indulged in indecisive noodling before settling on Uncle John's Band. A fortuitous decision as this was a particularly young, vigorous version that was the most enthusiastic I have heard this year. Even Bruce's accordion solo was cause for celebration.

The percussion and Space were largely uneventful except some of the early organ space was curiously reminiscent of the theme from The Last Waltz; the carefree calliope sound was both unusual and oddly comfortable in GD Space. After the Space were unmistakable signs of I Need A Miracle; Bobby was certainly due a choice. I was pleasantly surprised when the Dead deviated into a hot Goin' Down The Road Feelin' Bad. This wasn't quite up to the roaring version from last year's Madison Square Garden run, but was impressive in its own right, and compares favorably with any other contemporary version I can think of. Jerry completed his five-song hat trick with another stunning selection: Attics Of My Life. While the vocals were a bit rough, they were never painful (as they are wont to be). Bobby's patience was rewarded with closing honors — the extent to which he had indulged Jerry was selfless and generous. He exercised his rights with a rocking, even if separated, pair of Good Lovin' and Johnny B. Goode. The change was welcome, putting the contemplative into focus, and sending us home on an upbeat note.

We finished our late evening down in the Village in a Mexican restaurant that stayed open till very wee hours nightly while the street outside teemed with revelry at 2 AM on a weeknight. What a wonderful city to visit with the right guides — I feel fortunate to have the right guides, and doubly so to need them.

09-20-91 Boston Garden - John W. Scott

This was a very special day for New England Deadheads. In this age when the Dead are condemned to performing in large anonymous arenas, it is only fitting that they finally return to what is probably the most hallowed sporting venue in the land. One wonders whether even the most hardened Lakers or Canadiens fan can help but admit a grudging respect for the flotilla of banners that grace this ancient venue's ceiling.

It was a beautiful, cool, clear afternoon. The drive was wonderfully easy, taking the band's advice we parked our car at one of the northern T-stops and took mass transit to the venue. We saved at least fifteen minutes and countless hassles — it was so convenient that I can't imagine why one would subject one's beloved automobile to Boston streets for any Garden event. We arrived about a half-hour before the doors opened to find the streets outside the oldest arena in the NBA filled with excited Deadheads and near pandemonium. I doubted that the city had known just what they were in for. It was rather disconcerting to see lots of loud motorcycle cops making their presence known, a warning for the masses to behave themselves. A pack of three patrolling with their sirens wailing was particularly ominous until a freak put a garland of roses on one of their helmets — a priceless photo opportunity for a lucky local magazine photographer. The officer smiled and posed, but removed the garland before riding off.

The Boston Garden itself wasn't quite prepared for the Deadheads either. The venue regularly handles a large variety of audiences, including rock fans, and they seemed to assume that Deadheads were normal, average concert goers. Wrong. Everything took longer as Deadheads and the venue staff got to know each other. The most odious rule was that outlawing backpacks. Getting in was very slow, then they butchered your ticket and kept the lion's share stub. These were easily the consistently worst tears I had seen in a year — on this night the date and venue are completely gone from my stub (the orange ticket was Friday night). To those at the gate it may have seemed trivial, but some of us collect this stuff.

As an avid Celtics fan I am ashamed to admit that I have never been to a game, so it had been nine years (and two days) since I had last been in Boston Garden, coinciding with the Dead's last performance here. It is a very different venue from Madison Square Garden, whence many of us had recently arrived. Boston Garden is a wonderful old building with odd corridors, staircases, and spaces around every bend. There are lots of specialty food stands tucked away in various corners you might never suspect existed. One even had a real pizza oven, another an ice cream stand. Some even sold bottled water — disgustingly chic, and refreshingly practical at the same time. Inside the arena the vendors walk the aisles with ice cream (Ben & Jerry's Peace Pops, no less) and strange space-age backpack drink dispensers. The various vendors served non-alcoholic brew only — apparently hockey fans are considered more responsible than Deadheads. While MSG has better acoustics, and has fewer obstructed seats than Boston Garden, the latter has an amazing charm that is perfect for Grateful Dead concerts. I found this a wonderful home in which to see the Dead, in spite of some very obvious shortcomings.

The arena is a tight, vertical venue — much more intimate than MSG. The floor is so short that there were no seats set up behind the soundboard. The seating, like the rest of the venue, was ancient — the most recent paint revealed the bumps of many chipped layers beneath. To make us feel at home there was an unusual guest among those countless banners belonging to the Celtics and Bruins — this one was a tie-dyed affair, bearing the team name: Grateful Dead, and the number six for the number of shows in the run. Another nice touch were the two large red digital clocks that stayed illuminated during the show — a wonderful convenience for us anal-compulsive Deadheads.

Pretty lights shaped like petals and fitted together like flagstones were projected on the five panels that hung above the stage before the first set. The remained dimly on and lightly colored throughout the first set and for the first few songs of the second, where they reappeared again several times later.

This was the only night that I had floor seats, twenty-first row, flush to the right boards. The seats in our section were a garden-variety wooden fold-up style not specifically designed to be connected in rows. Unfortunately the staff had taken the time to lash the seats together with strong nylon ties. Even worse, the seats wouldn't fold up for dancing without removing the ties so folks ended up burning off the ties and stacking the chairs to one side. Without the place holders it got very crowded on the floor, even for those of us who had not subscribed to the anarchy. So our rather average floor seats were not particularly desirable: it was difficult to move, very difficult to see, and deafening standing in front of the speaker stacks. Early in the first set I discovered that I had forgotten my hi-fi earplugs at home; I spent the rest of the evening regretting my stupidity, and wondering how the majority of Deadheads survive countless shows with their hearing and sanity intact without them.

Hornsby was jamming away on his piano before the first set, looking quite excited. The first set was solid, with a strong song selection, but with average execution and intensity. Favorites such as Jack A Roe and Black-Throated Wind were very welcome, but were largely interchangeable with other versions from 1991. I was surprised to find that my favorite so far was the Stagger Lee — Jerry's final solo smoked. The Bird Song, of course, turned out to be the highlight of the set; the airy, expansive jam was easily the most creative moment of a solid, but unimaginative set.

Bird Song was also Candace's best effort so far, starting with two pretty greens and a moody blue flooding the stage while the rose-petal lights remaining dimly on the panels above. The petal lights dawned brighter as the blue warmed to fuchsia — beautiful effect. Later, as the jam matured, Candace projected the colander dots on the ceiling; they played a dizzying game of hide and seek among the banners, ducts, scaffolding, and assorted crannies. Finally, she closed with the greens again, adding some white beam lights for scale.

Candace continued her fun during the break, masking the tie-dyed banner with alternating yellow, blue, and red lights, creating a simple spacy diversion as the banner appeared to change color and pattern.

The meat of show was the section before the drums in the second set. The opening Help On The Way lacked the crisp execution that I am partial to, but had some nice spacy jamming to conclude. The Slipknot! proved stronger still, capitalizing on its spacy origins. The most memorable moment of the night was the audience's response to Fire On The Mountain. The deafening cheer of utter surprise surpassed even that of the '89 Hampton Dark Star, and still makes me laugh when I hear it on tape. A well turned piece of novelty, Fire was short, but lots of fun shared by the band and audience alike (Bruce move from piano to his large accordion early in the song).

Estimated was very good, with some pretty piano from Bruce, and nice raunchy MIDI'd work from Jerry. At the time, my wife was astute enough to pick Truckin' as her favorite song of the show. While I enjoyed the song at the time, it was not until I listened to it more carefully on tape that I appreciated how long and hot it had been. Bruce was definitely excited, moving to the normally idle keyboard atop his grand piano, then playing both keyboards at the same time. Including the generous, hot jam at the end and the Other One teases, this was easily the longest Truckin' of the year, more than twice as long as the shortest versions. After considerable exploration, Jerry, then Phil, were first to leave. Three more minutes and Vince left Weir and Hornsby to space jam a short while longer.

The percussion was fun, beginning with some intricate tonal call and answer. Then Mickey dug into the big drums to the audience's delight for a moment before continuing onto the beam. Bob, the last to leave, was the first musician back, having left the stage a mere ten minutes, followed soon by Jerry and Phil. They claimed a space longer than the percussion, particularly pretty in its piano-heavy end.

Neither Watchtower nor Morning Dew were particularly tight, but they each had an attractive chaotic energy that helped redeem their sloppy moments. Bruce contributed some pretty piano during the latter quiet passages (he played both of his keyboards on each of the last three songs of the night) and Morning Dew's final crescendo was impressive. The Lovelight encore was a welcome parting shot — I like leaving on an upbeat note.

It was particularly fortunate that I was in a good mood, for exiting the venue was no easy feat, the winding bottle-neck corridors packed quickly and moved slowly. At most venues, considering ticket checks and searches, it is much easier to get out than in. I was not convinced that was the case at the Boston Garden. After the initial crush outside, the T-stop proved just as convenient access on the way out as in (provided you had already purchased your token). I could see no reason to drive into the city and parked at outskirt T-stops on each of the five subsequent evenings.

09-26-91 Boston Garden - John W. Scott

On the final afternoon in Boston, the police suddenly decided to enforce the vending laws. One could perhaps understand why: the Deadhead marketplace had sprawled beyond reason and was attracting unwelcome attention. Still, with only one concert left to go, one has to wonder if sleeping dogs might be allowed a final evening's grace. If necessary, next year a stricter, more consistent policy could be introduced. Apparently, such consideration and logic were not to be — throwing consistency to the wind about three hours before showtime, the Boston police began an unprecedented sweep on the main block of Haverhill Street. The new policy caught a number of folk by surprise. As a trio of officers started working their way down from the Garden people quickly spread the word down the rest of the street. Unfortunately, many vendors either missed, or ignored the warnings, and their wares were quickly confiscated, regardless of copyright violations. One poor woman, whose beautiful plush velvet hats I had admired a few days earlier, burst into tears as her investment of time, love, and material vanished in a puff of blue smoke.

Getting in was a bit easier than on the other nights: I had gotten used to the routine, and the Garden staff had learned a few things about Deadheads. The searches had grown reasonable, and I now knew where to go to get a complete stub. Our seats, unfortunately, were the most remote of the tour: within three rows of the back. At least back there I could have claimed a superlative. According to a friend, Celtic star Kevin McHale was backstage for the first set, but from our vantage point, even someone of his great stature was not evident.

The first set was uneven in the best possible sense: it fluttered between excellent and very good. The set opened with its hottest song: Jack Straw. It seemed normal at first but kept on building thanks in part to Bruce's pleading vocals and his aggressive, manic piano; it proved an all-out group effort, and my favorite version of the year. The longest Cold Rain And Snow of the year by far carried the confidence from Jack Straw. The set was packed with strong collaborations — everyone seemed in top form and enthusiasm. They were celebrating the end of a long tour in the most constructive fashion imaginable. Bruce was particularly jubilant and excelled on every song — check out El Paso, even. Then check out Cumberland; it is an amazing version that is my favorite of the past two years.

Some thoughtful, literate Deadhead set off the emergency exit siren behind us to begin Picasso Moon. The shrieking alarm was as loud as the music; it was disquieting how well it fit in with this song, and still I was annoyed. Making matters worse, Picasso Moon was decent — I was beginning to fear that I would have to admit that I was as wrong about Picasso Moon as I had been about Victim. Then, even from our stratospheric seats, Phil's animated intentions were obvious as he drew a box in the air. The alarm, merely annoying during the previous song bordered on heinous during the only first-set Box of the year.

Finally, now that the set was done, at least we could rest assured that a technician from the well-staffed Garden was even now on his or her way to defeat the maddening siren... Ten minutes into the break, with no security in sight, a fed-up Deadhead started throwing heavy objects at the siren speaker on the ceiling above him. After beaning it three or four times, he finally disabled the offending hardware to great cheers and applause. The noise had been so loud, that I was surprised not to be able to hear it on tapes made from the taping section.

Even with the alarm just an unpleasant memory ringing in our ears, our seats still seemed a lousy place from which to experience the last show of the tour. It had been impossible to grasp what was transpiring on stage at such a great distance and my appreciation for the first set had suffered as a result. My friend suggested we move over to the balcony seats side stage on Phil's side to look for open seats. I countered "Let's go to the Dark Star side instead" (in previous years, my only Dark Stars had both been experienced with the same friend, from the other side of the stage). He nodded, and as we left, I heard an eager and earnest voice behind us: "Which side is the Dark Star side?" Staying in the balcony, we made our way towards the keyboards. When we got side-stage, we found our ordained (as opposed to ticketed) seats. They were staked out in the midst of a sizable, though random congregation from our alma mater (who needs official reunions with the Grateful Dead coming to town?). Our new vantage point was still very high, but at only a fraction of the distance of that we had just abandoned. We couldn't see Bob or Phil unless they were standing back from their microphones, but had a clear shot at Jerry and the keyboards. Vince was wearing a loose Tibetan shirt/smoking-jacket with skulls on it.

Dark Star has never been a popular song to open the second set — while there were certainly others, DeadBase V only lists six such occurrences. The last time it played this role was 10/16/89, before that 4/8/71 (also in Boston); only four second-set openers ago was the legendary February 13th, 1970 concert at the Fillmore East. More commonly, Dark Star is nestled in the heart of the set, cashing in on earlier momentum, and providing fuel for whatever else lies in wait. Recently the Dead have proven that in the opening position Dark Star, instead of being merely the expected high-point, becomes the focus of the entire set: it affects which songs are played and even how they are played. Each carefully chosen song becomes Dark Star — with the subtle differences of lyrics and music. Tonight we were magically transported back some twenty years; with a couple of brief and kindred exceptions, this could have been a dream set conjured in 1971, perhaps at the Boston Music Hall.

The second set began with the gentle noodling of obvious intention. With the exception of the spiritually powerful version on Halloween, this was my favorite Dark Star in a year when they were not quite as strong as in 1990. The introduction was long (Phil kept on cueing while Jerry kept on deferring) and wonderful— a gentle bassy excursion leading through waves of piano and guitar. The immediate question was: which verse was Jerry going to sing? It was quite possible, as in Denver, that this was just the logical second verse to a Dark Star begun two nights ago. My heart soared as Jerry started anew, then sailed with the extended jam and space afterwards. It was early in the set for the band to be so intent and spacy; Candace obliged by reaching deeply into her bag of spells — she cast three different shapes of rainbows on the screens above the stage: colander-dots, doughnuts, and arcs slowly mingled in an intricate dance.

What could follow — much of the material that could be expected to result from Dark Star had recently been performed at the Garden. Indeed, the Dead resorted to a combination they used on the second night of the stand. While Saint Of Circumstance chronologically violated the 1971 theme, it was an appropriately spacy song to follow (Bruce played his top keyboard), and fit in nicely. It was a strong version, with a well built climax, though none this year has quite lived up to the promise hinted at when the song was first revived in 1990.

The band seemed anxious as they moved immediately into a tight Eyes Of The World. This may have been the second-shortest version of the year, but it was sprightly and expansive, thoroughly consistent with the set's motif, and not to be discounted out of hand. Jerry gave a strong performance, though when Phil and Bruce offered an opportunity for a jam afterwards, he declined and left the stage early. The others followed almost immediately.

Hart and Kreutzmann decided to leave a lasting impression on this final night of the tour — appropriate, as the percussion segments were remarkable at most of the dozen shows I saw. Tonight they excelled over a broad range: a traditional duet on their kits; spacy textural percussion as first Mickey, then Bill moved to MIDI drums, then loud bone-thumping beats as Mickey banged on his big drums. Mickey eased into the beam when Bill finally quit; his intensity slowly built until he was kicking its strings with the heel of his sneaker. When Mickey left, the beam's sustain allowed the strings to reclaim the stage without an awkward silence. White arcs rotated slowly on the screens above, keeping patient time.

After Bruce returned, the Space started sounding suspiciously like Dark Star — it was beautiful. When The Other One materialized instead, it was a surprisingly gentle and happy awakening from such an indulgent dream. The introduction was long, smooth, and confident; as the song gathered steam Bruce stood to play his top keyboard. Appropriately enough, The Other One was more explored than explosive, with long focused jams before each verse.

Then, having dropped tantalizing hints of Dark Star before The Other One, the Dead graciously delivered afterwards: its enchanting theme appeared breathtakingly close on the heels of Bobby's closing lyric. After a very short introduction, Jerry sang the verse that was conspicuously withheld on Tuesday night. Above the stage, Candace's arcs bloomed into rainbows as she cast them with prisms now. Dark Star's final jam was a marvelous extended affair, closing in a beautiful fragile Space. The entire stage was now lit only by a myriad of tiny rainbows — it was absolutely gorgeous from above. The full treatment of the Dark Star reprise is one of the reasons I am so partial to this version. Tonight we had been blessed with nearly twenty minutes of Dark Star, and this with another fourteen minutes just two nights earlier. The special magic of this ancient, awkward stadium (sometimes iconized as a leprechaun) had proved as potent for the Grateful Dead as it has long been for the Boston Celtics.

Dark Star's final Space quietly dissolved and the Dead paused, considered... Attics Of My Life! I hadn't known what I was holding my breath for (I hadn't even realized that I had stopped breathing), but I had, and this was definitely it. While the vocals were predictably shaky to start, they warmed up very nicely and the remaining harmonies were actually very good, thanks in large part to Vince.

The set closed with a rocking Good Lovin' — again the Dead had arrived at the perfect choice, both in fulfilling the 1971 fantasy, and in providing a rousing conclusion to a fantastic, well jammed set. The selection was popular with the audience: enthusiastic cheers and choruses from its ranks can be heard throughout. The enthusiasm was shared onstage, particularly by the energetic piano player. Maybe this was a celebration of a long tour coming to a close, but Good Lovin' was worthy of that role as well.

There were no thoughts of watching the encore from the gate again tonight as there was not a mire-to-be-avoided that could have torn me from the edge of my seat. I was not disappointed — there could have been no more appropriate encore than Brokedown Palace: not only did the 1971 illusion remain intact, but this was the obvious theme song for this venue. While the Dead closed Madison Square Garden the same way, and I don't know which venue wins the palace-heat of the race, Boston is the clear winner in the brokedown department. In any case, the result was a warm, confident version featuring strong vocals from Garcia.

Then we were treated to a final surprise: the first of only two double encores in 1991 was completed with We Bid You Goodnight — forgotten since Foxboro this was Bruce and Vince's first version. Jerry waved during the closing goodnights, then waved a final good-bye afterwards. According to my friend in the fifth row, Phil threw a kiss, and Bob winked twice.

As we sat back in our seats, overwhelmed, the roadies started packing up the stage immediately. The Boston Garden slowly, very slowly emptied, and we had to be coerced to join the final morass in the hallways. Somehow the crush of bodies that I normally try to avoid wasn't so uncomfortable after such the warm, wonderful concert we had just shared.

10-31-91 Oakland Coliseum - Zea Sonnabend

Just thinking about this show to write the review sends shivers up my spine still. How can words do justice to the whole experience of this four-show run? This is my humble attempt to capture this major occasion and its whole realm of emotion.

Even for the many of us who didn't know Bill well but had been to his events, he was a clear presence for all music fans in the Bay Area and beyond. At Squaw Valley in August we had seen him at his best: looking enthusiastic and fit, attending to everything, pleased with the success of a new challenge, and reflective on the music and its impact. For a man who lived so much in the public eye, it was almost too amazingly synchronous that his death was so sudden and public and at a time right before the Dead shows. Although the shock and the grief was very immediate for his associates and his "constituents," there was nothing else to do but go on with the show. It soon became apparent how fitting it was that mourning for him would also be very public.

I'm sure the band faced one of the big challenges of it's collective life when it went on stage on 10/27. After that fragile but agile performance, the run slipped into a more normal tone; people were able to rock and roll again. The two middle shows were fairly routine fun shows and helped alleviate the somber overtones. By Halloween we were wondering slightly if any more acknowledgment of Bill would be made, or if it would be saved for the park on the weekend, and most of the speculation centered on the park event.

When the first chords of Help On The Way came out, I thought of how many of the songs had taken on new illumination in reference to Bill's passing and the "Paradise waits" comment was a response to that "end of an era" feeling, which was very prevalent in our emotions. They barreled through the first set with a drive that had been lacking in the run so far. An excellent Tom Thumb and swirling Let It Grow finished it off and left us in rapt anticipation for more.

Can we say how wonderful Scarlet> Fire is 193 times? (DeadBase V statistic through 1990...) Truly transcendent once again, and it led into the "long strange trip it's been" reality and then brought way down hard into an intense blues jam that turned into one of the deepest and most essential versions of Spoonful. The hardness of that eased into the spacy strains of Dark Star although didn't dissipate that hard driving background energy that characterized the older versions of this Grateful Dead zenith of inspiration.

Right here I would like to pause and say, Thank You Jerry, Phil, Bob, Mickey, Billy, Vince and Bruce for bringing back Dark Star into circulation and yet not overdoing it so that it continues to have a special place in your repertoire and our hearts.

After the first verses of Dark Star were sung, just as the jamming began to fragment into weirdness, someone came striding out from backstage behind Jerry's amps wearing a circus ring-master's gray-plush tophat at least a foot and a half high with a foot-long black plume nodding above it — a truly monumental tophat, nearly parodic in its dimensions, a hat that could only have been selected by a major novelist. And indeed it was soon apparent that this imposing figure stiding resolutely forward towards Bobby's mic was none other than Ken Kesey and that though the band might well be the Grateful Dead, here was none other than the Master of the Acid Test.

What followed was truly unique in all Dead history. Kesey started talking but it was hard to catch more than snippets of his words because the somewhat frenetic crescendo behind him kept relentlessly building. The tone was clear enough to all and then at one point his words came clear where he said, "Nobody else reaches across the distance and puts their HANDS on your shoulders." From that point on it was just total pandemonium as we all lost control to our emotions and band and audience were transported to some other realm entirely. And then Kesey grounded us with the final lines of the e.e. cummings poem, and the band rolled on with their intense wave after wave of receding tide of emotion until it was done.

"how do you like your blue-eyed boy now Mister Death?"

The rest of the show was a return to normal after the storm. Fine playing characterized all the songs. The Werewolves of London was so anticlimactic after the rest that it was even funnier than ever.

Bill will be missed for a long time.

03-09-92 Capital Centre - John W. Scott

On Monday a grey morning blossomed into a beautiful afternoon — the sort that begs for leisurely strolls down parking lot aisles, soaking in the scene and browsing fine vendables. Unfortunately, security had done an admirable job in suppressing all mercantile and most social exchange in the main lots directly surrounding the Cap Centre, so we toured the side lot where the sweeps were fewer and farther between. The atmosphere there was somewhat more relaxed, but there was still only a paltry selection of Deadhead merchandise available. Even that modest haven was eventually breached: as it was getting dark the authorities executed an organized sweep, confiscating merchandise. When we strolled into the Cap Centre at about 7:00 all lines had magically vanished in the past half-hour. No jostling, no trial of patience; then searches at the door were more reasonable and civilized than on the previous night — both are welcome surprises for an East Coast show.

As we entered, Janis Joplin's Cheap Thrills was playing on the P.A. — yet another excellent selection from the compact disc archives. Our seats were on Phil's side, by the lightboard just off the floor and below the normal side seats so we were able to safely stash our packs behind our seats without fear. Aside from not being very close, the only disadvantage of these seats was that the left triangular canvas above the stage was mostly eclipsed from our view. On this tour I found the exceptional lighting provided strong diversions during the many mediocre musical moments; for a lesser show, I might have actually preferred more distant seats with an unobstructed view of Candace's canvases.

The first set was okay, but rather unexceptional. Jack Straw opened the set; it was lukewarm at first, but developed nicely and eventually boasted a strong duet from Jerry and Bruce. West L. A. was respectable (Phil was already prominent and, as usual, Bruce's contributions on piano worked to its advantage), but the cowboy medley was barely saved by a late rally during Big River. A short Cassidy featured a nice break jam, but fell shy of the more inventive versions that have spoiled me. The set closed with a fiery, though compact Deal. Jerry gave a decent solo, but once again his enthusiasm was bridled and dependent on others; Bruce was the hero here, playing both his keyboards at once, then alternating between them for the raging finale.

Happily, there was even more to the second set, starting with a strong Victim (the first of the year). The house lights over the back of the arena were still on as the song began; it was unsettling to have the band playing under such conditions. On tape, the huge cheer that unexpectedly erupts midway through the song is the audience's appreciation for the staff having finally figured out how to extinguish these lights. I continue to be impressed at how Victim or the Crime has overcome the rough awkward edges that were all too apparent in the early versions — the song no longer sounds discordant to my ears and I now find it perversely beautiful. My only complaint is that the song could be longer — the average 1992 version has shrunk a minute and twenty seconds compared with 1991. This trend should be reversed and the spacy jams should be exploited more thoroughly.

Aiko was even stronger, one of the more spirited versions I have witnessed of late. Bruce proved once again that not only does this song work with his accordion, it has come to need even depend on it. Although I will miss Bruce's contributions on many songs (such as I Know You Rider and Jack Straw), I suspect that this will be the emptiest without him; I am certain it will be the emptiest without the squeeze box.

My first Corinna was excellent, and immediately won a close second (after Way To Go) in my heart among the new material. I haven't made much of the lyrics so far (I gather it is a love song), but the music is hypnotic and beautiful. It was interesting to hear it so closely contrasted to Victim: while both songs might be called pretty, Corinna's aesthetic is joyful rather than sinister. At nearly fourteen minutes, this was the longest version of the year. Bruce remained on accordion for the first half, and then switched to piano; both instruments worked beautifully — each seemed perfectly suited for the moment. Corinna culminated in a long and enchanting closing jam — likely the best improvisation I heard live in 1992. It reminded me of some of the dreamy 1974-style Grateful Dead jams, or of Baron Von Tollbooth and Blows Against the Empire. The lighting provided the perfect visual analogy: spacy kaleidoscope lights even more complex than last night's.

After the jam meandered for a while Jerry left the stage; my friend took her cue and headed off for the ladies' room — bad mistake. Listening to the jam in retrospect, one realizes how long the Dead had been teasing Dark Star. It really should have been no surprise when Jerry returned just in time to play the holy grail. But it was, and what a wonderful surprise it was. The crowd cheered wildly when the maestro reappeared — but surely they must have been half-holding their breath, for the Dark Star cheer was louder. Dark Star (almost by definition) was wondrous. While the introduction was short (two and a half minutes seemed to be the rule of thumb in 1992), it was solid. The heart of the song, however, was the luxurious post-verse jam that drifted gently towards Space. It strikes me here that this is another place where I will sorely miss the full sound achieved with Bruce's grand piano.

Drumz started on a percussive note, with Mickey on the large drum while Bill remained at his traps. He then followed Bill to MIDI drums, where they built a gentle, melodic percussion. Finally, the mood changed dramatically again when Mickey progressed to the beam: he dug in deeply, trashing it within an inch of its inanimate life before leaving it to resonate and cover the return of the melodicians. Throughout all this Candace was once again outdoing herself. The beautiful wispy kaleidoscope ghosts cast on the circular panel were getting rave cheers from the audience: a vibrant, mesmerizing aurora borealis. Other lights were shooting around the stage all the while as Bobby created short haunting whale sounds on slide guitar. The Space took on a majestic tone, and with the lights providing a grand stained glass window, it seemed as though we were in a psychedelic cathedral. Indeed, during its later reaches there appeared a beautifully haunting theme, and at the time I had falsely ascribed Christian roots to it (imagining "alleluia" in the chorus). I was to learn much later that this was Shenandoah, a theme made popular by a Jimmy Stewart movie. Perhaps it is easy to confuse the religious and the patriotic or chauvinistic; I was moved nonetheless.

Miracle began with an odd Truckin-like twist. Somehow, it was easy to shrug off the choice and enjoy the strong bassy version. Then the Dead veered back towards the religious as we were treated to another show-maker. The last time Morning Dew and Dark Star were played at the same show was on 12/31/81, 707 shows previous; the last time they were played in the same set was 10/18/74, 1137 shows previous — impressive company. Perhaps it is unfair for them to play two epic songs at a single show, but you were not going to catch me complaining this night! Morning Dew was an intense building version that gave me goose bumps and left me with but one question: why do people clap beats during the quiet segment?

The show ended with a screaming Satisfaction — certainly one of the hottest encores all year. Wow! The audience went wild — they outsang Bobby on the PA, an impressive feat. This song had been allowed to lie dormant for nearly six years and I was floored at how tight it was. I found this to be a fitting end to a great, though underrated show. The first set may have been unimpressive, but the rest of the show certainly made up any slighted ground in my ledger.

Generally, the stand perpetuated Cap Centre's reputation as a Mecca for strong shows; it is a pity that there were only two shows scheduled. The venue's other notoriety, that of overzealous law enforcement, has been somewhat ameliorated at the venue: there were fewer officers on horseback and even those seemed less threatening. Before either show I did not see the tie-dyed-selective speed traps I found so onerous in 1990. On Tuesday, however, we saw a dozen or so Deadhead vehicles (including one of the double-decker buses) on their migratory routes north to New York pulled over and searched by Maryland troopers. The cynic in me wonders whether the pre-show calms were just a cynical ploy to ensure these hapless Deadheads spent their money in the local economy first...

05-31-92 Las Vegas - Rob Winkler

Sunday turned out to be the hottest of the three days in several ways. This was the only day we weren't threatened by thunderstorms, and the sun baked down on us with a vengeance. Fortunately, the event staff were prepared for this, and they had several giant fire hoses to spray down just about anybody and everybody in the stadium with water. Granted, it got annoying once in awhile, getting doused when you were least expecting it. Overall, however, it was greatly appreciated, and it probably prevented multitudes of heat injuries. (They were smart enough to avoid spraying into or near the taper's section.)

Music-wise, this was a very hot show, particularly everything that Jerry sang. I had to wonder about Jerry's choice of clothing again — he appeared to be wearing the exact same purple-and-white-flowered, hideous pants that he wore on Saturday. However, that was quickly forgotten with the opening notes of Help On The Way. The Help> Slipknot! combination wasn't anything like the amazing RFK version from 6/14/91, but it was very nice for a first-set version. By the time they launched into Franklin's Tower, though, they were rolling, and Jerry was playing and singing extremely well. The Minglewood that followed was hardly a surprise, being in the desert and all. Bobby's voice sounded as good as ever as he referred to the local females as "desert fillies,"and "T right here in Las Vegas" brought a rousing cheer. The solo spots in the song were a little dull, with Jerry not even bothering to take a solo during the second break. Vince played a very hot solo, however — he just keeps getting better and better. After Minglewood, I was very surprised and very happy to see my first Must Have Been The Roses. This was a gorgeous version, with Jerry singing absolutely wonderfully. The Queen Jane that followed was predictable, yet very pretty. Then came yet another wonderful song from Jerry — my first Bird Song in sixteen shows. This version was very pretty, with the instrumentation kind of quiet during the verses so that Jerry's singing came through loud and clear. Unfortunately, it seemed that Jerry's microphone had problems during the verse right before the solo break, and we only caught a little bit of that one. They seemed to start having a few other small problems with the sound system around this point, as some of Jerry's lead guitar got very hard to hear at points. Nevertheless, Bird Song was still wonderful. They could have ended the set here as far as I was concerned, but instead they closed with Picasso Moon. This was the only weak spot of the whole night, but it might be because we heard very little of Jerry's guitar. It might have been a good rendition if it hadn't been for the apparent problems with the sound system. Anyway, I was very pleased with the first set.

I was expecting Women Are Smarter or Samson to open the second set since Jerry had already opened two nights in a row. Instead I was pleasantly surprised to hear the opening chords of Scarlet Begonias — the third Jerry opener in three nights. Scarlet was hot, with everybody playing extremely well and all the instruments coming out perfectly in the mix. Phil especially was prominent in the mix, and we were treated to some great bass-playing in the ensuing jam. The jam eventually led into Fire on the Mountain, and that was extremely hot. It was probably one of the shorter versions I've heard recently, but I could be wrong — I had no sense of time, and I'm sure it wasn't a mixture of Texas medicine and railroad gin. Nevertheless, the energy in Fire was extremely intense, especially Phil's bass-playing. The Women Are Smarter that followed was also intense, with some more great bass from Phil and a smoking MIDI mariachi solo from Jerry. Things cooled down a little after that (good thing — I was exhausted), and Jerry treated me to my second rendition of So Many Roads. I really like this song, and I hope it keeps a permanent spot in the Dead's repertoire. On this night, it kept giving me this feeling that I've heard it a thousand times before, yet I could hear it again and again without getting tired of it. Jerry brought the song to a close with some haunting, extremely good vocals, singing "So many roads" over and over again. After a brief pause, they rolled casually into Saint of Circumstance. This seemed to be a really loose version, but Bobby's vocals were again extremely good. I expected Drums to follow, but instead came a sixth song — He's Gone. Again, as in all the songs Jerry was singing, the entire band put on a stellar performance, and some wonderful a cappella vocals at the end led us into Drums.

What I mostly remember about Drums on this particular night was that it was really loud. I mean, REALLY LOUD. In the relatively short Space that followed, I thought I heard some Other One teases. Eventually, though, it became apparent that they were moving into something slow and Jerry. I thought maybe I'd finally see Death Don't again. Instead, I had absolutely no complaints when I heard Jerry quietly roll out those opening notes to Attics Of My Life. This was another first for me, and it was gorgeous. At the end, I figured absolutely anything could follow, but I was praying that it wouldn't be Throwing Stones. Instead, I was pleasantly surprised to hear Spoonful, of all things. Very nice, with some more wonderful keyboard playing from Vince and great vocals from Bobby. At some point during Spoonful, and I don't know when because I wasn't paying attention, Steve Miller came out and started playing with them. He proved worthy by fitting in nicely, and stayed on stage with them for the rest of the night. After the last verse of Spoonful, they continued playing a bluesy jam in the theme of Spoonful, with the guitarists jamming wonderfully off of each other. Phil, meanwhile, had Other plans (no pun intended). What ensued was a tug-of-war jam with Phil pulling the band toward Other One and the guitarists pulling back into the Spoonful jam. The intensity increased, and finally Phil won. The Other One was a short but super version, with Phil playing at his best. Then, to cap it all off, they dropped into a stunning Morning Dew. Jerry's vocals were just phenomenal. After the last verse, Steve Miller took an unexpected solo to start off the long solo break at the end. It definitely sounded as if he had rehearsed it, and he played well. Then Jerry tore the house down with his solo, bringing the song to a screaming close. What an awesome ten-song second set!

I figured it couldn't get any better, but it almost did. When Steve Miller came back out to play with them for the encore, I was sure they were going to do Johnny B. Goode. Instead, Vince started playing some interesting keyboard riff, and all a sudden everybody who had been to the Memorial Day show at Shoreline started cheering. I was still clueless, but when Vince started singing the Baba O'Riley that I had heard so much about, I was floored. His vocal performance was amazing. "They're all wasted!" seemed so appropriate as it brought a roar from the crowd. Also, Steve Miller played some amazing lead guitar. I was hoping the T.N.K. that I had heard about would follow, and my hopes were fulfilled. More great guitar from Steve Miller made this extremely psychedelic. What a fuckin' show!

To end this incredible day, the carnival-like party in the parking lot was great, and it was allowed to go on until about four hours after the show ended. Finally, we headed for home with big smiles on our faces, knowing what a great weekend it had been.

06-12-92 Albany - John W. Scott

I spent the early afternoon at the hotel's spa — engaged in rigorous circuits of whirlpool/sauna/ pool/sunning-on-the-terrace; for relaxation I stuck labels on post cards for DeadBase. After a leisurely while we headed down to Shakedown St. — discovering, as expected, a magical marketplace had erupted in downtown Albany. Dozens of vending booths were packed tight in the lower lots, purveying a wide range of merchandise. The most interesting items I saw were beautiful handmade bamboo pan-flutes. Then there was that man with the python. On the other end of the originality scale: there were five or six different lyrics books for sale, and the beer vendors continue their exponential growth (some had even resorted to bikinis spokeswomen). At least the beer vendors are on a quality kick — increasingly stocking delicious gourmet brews.

Sigh...it was absolutely beautiful weather for browsing what is consistently the finest vending scene in the northeast. Instead of suppressing the flea-market, Albany actually encouraged it, roping off three or four blocks to accommodate the overflow. In my experience, the police officers were always patient and helpful; they were also appropriately amused much of the time. This town is refreshingly friendly to Deadheads in a rising tide of municipal hostility throughout the region. If that friendliness is merely a crass evaluation of the millions of dollars we drop on their economy, then it is my pleasure to spend my money in Albany. It may already be too late, but, hey, folks, let's not blow this one.

Our seats were back on the side, in line with the start of the taping section. They afforded a decent view of the stage without obstructions and good sound: a respectable spot from which to witness a refreshingly strong show. The lists are unassuming, but generally well played. The first set was the best I saw live in 1992 — that may not be saying much, but it is enough to recommend it on tape. The set was just under an hour long, but boasted very good song selection and uniformly strong execution.

Jack Straw opened — a version that started solidly, then nimbly climbed to a raging finale — hot. Sugaree was long and confident, though less dramatic than Jack Straw. The set filled out quickly; while nothing was fantastic, everything had verve. Mexicali was enthusiastic, then there was a blazing Maggie's Farm. While his verse rated a solid cheer from the audience, it was Vince's confident keyboards that made the latter song for me. Jerry drove a strong B. E. Women; Bobby did the same for Black-Throated Wind (hot climax) — everyone was happy to contribute tonight. And what wonderful selection: the set evolved in a logical and impeccable progression of much of my favorite material. For instance: New Speedway — now there's a song we haven't been hearing enough of late. Long and loose, New Speedway really belonged in the second set with the Truckin jam; with its inclusion, however, it elevated this first set to one of the year's finest. The Promised Land icing was a surprise and almost too much. Vince received loud cheers as he helped drive the hot finale — a fine raging finish to a generally raging set.

Between sets we took new stock of the Dead's new wireless sound system. Each band member has been fitted for a custom monitor that fits snugly in one ear. This allows them each to hear a custom mix highlighting their instrument at a reasonable volume. By temporarily isolating their microphones from the PA, band members are also able during the music to communicate directly with the sound crew about mix changes or equipment trouble, and with the other band members for song cues and warnings. This new era of communication is certain to make all the exaggerated gestures of years gone by look positively Stone Age. The streamlined stage without all those bulky monitors was just a bonus, folks. It was strange to see the band members (usually Bobby) talking into his microphone during songs, with no audible result. Every now and then somebody's cue would be mistakenly broadcast over the PA, but it occurred to me what an incredibly useful tool this will be for the Dead once they work out any bugs.

Speaking of bugs: Jerry's microphone was off for the first line of Scarlet Begonias, but the song soon sorted itself out. Scarlet was good; the long carefree transition was great. Fire was fantastic. The whole episode took over twenty-four minutes and was likely the longest two-song jam of the year. It was definitely the longest Fire on the Mountain of the year, by nearly two minutes. It featured some hot leads from Jerry in a variety of voices, some tasty steel-drum licks from Vince, and deep resonating bass throughout. Fire makes this tape a 1992 must-have. Way To Go (Home) was 1992's most common song; I have yet to be disappointed by it. Tonight was yet another good example of why. Jerry alternately tears into his leads, then sustains beautiful bent notes. The rhythms of this song seem to suit him (including a few Roadrunner bounces). Vince has really come into his own as a member of the Dead, not only as a pianist and vocalist, but most importantly as the author of a song that Jerry seems exceptionally comfortable with. Truckin was solid, but the band did not push the intense build-and-releases which mark many finest versions. A slinky Smokestack Lightnin' was more impressive — particularly, the band's casual approach.

The percussion and beam segments were nice and open, featuring some good response rhythms between Mickey and Bill. The stage was empty for over a minute as Mickey's resonating piece slowly mutated. Space continued the open nature of the percussion, while Candace created an intricate pulsating lava lamp using multi-color confetti which dissolved in and out of focus.

The Last Time was very good (as it usually is). China Doll was gorgeous — gentle as well as fragile, displaying both control and emotion. The emphases were different than on Brent-era versions, but no less enchanting — this is one of the more flawless China Dolls I have heard in some time. The set closed with a long, rousing Sugar Magnolia. While it was not quite explosive, the Dead drove this song relentlessly — a celebration of a set well done. In spite of all the wonderful music before it, the Attics Of My Life encore was the most memorable song of the night. An unexpected treat, this version was absolutely perfect. It boasted a delicate balance between beautiful vocals — confidently sung, exquisitely phrased — and tasteful instrumentation. It is very rare to have two such special, tender show-maker songs in one evening; it is even more memorable that these were such perfect versions.

A curious gaggle of factoids: tonight there were three songs that were played six times this year: Sugaree, Mexicali, and Black-Throated; each of those songs clocked their longest versions for the year tonight. The same first set that contained those three songs was opened by Jack Straw and closed by Promised Land — both shortest versions. From the second set: Fire, Smokestack, and Attics were longests of the year while Truckin and China Doll were shortests. I have no idea what any of that means; but Fire on the Mountain was hot, China Doll and Attics were beautiful, and this show is worth having on tape.

We went back to the hotel bar afterwards, anticipating seeing various band members celebrating. Unfortunately we arrived to a Friday night two-person lounge act performing Barry's and Neil's finest (on the other hand, they did do Dancin' In The Streets) with vocals accompanied by a porta-organ and pre-recorded tracks. While many of the more mature audience danced, disappointment dawned for Deadheads who were realizing that there was no way any member of the band would be caught dead at this scene. We later found out that the Dead had already departed to plusher accommodations in New York City. Wise move.

10-16-92 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

If by severe financial constraints I could only own recordings of one live concert from 1992, what would it be? Would I commemortate my favorite show attended from the Cap Centre, or could I choose among the fabulous Las Vegas shows (so bright you can taste the neon), or perhaps that particularly well-jammed show from Chicago, or one of those exciting Oakland shows that proved the Dead were back with a vengeance? The answer to that perplexing question is really quite easy: none of the above. My unwavering selection would be a magnificent concert at Madison Square Garden, that same venue the Grateful Dead stood-up a month earlier.

On September sixteenth, nineteen-ninety-two Columbia Records orchestrated a monster celebration of Bob Dylan's music. They provided a now-classic venue, an impressive house band, and a guest list of stars. Neil Young provided the name: Bobfest. There have been some very memorable concerts in the Last Waltz and Concert For Bangladesh tradition. I found this to be the most impressive — a formidable claim indeed.

The production was absolutely stunning. To bring together so many different and diverse artists to perform selections from a five-hundred-song catalogue of Dylan material for a live pay-per-view broadcast is certainly a task for the record books. I counted twenty-five different lineups in a four-hour concert. Thirty-three songs were broadcast. Thirty-two of those were written by Bob Dylan (the other I will get to later on). The evening was filled with legitimate superstars in the fields of rock, country, blues, folk, soul, and even grunge — an evening so packed that only five artists were able to perform a second song. And all this transpired with clockwork efficiency, and without unduly stifling creativity. One of the more inspired decisions of the evening was the use of TelePrompTers. Freed of having to memorize lyrics that are legendary for their complexity and obscurity, artists were able to invest more in reflection than repetition. My award for heroic valor under fire goes to the stagehands who managed a night of flawless equipment swaps when almost every act used different instruments or sets of microphones.

I confess that when word of this event trickled into my remote hamlet, it was the trinity of Eric Clapton, Neil Young, and George Harrison that immediately caught my attention and made me thirst for weeks in advance. But the lasting impression of this evening was not of one of these superstars (though none of them disappointed in the least), but that nearly each and every of the other twenty-two artists/acts impressed me throughout the evening. There was a host of other legends: The Band, Johnny Cash, Tracy Chapman, Richie Havens, Chrissie Hynde, The O-Jays, Kris Kristofferson, Roger McGuinn, Willy Nelson, Tom Petty, Lou Reed, George Thorogood, Johnny Winter, Stevie Wonder, Ron Wood — each delivering on the promise of their reputation without tripping over their egos. There were others who were previously unknown but were also very impressive, such as Sophie B. Hawkins, and the C-cubed trio of Colvin, Carpenter, and Cash. And, of course, there was Bob Dylan — as cryptical and enigmatic as ever.

With this impressive lineup of talent that included ex-Dylan-partners The Band and The Heartbreakers, the only conspicuous absences which occurred to me were Joan Baez and a representative of the Grateful Dead. Bob Weir must have had other plans for his forty-fifth birthday.

The house band, Booker T. & The MG's, was superb. The lineup recalls both the Blues Brothers Band and late night television: Booker T. Jones on keyboards; G. E. Smith and Steve Cropper on guitar; Donald Duck Dunn on bass; Anton Fig and Jim Keltner on drums. They were the glue that held the evening together. Proving amazingly versatile, the house band not only achieved, but mastered, a multitude of styles as they handily accommodated the trademark sound of each artist in a smorgasbord of contemporary masters.

Score another victory for remote concert attendance: I had a wonderful time watching this show live in my living room. It made me ache for the day when the Grateful Dead revive pay-per-view broadcasts. The person who works out the marketing and logistical bugs of similar events will become a wealthy individual. While I will confess some jealousy of a friend who attended the concert, I am eternally grateful to have been allowed to enjoy it in absentia. I spun tape decks: video, DAT, and cassette. I cooked BBQ ribs and very spicy chicken wings. I drank fine beer, and cold clear water at a whim. And I still was able to relax and enjoy this great event with a better view than the best seat in Madison Square Garden.

Unfortunately (and contrary to profuse promises over the phone), the broadcast missed the first half-hour of music. Apparently the concert began with Booker T. & The MG's performing (appropriately) Gotta Serve Somebody. G. E. Smith then joined them for the rest of the evening. Four more songs ensued, one of them with Nancy Griffin and Carolyn Hester, and one with John Hammond, Jr. The video feed finally started with John Mellencamp, the third guest of the evening. He proved a good example to begin with — one of several artists that I knew primarily by reputation, and who favorably impressed me tonight. As with most of the musicians to follow, John Mellencamp's vocals were well phrased — I particularly liked his ironic tone on Leopardskin Pillbox Hat. It was immediately evident that each artist had worked very hard on his or her song(s) and had rehearsed with the house band. It was turned to advantage that they only played one or two each — the individual focus and effort on each song was intense, and the cumulative effort was far more than the sum of the parts. In addition to all this vocal expression, there were great instrumentals: from the violin solo during Like A Rolling Stone through the parade of leads from guitar masters Thorogood, Reed, Winter, Wood, Young, of course, Clapton.

The single performance I found most impressive was by an artist I had never heard before. Sophie B. Hawkins' rendition of I Want You was one of rare beauty, one which continues to thrill me even after being etched in my mind through countless repetitions. As the song started I found her beautiful seductive low voice bewitching. I was immediately impressed by her phrasing — it was clear that she had considered the words very carefully. Ms. Hawkins then demonstrated astounding versatility, jumping octaves on a whim with a voice as stunning in the high registers as it was sexy in the low. She has pegged the passion of life-and-death desire so viscerally that I still shiver when the warm bass and soothing backup vocals join Booker T.'s haunting keyboards and I know the ride is about to begin.

And there was so very much more to come! Clearly the most blistering guitar award was earned by Johnny Winter's vintage Firebird on a breathless tour of Highway 61. Next up was the single performer I most underestimated, Ron Wood (ashamedly, I have previously never fully appreciated his bad-boy guitar). Tonight I was amazed by his driving performance of Seven Days, by his guitar duels with G. E. Smith. But I am already in danger of enumerating each individual wonderful performance, and I have already compromised the deadline of DeadBase '92 to include this review... so onward!

The only troubled water was the appearance of Sinéad O'Connor, shortly after she had torn a photograph of the Pope on Saturday Night Live. The audience's reaction was as uniformly strong as it was polarized — a cacophony of boos and cheers erupted simultaneously from the crowd. While to my ears Sinéad bowed to a minority, it was a shame and supremely ironic that an artist would be booed off the stage for an act of political speech at a concert honoring Bob Dylan. In protest she sang a cappella the only non-Dylan number of the night, War by Bob Marley. In an ironic twist of religious speech, she was to have sung a song from Dylan's Christian period.

Sinéad also marked the end of the first cassette, and the start of the tape featuring The Trinity, and Bob himself. Neil Young was first up and was superb. It was strange to listen to him sing Tom Thumb Blues without any of Phil's alterations, but Neil performed as naturally as though he had been its author. His phrasing and sound has now claimed this song in my mind. Neil then turned in yet another historic version of All Along The Watchtower — a song boasting one of the most impressive résumés in the annals of rock guitar. Chrissie Hynde kept my faith on Dylan's classic of hope for the oppressed, I Shall Be Released. Then, legend number two: Eric. He warmed up with Love Minus Zero, No Limit (an admirable warm-up), and then neatly carved a place in Blues history for Don't Think Twice, It's Alright.

Again skipping in homage to deadlines missed, the final deity in the triumvirate was George Harrison. This was the first time I witnessed my first musical hero (before even Bob Dylan) performing live (albeit electronically). It is difficult to describe the occasion, save that it was an honor. If Not For You, a song he has already claimed for his own, easily exceeded All Things Must Pass. Mr. Harrison exhibited equal confidence on a song I had not heard him perform, Absolutely Sweet Marie — his ability to conjur energy has not atrophied. George Harrison should break his reclusion more often — he could easily have yet another great influence on the chronology of rock.

Petty and McGuinn each nailed important historical perspectives — I gloss over them only for the sake of expediency over credit-due. After The Trinity were done the only real question was: what about Bob? Mr. Dylan first paid homage to his heritage. I could have used a TelePrompTer to keep up with Song To Woody; the advantage of tape is being able to catch up with the likes of Bob Dylan. It's Alright Ma featured his classic cryptic commentary. Another TelePrompTer song, except I already knew those lyrics. Dylan is like Shakespeare: it helps to know the material going in. And like Shakespeare, Dylan is well worth the effort.

Although the concert reportedly closed with a solo performance of The Girl From The North Country by Bob Dylan, the broadcast concluded with the two preceding ensemble numbers. And what a gathering of legends it was, as the camera panned the crowded stage, I was overwhelmed by the depth and diversity of talent. Once again the song selections were also impeccable. On My Back Pages a host of greats traded verses and solos. For those of you who forgot to fill out your scorecards, here is what I came up with: v1: McGuinn; v2: Petty; v3: Young; lead: Clapton; v4: Clapton; v5: Dylan; v6: Harrison; lead: Young; chorus: Young (with great irony). With so many stars, it is hard to imagine how they were able to choose who was to do what — yet the logical progression was perfect and once again slighted-egos appeared unruffled. Finally, Heaven's Door once again proved itself (at least for the pay-per-view audience) the consummate encore.

Every artist I have omitted is worthy of many more pages of consideration. I shame myself by not paying homage to the talent not enumerated. If you missed the event, get the tapes (if you saw it, you should have them already). This entire broadcast is handily fit on two 100-minute cassettes; the flips are before Tracy Chapman, Neil Young, and George Harrison. For the video: fresh tape for Neil Young. As commercial videos and CDs become available for this concert it is likely that they will be worth purchasing to get a pristine commemoration of an historic event. I pray they are complete.

Although none can match Bob Dylan's, there are other amazing portfolios in contemporary music. It would be wonderful to have a similar tribute concert annually. One year it would be The Beatles, the next it could be The Stones, or The Who, or the Grateful Dead. They could even do another Dylan show with all different masterpieces, or two more concerts, or three...

12-05, 06-92 Compton - Sharon & Bill Weisman

Tempe has lousy drainage. They're obviously not equipped to deal with large volumes of water pouring down from the grey Arizona sky; huge puddles form in every low spot, daring you to gun your cheesy Chevy rental right through the middle so as to throw huge waves up on either side. The rain seems to have just ended a few minutes before the SouthWest 737 splashes to a landing at Sky Harbor, one damp hour from the Burbank airport where it was raining cats and dogs, wetting down the usual crowd of Deadheads who fly SouthWest out of Burbank. (On the way to Oakland for Halloween JGB shows they went up and down the aisle giving out handfuls of airline peanut packages and trick-or-treat candy to the other passengers.)

Since we only have carry-on luggage we're off the plane and into the rental car pretty quickly, and only get lost once trying to find the Tempe InnSuites. The puddle in the parking lot looks deep enough to swallow the Chevy. Checking in at the front desk, the clerk says "Don't tell anyone you're getting this rate! We're full up this weekend — when did you make these reservations?" "Uh, two months ago." She rolls her eyes in seeming disbelief that Deadheads would be capable of advanced planning. While we're talking, Ann comes by to say hi; she and Jeff are already checked in, and we make plans to carpool to the show tomorrow.

The InnSuites has nice big rooms with kitchenettes. Free coffee and microwave popcorn. Two TV's (one more than we have at home). We're hungry for more than microwave popcorn, so it's off to the Waffle House next door for a cheap and greasy dinner, then to bed.

Saturday morning, and it looks like it may turn out to be a nice day. Still some high clouds drifting by, remnants of the recent storm, and it's a little cool and breezy, but the sun is shining. First order of business is to drive down the street to the nearest big drugstore in search of a plastic tarp to sit on at the show — all of the ground we've seen so far has been wet, and we don't expect it to be any different out at the venue.

We've managed to miss the free continental breakfast by sleeping in, and the Waffle House has a long line of people trailing out the door, so we decide to drive off in search of better breakfast prospects. After some aimless cruising through the backstreets of Tempe, a decent coffee shop appears. The only other people eating there are four military men decked out in camouflage, who stare at us as if they'd never seen a tie-dye before.

Breakfast done, we go back to the InnSuites to pick up Ann and Jeff and head out to the venue. Traffic is backed up a ways at the offramp, but it's moving along well enough, and soon we're parked in the extremely muddy lot. After checking out the vending scene for a little while, we join the line at the entrance.

We found out later that while we were waiting to get in, a friend-of-a-friend was having a bad experience out in the parking lot. He had flown out from the East Coast that morning, and was cruising through the lots looking for people he knew. He spotted some friends of his standing around talking, and joined them. One of them lit a joint, took a hit, and passed it to him, and a few seconds later they were surrounded and arrested by six undercover officers dressed in tie-dyes and torn jeans. The arrestees were taken to a big tent where the police booking station was set up; on their way in they were all videotaped by the Phoenix TV news stations for broadcast on the six o'clock news. Ah, Arizona: come on vacation, leave on probation.

When the venue opens, there's the usual rush to find a good spot. Things were going a little slowly at first; the pack and body searchers were being more than usually thorough, until told to speed things up by their supervisors. Inside, the bottom part of the venue had been covered with a layer of hay in a vain attempt to ameliorate the waterlogged conditions. After the first couple of hours, and the impact of several thousand dancing, running, walking and skipping people, the lower reaches of Compton Terrace resemble a large bowl of mud.

The show starts with Good Times Roll, which sums up our mood pretty well. There is an older couple sitting on stage behind Vince; his parents. They seem to be enjoying the show, although they are only there for the first set, but they do get a birds-eye of Bobby struggling to remember the words to Hell In A Bucket, and, a little later, of Phil singing Just Like Tom Thumb's Blues. A nice Music Never Stopped to close out the first set, followed by the opportunity to find friends and socialize. Getting the tarp turned out to be a good idea; although we were high up enough in the terraces to avoid the mud bowl, the ground is still pretty damp. Beetles and earwigs emerge from the wet grass to scurry across our stuff.

Second set opens with a nice Scarlet -> Fire and Estimated into Drums and Space. Bill takes his shoes off and wanders down front into the mud bowl in search of better camera angles, and is latched onto by a totally crazed dude named Larry, who claims to be in search of publishable photographs. Larry leads Bill around the whole front of the venue, simultaneously pointing out photo opportunities, smoking a joint, and stopping to talk to people along the way in a rather semi-crazed speedy Neal Casady fashion, while a Wheel out of Space and Watchtower provide the soundtrack. Bill escapes Larry's clutches during Black Peter, and returns to the tarp to scrape dried mud off his feet and shake earwigs out of his shoes as the sun goes down behind the stage to melt into the desert horizon. The Dead play One More Saturday Night, and encore with The Weight. Then a dash to the parking lot to try and beat the traffic before gridlock sets in.

Back at the InnSuites we decide to try for a nice seafood dinner with Ann and Jeff, across the street at the Rusty Pelican. The food and drink are excellent, and the waitrons are discussing who has the day off tomorrow and is going to the show. Returning to the InnSuites, Sharon and Jeff decide to stay in the rooms, while Ann and Bill walk over to the Comfort Inn next door to hang out by the pool and meet friends staying there. T!ng comes by to talk for awhile, followed by an older guy with a large wine bottle and a couple of lemons, in search of a corkscrew. One Deadhead has driven his car up onto the landscaping next to the pool; his doors are flung open, and the stereo is blasting Victim Or The Crime. Our friend Phil emerges from the pool, and is forced to stand shivering in the cool night air so that the interesting clouds of steam rising from his body can be photographed. An older couple, obviously not there for the shows, keep peering disapprovingly from their second-floor room at the goings on below. They don't realize that what they are seeing is nothing compared to what happened Sunday night, when the Comfort Inn pool became the scene of a rather wild party featuring naked people and nitrous tanks, but that's another story for another storyteller. Back to the room, and sleep.

Sunday dawns into a beautiful sunshiney day for the trip back to the venue. Before the show starts, many people around us are talking about the problems they had getting to Tempe from Denver. Lots of cancelled flights, and closed roads due to accidents and the weather. Many people missed the Saturday show stranded in places like Albuquerque, and other points of transit between Denver and Tempe.

Its a gorgeous day, and everybody's feeling good and smiling as the opening chords of Here Comes Sunshine ring out. Yes! It's been so long since we've heard it live, and it sounds so good! Thank You! Saturday was good, but Sunday contains real hints of greatness; nice first set, with a smokin' Deal to close it out — this is it! The couple on the blanket in front of us with their two small boys looked to be having a great time also. The younger of the two, a toddler, would imitate the movements of the adults dancing around him. If you noticed, and made eye contact with him, he giggled and looked away. Several times he got so into nodding his head vigorously in time to the music that he lost his balance and fell down, a silly expression on his face. The kids seem instinctively to know good stuff when they hear it!

The second set flows like one long song, from Samson through the set-ending Throwing/Away, with a really sweet Brokedown encore, and we leave Compton Terrace at sunset again, feeling tired but good. Back to the room for dinner and bed; our flight out leaves Phoenix at 7 AM, and we're going straight from the airport to work on Monday morning, where our co-workers will wonder why our faces light up with big smiles when they ask, "So, how was your weekend?"

The top ten rules of audio taping; or have you ever wondered why every cartoon character has only four fingers?

On the night in question, this intrepid audio taper was apprehended by BGP thugs during the break for committing the unpardonable crime(?) of recording in FRONT of the soundboard! Lest I have to repeat myself again, and in the interest of dispelling preposterous rumors, permit me to recount the events of that evening. Not only will you find them amusing, but I hope you will learn a little something which may assist you in the event that you are confronted with a similar predicament.

Suffice it to say, I was busted. The BGP attempted unsuccessfully to wrest control of my equipment. Rule #1: At all costs, retain possession of your equipment. It has been said before, but it bears repeating, possession is 9/10ths of the law. BGP, rent-a-cops, the dead management, or any private party do not have the right to confiscate your possessions, equipment or tapes, for any reason. If they wish to sue you in civil court and secure a court order to do so, fine. But unless you willingly hand it over, their "confiscation" amounts to "conversion" — the civil wrong of taking possession of another person's property. As I was lead away, I stated that I was leaving the premises and attempted to do so unsuccessfully. Rule #2: A ticket is a license to enter the premises. Violate its terms, and the penalty is ejection. Period. I was forcibly taken to a security area and placed into a locked cage. Rule #3 and Mistake #1: Carry a pocket camera to collect evidence and otherwise intimidate. Because the BGP and/or rent-a-cops are not duly authorized law officers, this confinement is arguably false imprisonment. Best case scenario: they could be held liable in a civil suit provided you could substantiate monetary damages for your harm. Worst case scenario: imagine how much more fun it will be retelling this story to your friends with glossy color pictures! I insisted the police be called to the scene. Rule #4: The police are your public servants, and you are a taxpayer — I trust — therefore, make them work for you; after all, you are being held against your will. BGP gladly did so, and soon the real men in blue arrived. At first, they did as BGP had done, namely, demand the tapes. I refused and stated that I would have to be arrested. Fine and dandy they smirked. Rule #5: Call their bluff (poker face required). The cops proceeded to fish through their state statute book looking for that elusive statute on copyright infringement. Not finding it there, they called the FBI — being a federal law, you see, then, the District U. S. Attorney General-still nothing. Since this was by now a federal case, a police lieutenant sauntered into the room to "handle" matters.

After being advised that I would not turn over the tapes, he entered the cage. If I did not cooperate, he calmly warned, I would spend my weekend in the pokey for — get this — "breach of cop." Say what? Talking back to a cop, he snorted. OOOH! Rule #6 and Mistake #2: Keep your tape deck running. It is legal to record someone talking to you in public even without their knowledge. Best case scenario: have the smart ass kicked-off the force. Worst case scenario: makes great tape filler! It was mano-a-mano; he ducked behind me, opened my pack and grabbed my microphone. Rule #7: Do not resist a policeman, ever. Rule #8: There are no exceptions to Rule #7. If a cop violates your rights, you can have your day in court. He facetiously asked me what would happen if he dropped it. Rule #9 and Mistake #3: Buy some balls of steel and carry them with you at all times. Unfortunately, I left mine in my other pants. I blinked, nay, I winced. I handed over the tapes.

It was during the ensuing wait that I had the curious thought about cartoon characters. Perhaps, it has due to the fact that I had not noticed an opposable thumb on the officer. Be that as it may, at about this time the Dead's tour manager attempted to give the police officers a lesson in the law. He explained that the ticket stated that taping in front of the board was illegal; therefore, I had breached the ticket contract, and, accordingly, I should be arrested. None of which, of course, is factually or legally accurate. Fortunately, the police officers knew more about the law than he did. Rule #10: There is always the chance of running into a bad cop who will arrest you even though he has no grounds to do so. His "mistake" is your misfortune. To that extent, I was lucky, for the police led me out of the coliseum and, as I walked through the gate, they handed me back my tapes.

I solemnly swear that the above events are true and accurate. As for the legal advice, well, you get what you pay for. Happy recording!

12-16-92 Oakland - Mike Dolgushkin

My co-worker returned Sunday's favor and covered the end of my shift on this night. Before I left I got a call from my friend Pam (who I believe is also writing about this show) asking me to wait at the shop for her, so I did. It's always a pleasure to have company on the BART ride.

After drinking voluminous amounts of Coca-Cola backstage I headed once again for the pit; just in time to get a prime viewing spot. The band shortly appeared and kicked things off with Feel Like a Stranger. Very tight. Vince played good organ, Jerry's leads were right on target and Bob played some tasty R & B flavored licks. A funky (yes, funky) Brown-Eyed Women followed. A pleasantly different version of what I think is an overplayed song these days. The Same Thing was infused with a bongo sound, courtesy of the over-amplified kick drums. The Same Thing with a bongo beat! Whooeee! Weir stepped into his role as growling bluesman and even took a lead guitar break at the end of the song. Jerry, of course, turned in a nice slide solo earlier. Loose Lucy had a solid groove, nice piano work and — hooray — Phil became audible! Then, naturally, it was time for Bobby's Dylan cover and we got Memphis Blues Again. Very fiery. The bongo beat was back, Vince played harpsichord and Bob put the rasp both in his voice and his guitar. Phil was LOUD now! Row Jimmy followed with a very precise rhythm. Jerry laid down some inspired axe work and Vince got a solo in the second break. This version is also notable for its chunka-chunka ending. A massive Let it Grow then roared us to the break.

Let me preface my description of the second set by saying that Phil was extremely loud all the way through. When I listen to the tape I have to turn the bass all the way down so as not to ruin my speakers. A fat and chunky Shakedown opened the set, complete with Weir's fly buzzing during the jam and those neat new chord changes at the end. This led directly into Samson and Delilah, which featured hot bass, distorted rhythm and a wild jam at the end. The inevitable Ship of Fools followed, notable for a change in lyric — "fifty years upon my head." Then "THREE... FIVE... SEVEN... EIGHT... NINE... TEN" — Playing in the Band! Yow! Much better than the one I heard in February. Weir's guitar sounded like big sheets of metal crashing together. During the jam Jerry played the flute, then switched to normal guitar after which the tempo picked up. Dissonance crept in, then retreated. Weir's guitar was meowing. The dissonance returned. Weir's guitar then sounded rather like a wounded mammoth.

Drums started on the Playin' jam theme but soon started getting very tribal sounding. We found ourselves in an ancient underground temple. Lava was flowing, a volcano was nearby. So were large fault lines; much seismic scraping was taking place. Here were steam vents and — what 's this? Pterodactyl calls! We were in THE LOST WORLD! We stayed there into Space, then started hearing overground sounds. Horns. Sirens. A waterfall. Birds chirping in unison. So nice to be back in the sunshine! An unlikely place for Dark Star to reappear, but that's exactly what happened.

Dark Star's rhythm was a little slippery until Billy and Mickey came back. Not much time elapsed before the second verse; Jerry muffled the end. I think he likes the words to Dark Star about as much as he likes the words to Cryptical Envelopment. A cool jam ensued; Bob was playing low percussive accents while Vince was imitating a piccolo. Jerry started power rushing while Bob did these loud barks. Then — literally out of nowhere — came All Along the Watchtower! Absolutely rippin'! Phil was over the top, Jerry played some very Hendrix-like leads and Bob got into this siren call mode. This settled ever so gently into Stella Blue. Huh? Stella Blue? Again? Didn't they play it the first night? All of a sudden I wasn't sure. Maybe it was Black Peter and I thought it was Stella Blue. After all, I was out in the lobby when they did it. I've mistaken Mama Tried for Me and My Uncle under similar circumstances. No one I asked after the show was any help either. "Did they do Stella Blue the first night? Gee, I don't remember." Anyway, Stella Blue was sweet as always, then Bob played the intro to Good Lovin'. Unfortunately Jerry was still lost somewhere in Stella Blue. It took Billy and Mickey to wake him up. What a rousing Good Lovin'! Weir played trombone and Vince got down with some hot piano. The middle break was extended just like the 1977-78 renditions. And — Weir's rap at the end was hysterical. "Everybody everywhere I just don't care" and "practice makes perfect so gimme good lovin'." The end of the song was very loud and soupy.

We were all on such a high after that. Grins were everywhere. With the mood the crowd was in there was only one possible encore. Casey Jones. Nothing else would have been right. The audience reaction when it began was unreal. Casey Jones was rough, sloppy and rather out of tune. Not to mention the lyrics — "trouble that train, drivin' cocaine?" Come on, you guys! Still, it was perfect. We went backstage and hung out awhile because we were having too much fun to leave. Eventually (after some yummy chocolate cake — thanks, Dennis!) we went home, bringing Natalie and Richie with us. A show like that always results in house guests.

02-23-93 Oakland Coliseum - Mike Dolgushkin

The day of this show my friend Pam (who wrote some reviews for DeadBase '92 and will hopefully write some for this book as well) called me with a request. It seems that her Dad was a friend of Ornette Coleman. Could I arrange for her to come backstage and say hi? I said I'd see what I could do, so I called one of the big kahunas at the Grateful Dead office. He told me we'd have to wing it and see what happened.

Before Ornette's set I wandered around backstage trying to locate his room. I had no success. Afterwards I checked out his set from various parts of the Coliseum. I know I said this in DeadBase '92, but venues of this size are not meant for Jazz. The sound gets washed out. Not that Ornette didn't play well; he and his band did some dense stuff, and I enjoyed the hell out of it. Jerry's joining in at the end of the set got a big rise out of the crowd, naturally.

During the set break I found Pam. I brought her down to the backstage entrance, whereupon I wandered back once again in search of Ornette's room. I finally found it, tucked away off to the side. A sizable crowd was gathered attempting to gain entrance while Ornette's manager was busy telling everyone to get lost. I hung out for a short time hoping I could plead my case, but never got the opportunity. I reported back to Pam, telling her I'd done all I could. Just then a man standing next to us handed Pam his extra pass. Bingo! I took her backstage, showed her where Ornette's room was and told her she was on her own.

I found my housemates John and Shirley in the seats on Phil's side about a third of the way back. Perfect. The Dead opened with Cold Rain and Snow, always a good sign. The first set was everything that of the night before was not-tight, together, upbeat. Memphis Blues Again was a monster. Then — imagine everyone's surprise when Phil stepped up to his mic and sang a new song! I learned later that this was Broken Arrow, penned by none other than Robbie Robertson. The song has a beautiful melody, sensitive lyrics and a high emotional content. Maybe Phil should consider doing more covers. Way To Go Home was next, in an unusual first set slot, an the set came to a finish with a rip-roarin', rip-snortin', rootin'-tootin' Johnny B. Goode. It's the perfect place for that song, a move that the Dead have wisely continued. Jerry displayed more energy on Johnny B. Goode than he had all year thus far.

At the break I went backstage and found Pam. She told me she'd talked to Ornette and that he was glad to see her. I told her I'd meet her in the party room in a little while; I had to hit the bathroom first. On the way back I got waylaid by Gina and Little Ricky in the kids' room. Finally making it back to the party room I saw James Olness from BGP archives, who asked me if I wanted to help push the lead float in the parade. Sure, I'll try anything once. I went back to where the parade was assembling and stationed myself at the lead float — THE SHIP OF FOOLS — along with Paul Grushkin, Kashia and some other characters. Behind us were the BGP disco babes, complete with a Night Fever soundtrack. Well, the Dead began Iko Iko and the parade commenced with Mr. Williams in the lead, just like the old days at the Kaiser. I can't begin to describe what a rush it was, how totally FUN it was, even though we had an anxious few minutes when a guy in a wheelchair decided to hitch a ride on our float. NO, YOU IDIOT! YOU'RE GONNA HURT YOURSELF! He didn't. Since I was in the front of the parade I missed the float featuring the President of the United States inhaling a big one, but we did swing around in time to catch the float with the large, Griffin-esque eyeballs. We slipped out the back, went into the parking lot and wound up back inside behind the party room and Rock Med.

I returned to my seat as the Dead began Corinna, which proved to be a fine, punchy version. Lazy River Road was next. My impressions were not favorable. What's with all these rivers and roads, anyway? Aah, whatever, this song won't last long. They'll dump it. (Who's got the crow. I'll eat it now). The band charged into Playing In The Band; clearly Ornette was having an effect on them even before he sat in, as the song dissolved into a scary, atonal, arrhythmic Jumble of bizaarity. I thought the roof might blow off; the pressure was that intense. During drums a gent named Graham Wiggins sat in on didgeridoo, providing a unique accompaniment to the usual percussion.

Ornette finally made his appearance during Space. He certainly felt right at home during this non-structured interlude but it was fascinating to watch the rest of the band, notably Jerry and Phil, try to steer him into The Other One. Ornette was either not getting it or purposely ignoring it. They finally got it going by looking straight at Ornette and stating the theme as obviously as possible. The result of all this was one of the longest Other One intros in recent memory. Ornette fit into The Other One okay but seemed rather lost during Stella Blue. Lovelight worked out fine. I don't know, given the circumstances maybe they should have done what they used to do and space for the rest of the show, eventually capping it off with We Bid You Goodnight. No matter, this was one hot show.

03-17-93 Cap Centre - John W. Scott

I awoke to an ugly ugly, grey grey, wet wet, day day. And it was supposed to turn fouler still: more precipitation, and dropping temperatures promised to transform the inconvenient rain to dangerous sleet and snow. Fortunately, when we arrived a little after 5:00 it was raining, but not very hard; chilly, but not actually cold (by New Hampshire standards, anyway). The rain even abated around 5:30; the grey and the puddles limited vending to hit and run escapades again. The yellow jackets performed their requisite patrols, politely telling people to close it down; they were surprisingly mellow, and also effective. Again I was impressed by the exceptionally polite searches, and by the staff in general. While this venue's infamous unfriendly reputation has largely been earned by the Prince George's County's zealous police force, venue staff here has often been (aggressive) — not on this stand. I allowed myself to fantasize that this kinder, gentler situation was a result of the new administration. Just maybe I was not far off the mark.

My seats were nice and low on Jerry's side. From that perspective, the sound was excellent. From a different one, just one section above us, three friends concurred that it was horrible, ruining the show for them. Given the performance, I assume that was hyperbole. As I settled in I was pleased to notice a friend had been assigned neighboring seats. We engaged in small talk; he mentioned that the soundcheck last night had included a cover of Lucy In The Sky With Diamonds, and that Vince had personally told him to expect it in the near future. I smiled politely to mask my skepticism: yeah, right — ugly rumors might as well be beautiful.

The first set was solid. Shakedown opened the show, more generous in execution than length, though I suppose that in any year with a scant five versions, twelve minutes was more than enough. The remainder of the first set was well executed, but I was surprised when the new material at the end excelled beyond the standard first-set fodder. In the meantime, Wang Dang Doodle was okay, as was Lazy River Road (though to my ears it is perhaps the weakest of the new material, lacking both the opportunity for improvisation and for passion). Desolation Row featured some pretty piano, but was otherwise quite average; Ramble On Rose was boringly competent.

At Eternity, however, I found myself pricking up my ears. Frankly, I had tempered my expectations of the new material (wary of too much too fast), and some preliminary reports of this song in particular were less than flattering. I was very pleasantly surprised to find Eternity exceptionally engaging, the most promising new song I had heard at the Capital Centre thus far. It had a very different sound from any of the band's previous material: a wonderful slinky Blues nightclub feel. Like a Jazz quartet (or sextet), it seemed that everyone got their chance at soloing, each taking it quite seriously. The first set concluded with another winsome new song: Liberty mixed a catchy beat with clever lyrics. Phil and Vince were both strong co-contributors, but Hunter and Garcia deserve serious kudos for this one. I finished the set optimistic about the new material, and about the promise of the rest of the show. My optimism proved well grounded on both accounts.

Backstage was much more crowded than on the previous night. There were another Washington bigwig or two with their families; one who looked stereotypically like a Republican Congressman — quite the fish out of water. My Washington experience was capped when a friend's brother complimented me on my Clinton/Gore tie-dye, then noted that since we last met he had change jobs — he is now prominently employed in the Vice President's office. Imagine that, a genuine Deadhead working in the White House. He said Al Gore was intrigued by the concerts, and disappointed that he was too busy to attend this run — such are the burdens of responsibility. He also recounted an anecdote from the campaign — with the VP-to-be weary over bleak poll numbers, this enterprising employee popped a version of Uncle John's Band on the charter plane's sound system and received a broad smile and thumbs-up from Mr. Gore in return. "Well, the first days are the hardest days..."

The second set: WOW!

I returned to my seat just in time for the start of the second set, and what a second set it was. I had recently written some software to roughly predict which songs the Dead might play at a given concert. Given the whimsical nature of the Grateful Dead and their massive play list, this is an unrealistic task at best. However, on this particular evening the rather crude algorithms of the DeadBase Prognosticator performed respectably in suggesting most of the songs that were actually played. The second set, however showed not only its strengths (even Dark Star was "due"), but its glaring insufficiencies: it was obviously incapable of predicting neither surprises nor the intensity (or lack thereof) of the performance. Indeed, it was not predictability, but the latter two forms of x-chemistry that made this concert one to remember.

The opening Picasso Moon was strongly forecast, and well-enough performed (not to despair). Crazy Fingers (also foretold) was more welcome and attractive. Playin continued the trend, brisk and very strong. More importantly, it set the stage for the marvelous series of improvisations that were to follow, including that greatest jam... (but I am getting ahead of myself). The first improvisation was well grounded in a beautiful theme. Nestled in Playin In The Band, Jerry revealed a breathtaking melody, a seductive Spanish strain, perhaps too concrete to be haphazard. While I was still reveling in the wake of this sumptuous theme, IT echoed though the amassing space — I could hear the distant and clarion call — "Yes, it is... I can hear it folks, it really is Dark Star." And it certainly was: a wonderful full rendition, heartily jammed with a strong rooting in the enchanting melody. It was only one verse, as seems to be the style these days — the first one, of course. While I respect the collective wisdom of our poll results, this version is underrated in Feedback '93. With an extended jam afterwards, I consider this (the longest of the year) to be the strongest Dark Star in a year of rather limited versions. Even after Jerry left, the rest of the band jammed on for a short while longer.

The drums seemed solid enough, but I was too blissed to pay them the attention they most certainly deserved. The percussion segment was among the shortest of the year. Afterwards there was very little Space, per se. It was much more cohesive than the normal freeform explorations. The Other One was pretty obvious early on, but the Dead took a fantastic detour. Jerry went off with a very strong and complete performance of the Two Soldiers (AKA Handsome Cabin Boy/Susie McGuire) theme. It was very Irish, quite wonderful, and certainly suited the holiday. Vince, absent for most of the Space, returned in time for this wonder.

After this happy diversion, the Dead quickly returned to The Other One. It was hot, hot, hot — one of the best I have heard live in a while. Phil didn't get an opportunity for an introduction, but he supported the song every beat of the way, and belted out the chorus after the second verse. It is nice to have the binoculars at times. Then I was treated to my debut of Days Between. It was a little ragged in places (particularly the vocals), but like most of the current crop, showed lots of promise. Haunting and beautiful, it began with a delicate passage, similar to Mountains Of The Moon. There were also rather intense moments, thanks often to Phil. Vince was good too. When the set closed with a rousing Good Lovin I turned to my rumormongering friend and said that he might get his wish for an encore. They were certainly playing well enough.

Apparently I still did not believe it. For as the band returned for the encore, the swelling reality was unbearable. It can't possibly be true. It is. Jerry is singing Lucy In The Sky! Absolutely amazing! They confidently nailed this debut. FANtastic! The drummers hit their very important cues, the vocals were strong and the effort was tight, tight, tight. Here was a premiere that exceeded the subsequent versions of 1993.

Several times during this show I found myself hoping for some song or direction beyond all reason, and then having my wish magically answered. Perhaps I have gotten so used to the disappointment of unreasonable expectations that this experience was absolutely intoxicating. Full of impressive new material, favorite standards, and wonderful surprises, this was a classic Spring Tour concert. Just what the doctor ordered after a long hard winter.

03-24-93 UNC - Elspeth Cusack & Philip Williams

We set off on the long drive to Chapel Hill in high spirits. We'd heard three good shows, yet there was a wealth of great material we could still look forward to. The first night at Chapel Hill proved to be the one we had traveled from Britain to hear. The sound was astounding, as good as I've ever heard at an indoor show. The show opened at a cracking pace with Jack Straw, followed by another tale of violent shoot-outs, Stagger Lee. This set sparkled all the way through, Tennessee Jed in particular being appreciated by the southern crowd. (On the subject of violence in Dead lyrics, I was amused to be told by one of the American friends we were traveling with that she had met young hippie Deadheads who, perceiving the Dead as synonymous with love and peace, simply refuse to believe that Bobby shoots his uncle! Apparently they have a convoluted alternative explanation of who the "dead ass" belongs to and how it comes to be "there at the side of the road." Deadheads, don't you just love 'em!)

I failed to detect anything familiar as the boys tuned up for the second set. I was in fact about to get my number one wish for the tour granted by my first live Here Comes Sunshine, in a version starting with the four-part harmony chorus. It was great after 20 years to hear Jerry sing the title lines to Wake Of The Flood, one of my favourite Dead albums. Next, Bobby turned to the drummers, so I knew this was the night for Playing In The Band. It was spacy and intense, so it was no surprise when the opening triplets of Crazy Fingers emerged from the jam. But Jerry wasn't going to get his way quite yet — instead, Phil insisted on Box Of Rain, to my delight. Space evolved into the full-blown Spanish Jam hinted at a few nights earlier, and that in turn gave way to a sparkling Goin' Down The Road. Throwing Stones and Not Fade Away brought the set to a fine close.

Then came the moment we'd been counting on since hearing about Landover. We were sure this would be the night, and we were right! You can hardly begin to imagine the audience reaction as we heard the opening notes of Lucy In The Sky With Diamonds! The music was almost completely drowned out. But the Dead play the Beatles with loving care, and I heard enough of Lucy to make me proud to be British! Mind you, I think the band should be careful — a little of this flashy 60s nostalgia goes a long way. But there is no doubt that the Dead and Lucy are a magic combination, and once more we were sent grinning homewards.

Confirming that there was magic in the air that night, something quite unprecedented happened in the taper section. Half an hour before show time Dan Healy gave out three patches to the soundboard, allowing about 30 decks in all to get a soundboard feed! This privilege created absolute madness, as tapers ripped up the cables for their microphones in desperate attempts to patch into one of the soundboard chains. I had a loge seat close to the tapers section but raised high above it. This meant that I could see that something unusual was happening, but I couldn't hear anything. Philip was taping that night so let him tell the story in his own words:

"I was taping with one of our Oakland friends — let's call him the Master Taper. We'd been running into another taper on this tour, who kept calling me the Englishman. So, I called him the Little American. (Well, simply calling him the American wouldn't have been very helpful!) Anyway, before the show started the Little American was BSing with Healy. The arena was so short the taping pit was almost on the soundboard. They were talking about fob (front of board) taping and how someone had recently been busted for running a four track digital reel to reel upfront.

"The Little American said to Healy that it wouldn't be necessary to tape up front if he gave us soundboard patches. They also talked about mic stands not being necessary if Healy gave a patch. Healy said he didn't care about the mic stands as they didn't get in his way. The Little American complained that when he was on the West Coast without mics the only patch he could get was fob (bullshit!). Healy went on to say that was no excuse for fob taping but that if he gave a patch the tapers would fuck up and short out his feed. It was pointed out to Healy that he could buffer the feed to us.

"Just then Healy went to relax on his couch and our friend the Master Taper called me over to run his mic cables from his mic stand to our seats, about ten seats away. I had just finished duct taping down the mic cables when Healy produced two boxes (left and right) each with three xlr connections. He proceeded to lecture the tapers on impedance (no more than seven or eight decks to be chained out of each xlr connection) and said that he was buffered so if we were greedy it would only fuck up all the tapers. The Master Taper called to his girlfriend to pass his spare cables — everyone else was rushing round to get their cables untaped from the floor! Being so quick thinking, the Master Taper got one of the connections! I rushed off to get my deck to be first out — it is a Technics SV255 with xlr inputs. In the excitement I connected the battery the wrong way round and fried the deck. What a time to do something like that! Sadly, I removed my deck and after untaping the Master Taper's mic cables got out of the way and sulked for the rest of the show. In the end, I estimate that 30 to 40 decks were patched into the board, about two-thirds of them DAT decks. There was a security man whose sole job was to hold on to Healy's patch boxes. The decks were mostly perched on the back of the soundboard itself. At the interval Healy asked us 'Who's the greatest?' and we all chorused, 'You are, Dan!'

"All the tapes from that night have some static on them, though I barely notice it and in general the sound is very good. I am not sure of the source of the static, but everyone got it. Since the patch bay was not buffered between ports, it could have been one of us that caused it but it could also have been Healy's feed. It seems there was quite a bit of static in one of the house PA speakers, which may or may not have been related.

"We spent the following morning making a thank you card, the Master Taper's idea. A modified and much decorated Secretaries' Day card was used — it was all we could find, so we turned the secretary into a hippie taper! The Master Taper got everyone in the taping pit to sign and the card was presented to Healy on the second night of the run. The Little American had also collected $165 for the Rex Foundation. Healy was visibly touched. However, at the break he gave the money back saying that he couldn't accept it because the IRS might say that he sold a board patch! He was effusive in his thanks for the cards, both our big one and the other smaller ones given to him, but suggested that the money be sent directly to Rex.

"Also on the second night Healy told us that we should all write to Phil because he was the only band member who complained about him giving a board patch to the tapers!"

03-27-93 Knickerbocker - John W. Scott

Finally Mother Nature seemed to get it right. My departure for Albany seemed much more appropriate for spring tour than had my storm-rooted hegira to Cap Centre, and much more civilized than last year's deep freeze in the Empire State's capitol. Saturday's weather was absolutely gorgeous: sunny, and sixty-five degrees. As I drove the beautiful winding coils of Route 9 there was still plenty of snow on the ground in Vermont (driving without dark glasses would have been hazardous), snow which mysteriously disappeared to mere patches at the New York State line. Instant Spring.

Thanks to a friend with a discount reservation, I checked in to one of the capitol region's classier hotels. Any luxury hotel with the class not to look down its nose at a guest registering in a Greenpeace t-shirt is truly of exceptional caliber — I was impressed. When I asked various folks from housekeeping what they thought of Deadheads, they gave us favorable reviews: generally polite and friendly, but we do tend to keep the do not disturb signs on late, then expect the rooms to be made up immediately thereafter.

I have long suspected that some Bay-Area Deadheads take local shows for granted to the point of casual indifference. East-Coast Deadheads cannot afford to be so picky. Forced to frequent sterile and often remote locations such as Cap Centre and Nassau, we take all we can get. The chilly reception from most communities often makes an East Coast tour seem more business trip than vacation, and still we dutifully trudge our lemming path from city to city. Our past was not so bleak: Portland, Rochester, Hartford, Providence, Glens Falls, and even Cape Cod have hosted friendly and memorable concerts in their hey-days. Boston comes close; though loaded with enough charm to mask the myriad inadequacies of an obsolete arena, it still cannot match the phenomenal friendliness of Albany (nor the ultimate bonus of a new facility). The capital of the Empire State continues to approximate (in East Coast slang) the Bay Area feeling of seeing the Dead at home: a warm place where we are always welcome. Even if this hospitality is merely a crass appreciation of fiscal self-interest, at a time when fewer and fewer municipalities deign to allow Deadheads to enter their city limits it is wonderful for the prodigal to return where they are wanted.

When I had driven through town at 3:00, the scene was already bustling, when I returned at 5:00 it was packed. I was disappointed, even outraged, that my favored parking lot had boosted its concert parking fee to $11 — a hand-drawn number carelessly pasted over the existing event fee painted on the signs. After a moment's hesitation, I still parked there — it appeared that they had us precisely calculated. Once again Albany hosted an incredible vending scene, permitting up a huge vending area in which the masses could shop, eat, relax, and enjoy. The scene was complemented by glorious weather, and everyone was in a good mood — even the police were smiling and accommodating. This town never ceases to amaze me with their tolerance and hospitality.

There were many impressive booths and likely fifty blankets laid out covered in wares. Prominently featured, of course, were upscale beer and food: the usual veggie fare, falafel, gyros, burritos, egg rolls, pizza, a Mexican food truck. There were several huge shirts stands, four or five with a dozen or more designs (happily, there was relatively little in the way of GD design rip-offs). Also available were lots of other clothing, jewelry, devil sticks, "tobacco" pipes, lots of stickers, the Shakedown Street/Terrapin Station signs. It was quite the bazaar. My purchases featured a round of tie-dyed shirts for the family back home (a mainstay of their summer wardrobe — it is hard to find good tie-dyes for children in the real world).

There was a twin downside to this wonderful scene: too few tickets available for purchase, too much LSD. Thousands of people were looking to get into the concert — this was certainly the hardest ticket of the tour (Feedback '93 indicates it was the hardest of the year). I saw dozens of elaborate signs, many of them seeking a "birthday" ticket (one actually displayed the driver's license as proof). At least the number of miracle seekers seemed down a little bit. On a more ominous note: the papers reported 45 arrests over the weekend — apparently the police do a successful undercover operation seeking large acid vendors. I can't say that I blame them given the brazen and irresponsible commerce that transpired. The reports made the actual arrests sound most amicable; it appears Deadheads are more docile and good-humored than most of their detainees. The police also demonstrated measured restraint as there was a fair amount of open pot smoking going unchecked.

As is tradition in Albany, getting into the venue was more of a labor than it needed to be. The Knickerbocker always seems to have an extra bottle neck or two when compare with most other venues. This time there was an additional twist: the searches were not same-sex. I was frisked by women both the latter two nights, and saw many women being frisked by men. I never witnessed anything untoward, but still was very uncomfortable

— I can only imagine how the women felt. Once inside, I was a happy Deadhead — a friend blessed me with my best seat of the tour: third row, in front of Jerry. I was pleased to note that Jerry really did look great, especially from that close.

This was a hot show, a solid best-show-of-the-run, to be followed by a gentle decline to the merely good. It these things could be planned, it would be preferable to reverse the order, saving the best for last. However, I was sated for the run by their performance tonight; that is more than enough. I don't think I could have designed a better first set within realistic expectations. Bucket was okay, and it was only uphill from there. Bertha was hot, even Jerry really had to move. Musically, the second half of the set was very strong, from the beautiful Broken Arrow, through the bassy bouncing Loose Lucy and Cassidy, to my personal debut of Casey Jones. What fun!

Candace got her money's worth from the projector tonight; almost every song featured a slide — Bucket: parking lot scene; Peggy-O: old engravings including a pair of fiddlers (male and female), a banjo player, and a tambourine dancer; Broken Arrow: yellow roses; Loose Lucy: parking lot scene again. She tended to leave the slides in place for most (if not all) of a song, ever changing the images by overlaying various colors and shapes of light. Afterwards, Candace said that they were having lots of technical problems with lights going down, particularly in the first set. I thought they covered very nicely.

While it is not altogether uncommon for Eyes Of The World to open a set these days, the selection never ceases to thrill me. Estimated Prophet was also welcome — Phil's contributions rounded this version out very nicely. We were then visited by Bliss — incarnate this time as Comes A Time. Beautiful and tantalizingly well-considered, it was everything a song of this stature deserved in the way of a homecoming after an eighteen-month sabbatical. By itself, Comes A Time justified my trip to Albany. Corinna, backed by strong drum and beats, delivered us to Drumz.

The percussion portion of Drumz was relatively long; Mickey wailed on the big drum for most of it. There was no beam segment — the drummers left the stage after a short MIDI transition. When the rest of the band reappeared, Phil had removed his blue long-sleeve shirt to reveal a white t-shirt with a self-portrait by Van Gogh. Jerry had a music stand set up for him with the initials VES (very exciting stuff?). What was it for?

Post-Drumz was standard. Bobby drew the small and big wheels in the air over his head for Wheel. Watchtower was pretty hot. This song has been oft-neutered for quite a while, but tonight's version was more impressive than most. As Jerry dug in, Bobby stood even farther back from his microphone to keep out of the way. The screens featured nighttime skyscrapers from below, with stars above — a modern interpretation of this song. The riddle of the music stand was solved when Jerry used it to refresh his memory during Days Between. The song was much smoother than at Cap Centre, but it never even approached the intensity of the St. Patrick's night version. Tonight's was delicate, and very pretty — but that was not an entirely satisfactory tradeoff. Bill Clinton had made the Saturday Night lyrics, but there was no mention of Hillary. The Dead encored with I Fought The Law. Still novel for many, it provoked lots of laughs, particularly among those who hadn't heard it yet.

After the show I went back to the hotel and hung out in the bar with friends. Imagine our surprise when Jerry, Bob, Vince, and a host of GD VIPs (Healy, Popick, etc.) appeared and socialized until 2 AM. I was pleased to note that Deadheads (and there were many of us) left them alone, particularly impressive as their table was next to a traffic lane. Jerry and Bob both looked to be in very good spirits, pleased with a solid evening's work.

It was an entirely different scene back at the hotel bar on the following night. Apparently the word had gotten out and the place was mobbed by Deadheads. Somehow the gang was able to ignore the slack-jawed gawkers who encircled them. Bobby just sat on the floor, while Jerry was so supremely unselfconscious as to neck with his current flame. Now that they have been located, I would not be surprised if the Grateful Dead find different accomodations if they ever return to Albany. I will be surprised if they can find better ones.

05-16-93 Las Vegas – Rob Winkler

On Sunday, we again got to the parking lot early, and again Steve jumped right in line. As the weekend went on, the line got extremely long earlier and earlier, and if we'd gotten there half an hour later, Steve would have been standing in a line wrapped halfway around the stadium.

Again he went for bleachers in the Phil Zone, and this time we were almost as close as we could get without being in the special guest seating. I liked the sound much better in the field in front of the soundboard, but all the people pushing in front of us and stepping on us during the intermission on Friday kept us from going back down there. This time we were deep into the Phil Zone, and at times Vince's keyboards were very difficult to hear where we were. It was kind of like we were at the bottom of a well, and Vince's keyboard was at the top, and the amps were pointed up at the sky so the only sound we could hear was the echo off the clouds. (That came to me in an altered state.)

Again Sting came on at 2:00, just like the ticket stub said he would. It's unusual for any concert to start on time these days, so Sting's punctuality was welcome. This day he was fired up, and his set was much different from the previous two days. We had heard him sound checking "Fortress Around My Heart," "Spirits in the Material World," and Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze" while we were in the parking lot. Only "Spirits..." didn't end up getting played. He opened with the Beatles' "Blackbird," and we knew tonight would be kinda special. He wowed us with a combination of new stuff and classics, including "Children's Crusade" and "Fortress..." before blowing us away with "Purple Haze."

At this point David Sancious played guitar and showed us what a talented guitarist he is. He continued playing guitar on the next song, the Police classic "Message in a Bottle." Later Sting treated us to the upbeat new "Seven Days" and another Beatles' song, "Penny Lane." At the end of his show, he got a rousing ovation and played his only encore of the weekend. After that, everyone from the Dead gathered at the right side of the stage and applauded in full view of everyone in the stadium.

During this day, the skies were already cloudy when we awoke, and they remained cloudy all morning and early afternoon. When the Dead came on, though, the skies seemed to clear a little. The Dead didn't come on a minute too soon, either, for we had been forced to listen to Elvis over the sound system since the end of the Sting show (this would only happen in Vegas). Once the Dead took the stage, I was really hoping for a Shakedown, and I thought maybe we'd get it since the logo appeared on Sunday's ticket. Those things are never to be, though.

A rousing Touch of Grey opened instead, during which Jerry forgot several lyrics to one of the verses. Bobby did Walkin' Blues, and Jerry launched immediately into a hot Althea. A minor vocal error had Ophelia "dreaming and perchance to sleep," and then it was onto a hot Masterpiece. The only thing that kept this from being a superb version was Bobby singing the wrong words to the last chorus. Jerry gave us a really pretty Row Jimmy with a nice bouncy ending. During the song Bobby used his guitar as an oar and simulated "rowing" on at least one of the choruses (maybe he always does that, but I had never seen it before.) Bobby followed with a great Cassidy, featuring a tremendous jam with amazing lead guitar from Jerry. What would be next: Deal? Might As Well? Don't Ease? Instead, Bobby surprised us at that point by announcing that they were taking a short break. What? A six-song first set that starts with Touch and ends with Cassidy? I don't know, pretty soon it'll be five and four song first sets.

The "rhythm devils" pounded away at the Southeast corner of the field during the intermission, and a plethora of huge beach balls bounced around the field while people in the stands did the wave. The usual intermission entertainment. They came back on for the second set and toyed around with the Addam's Family theme before launching into a powerful Samson and Delilah. Still a chance for Shakedown, but instead it was Help On The Way. Jerry again stuck to the conventional guitar with no MIDI during Slipknot!, but kept it very interesting. By the time they rolled into Franklin's Tower, they were smoking!

Vince started off the song with a good solo and played another great one later in the song. Jerry's solo after "If you get confused listen to the music play" practically shook down the stadium, though. Looks Like Rain followed, with Jerry playing lots of bright sparkly fills throughout most of the song. He seemed to have some problems near the end, around the last chorus, and we couldn't hear any lead guitar for several minutes. I thought he wasn't playing any at the time, but it's possible he was playing some MIDI soloing that couldn't be heard in our part of the stadium. This is where Bobby's voice bit the dust, though, as he virtually sang his lungs out in an incredible effort.

Eventually Jerry's guitar became audible again, and the combination of great soloing and absolutely tremendous vocals closed the song out in thundering fashion. Jerry immediately started up the opening chords to Terrapin—could this get any better? They don't seem to play Dark Star in Vegas, so I guess this is about the next best thing. I wish we hadn't been so far into the Phil Zone for this, because we couldn't hear any of Mickey's drumming at all — only Bill's snares. Mickey has a way of really taking this song to the limit. Yeah, well, you can't have everything. Terrapin eventually wound down into the standard post-Terrapin jam, which lasted a few minutes before giving way to the drummers.

Drums was rather short this night, and Space didn't last real long before sliding into Other One. This one didn't seem to really get going until halfway through the song. After a rather short lead-in, including a half-hearted intro from Phil, Bobby did the first verse. After a few minutes of soloing, Jerry really got the song cooking, while Phil never really seemed to get into it. Immediately after the second chorus, the song dropped off predictably into Wharf Rat. Everything was going well, and the song sounded great until Vince sang the "I'll get up and fly away" line too early. This created what sounded like a lot of confusion as Jerry made no attempt to cover up Vince's mistake. Jerry did however crank out yet another impressive solo.

Then it was time for the ever-changing Throwing Stones. It seems that the chopped off ending that I thought was a mistake at Compton Terrace is standard now. Also the lyrics in the line that used to be "Money green, proletariat gray, selling guns instead of food today" went to "Money green, it's the only way, selling guns, rape the earth today" in Phoenix to,"selling guns, FUCK the earth today!" in Vegas. Some were a little shocked to hear the word 'fuck' in two consecutive songs.

Bobby really livened things up during the solo break by charging to the front of the stage and windmilling some power chords a la Pete Townshend to get the crowd fired up. Some momentarily forgotten lyrics ("Just leave well enough alone") slowed things up a bit near the end, and then we were ready for Not Fade Away. Instead, just to show that they're not getting too predictable, they followed Throwing Stones with Lovelight, a combination I haven't heard in a few years. The end of this really showed what havoc Bobby wreaked on his vocal chords in Looks Like Rain. He sang his heart out, but what really came out was a lot of squeaks and chirps. Jerry closed the weekend with the perfect farewell encore, a powerful Brokedown Palace. Fare ye well, guys, hopefully I'll see you again soon!

05-26-93 Cal Expo - M. Dolgushkin & D. Greenberg

We sat together in the rear bleachers on Phil's side, conscious of the fact that this was the 20th anniversary of the legendary Kezar show. (There were banners everywhere commemorating this as it was also Rock Med's 20th, therefore the band may have known as well). We were curious as to which, if any, songs played at Kezar might be repeated. While Bobby opted not to open the show with Promised Land he chose Samson & Delilah instead, a much less frequent occurrence. Kezar Tune No. 1 followed — Here Comes Sunshine. Comparative rating... close but no cigar. Walkin' Blues and Broken Arrow were well done as was Ramble On Rose (which wasn't played at Kezar). Memphis Blues Again led into Kezar Tune No. 2 — Deal. Comparative rating... much improved, in fact, it almost blew us into the beer garden.

The second set opened with Kezar Tune No. 3 — Box Of Rain. Comparative rating... we called it even. Next up was the decidedly un-Kezar Victim Or The Crime into Crazy Fingers, which were as good as they get, segueing into Kezar Tune No. 4 — Playing In The Band. Comparative rating... as amazing as it may seem, this rendition of Playing In The Band actually exceeded the incredible Kezar version. Venturing into Tiger Territory, the jam left the parameters of Playin In The Band several times, but always managed to find its way back. Every bit as long as the Kezar version, the jam seemed not to want to end. We wondered if the band was not themselves conscious that they had played this tune 20 years ago. (Dave thought that this was the best Playing In The Band he'd ever seen. Mike would almost agree if it wasn't for 6/8/74).

Early in Space we heard the Corinna button get pushed, so it was not too much of a surprise when the song actually materialized. Then — if ever a Playin In The Band deserved, needed to be finished, it was this one. How satisfying that it was! The reprise slid neatly into Kezar Tune No. 5 — China Doll. Comparative rating... who cares, it's great that they played it! The set closed with Kezar Tune No. 6 — Around And Around. Comparative rating... we were dancing too hard to tell.

The encore was as far from Kezar as you can get — Liberty. Good thing we don't have to compare the encores!

06-23-93 Deer Creek – David Steinberg

It looked like this show was going to be the worst of the tour. First set started out going nowhere, and then they played Broken Arrow- always the sign of a bad set. To add insult to injury, the Easy Answers that followed was nothing like the great song they played in Detroit or Louisville... and they ended the set with it.

O.K., we thought, second set will be it. Well, Samson, Long Way to Go and Wave to the Wind is not my idea of a strong pre-drums song selection. When they went into Terrapin (which traditionally means no jam), I thought about leaving. Now those of you who have read DeadBase '92 know what happens when I thought about leaving Copps Coliseum. Well it happened again.

Terrapin didn't go straight into Drumz. Terrapin didn't have a 2 or 3 minute jam after it. No. We got the completely unbelievable — a 12 minute intense pure jam after Terrapin. This jam was easily the highlight of the tour; it was one of the highlights of my Dead career. Not only did they jam for 12 minutes, but it didn't come out of any song or hit any theme (other than some Lazy Lightning teases). Every time the drummers tried to assert themselves, they'd come up with a new twist. This was improvisation at its finest. Get it!!!

The energy did not go away when the stage was finally left for Billy and Mickey. While I spent Drumz trying to assimilate the jam, I calmed down enough by Space to realize that this was the best version they had played so far. All of the signs were pointing in one direction, and that direction was Dark Star.

Now I know some people will complain about this Dark Star. After all, it was only 8 minutes. Those people are looking at the set wrong. There wasn't a 8 minute Dark Star, it went on for 20 minutes. It's just that the first 12 occurred before Drumz. The Terrapin-> JAM-> D/S-> Dark Star-> Wheel this night was an example of why we keep coming back, and proof that, when they are on, the Grateful Dead are the best band on the planet.

06-25-93 RFK Stadium - John W. Scott

RFK has long been rumored to be a superior stadium (a sublime oxymoron). I have suspected that this was prejudice largely due to the exceptional concerts that the Grateful Dead have made their custom at this historied venue. My curiosity getting the better of my judgment, I drove the ten hours (each way) to investigate. I am happy to report that after two relatively average concerts that I was wrong: the Dead could perform horribly, and this would still be a great place to see them.

The weather report for the next two days was not promising: today was supposed to be cloudy with a chance of rain; thundershowers were forecast as likely for the 26th. Fortunately, the pundits were wrong: it was absolutely gorgeous with temperatures in the eighties. Outside, the parking lots were ringed with trees, providing welcome shade from the generous Washington sun. The real estate under bridges was in particularly high demand, packed with drummers and dancers — others crammed in for a while to enjoy the entertainment and some thermal relief before continuing on their happy circuits. Vending was widespread, boasting plenty of variety and ingenuity (including detailed leather sandals), with little hassle from the powers that be. Hairwrappings were the order of the day as the curbside setups featuring brilliant threads and baubles seemed to outnumber even the t-shirt vendors. Everyone was in the brightest of spirits, even those with neither tickets nor prospects thereof in this heartily sold-out venue.

The ticket verification table was very busy this afternoon — apparently there were plenty of counterfeits in circulation. A scalper with a fist full of money then had the audacity to demand to buy more tickets at the table. I have never seen such a normally sunny disposition turn furious so fast as when Steve Marcus ran the interloper off. Steve got a huge cheer from the crowd; he just shook his head.

The Washington mystique was in evidence. Rumor had it that Tipper Gore was in attendance with her daughters; they were reported to have been enjoying the music from Jerry's side of the stage. I can testify firsthand that Bruce Babbitt was backstage — evidently he had not gotten his fill at the Cap Centre show he attended in the spring.

Before the show I was given a quick tour of the video setup by director Bob Hartnett. The video crew occupy a low-ceilinged bunker under the stage, surrounded by banks and banks of monitors and a taper's wet dream in video processing equipment. They have a vast archive of images (video and still) stored on three laser disks, online at the whim of a few quick keystrokes. I was honored to think that among those thousands of images, one of those disks included a dozen slides of my artwork. Pride can be so petty. There were eight cameras. The first four were Sony "BBP 70-IS" CCD (very high-end, very low-light). Cameras 1 & 3 are the hand held onstage. Camera 2 was the one on the platform in the audience, and Camera 4 was mounted on a robotic head above the stage, atop Candace's circular screen. There were also four very small "lipstick" cameras (named for their size and shape): two on Vinnie, one shooting right down the beam, one on Bill's side. Finally, there was a reference camera out on Candace's board so the lighting and video crews can coordinate complementary color schemes. Bob was particularly proud of Camera 4. He pointed out that much of the percussion has previously been hidden from the audience, particularly when the drummers turn their backs to play the MIDI drum pods. They couldn't place a camera where they wanted because of the kettle drums on the Beast, and because Bralove mixes the MIDI loops back there. Finally there was no lighting from the back. The placement of a camera above the stage neatly solved all the problems. I thought it a great success as out of all the cameras, I had specifically appreciated that perspective at the Giant's shows.

Incredibly, Sting's already-strong sets have continued to improve. It is fortunate that the field was much more crowded for the "warm-up" band than it had been at Giant's. I like to think that it was not all due to the general admission nature of the field. In any case, the larger audience was very receptive — the band was finally getting some of the respect they deserved. Unfortunately, I did not pay the full attention their penultimate Dead-opening performance deserved — I was too excited by my surroundings. I roamed the perimeter of the field, investigating this charming stadium while my ear was glued to the stage. What a beautiful setting: the grass field was positively Elysian when compared with the cement floor at Giants; it was such a perfect afternoon with not a cloud in the sky and the moon already risen — sigh!

Once again Sting's band was superbly tight and very energetic. This is certainly one of the most accomplished bands to have opened for the Grateful Dead in recent memory. A Day In The Life was absolutely amazing again — my favorite of the set. Having Jerry onstage for the last song was a promotional success, but he was largely hidden behind David Sancious and frankly his musical contributions were not that obvious either. Having heard that he had joined the "warm-up" band at several recent concerts I was slightly disappointed that he was not more involved. On the other hand there was still another opportunity tomorrow.

At lights out for the Dead, I jotted down a couple of fashion notes: Phil wore an Earth Island Institute shirt, while Mickey was clad in one of those pretty lion sun shirts by Mouse. I had ended up standing half way between the stage and soundboard, centered on Jerry's video screen — it was cozy, but not packed.

As the Dead were performing near Bruce Hornsby's home turf, he sat (or should that be stood?) in on accordion. The Dead's first set was rather short but quite fulfilling. Half Step is usually an energetic opener, doubly so when Bruce is in attendance — I was not disappointed. Mr. Hornsby took a solo on almost every song in the first set, including a particularly tasty one on Tom Thumb Blues. As the meat of the set, the bassy Cassidy and the chugging Cumberland were exceptional. Bruce was visibly contributing to the energy onstage and both these songs benefited. The video screens were finally unveiled for that last song of the first set. I would love to have seen footage of the previous material, but at least we were allowed a prime view of a hot Promised Land with plenty of frisky accordion.

During the break I sat on the luxurious grass, reveling in the gorgeous evening; the tantalizing breeze had cooled temperatures to the ideal. Somehow this didn't seem like a real stadium experience. At a Grateful Dead concert in the nation's capitol it was certainly no surprise when we were pressed with eco-politics: a video pitch encouraged us to make our voice(s) count by calling the White House rainforest preservation number. I am ashamed to note that I never did call that number. Unfortunately, Deadheads are not renown for their reliability, even when a good cause is at hand; just think of our political clout if we were.

The somewhat short first set was balanced by a somewhat long second set. It opened with more premium Bruce Hornsby material, starting with a nice nimble version of China Cat. As the Dead approached the transition, Candace projected shapes all over the stadium, including the very back where it was very popular with the crowd. The video showed the warm summer's breeze blowing through Phil's hair; the bassist smiled contentedly. The transition was temptingly drawn out; for a moment the accordion gave it a Cajun flavor. And then we were in I Know You Rider. The video used an overlay of railroad footage — a steam engine traveling down the tracks past pretty countryside — while canyon slides were projected on the banners. Bruce took a generous solo. All was right in this warm summer's night.

Saint Of Circumstance was a little frenetic and scattered, but the video was fun: shots of flight through clouds and rain — quite effective for those in the audience susceptible to out-of-body experiences. Musically, the song was not a write-off: Phil's energetic performance was impressive. Uncle John's Band, on the other hand, was nothing short of joyous. The bass continued to be absolutely phenomenal, grabbing at my throat, inciting celebration. The Grateful Dead sounded so very glad to have their dear friend Bruce back. The confluence of enthusiastic talent as the final jam raged was almost overwhelming. Had this been a friendly competition Jerry and Phil would have tied; happily, though this was golden cooperation without the strains of rivalry. Only one Uncle John's Band was longer in 1993, and that one lingered into the drums. This was easily my favorite version of the year (casting novel transitions aside); it was also the best song of the night (and there was still an impressive number to come).

A bass-driven version of Corinna carried us towards the drums. As it began, there was lots of morphing on the video: a skeleton on a record platter> Mickey> SYF> Jerry. Then, a mysterious and beautiful woman danced in carefree slow motion while Candace worked a beautiful four-color kaleidoscope.

Corinna's closing jam was long and intense enough, but Jerry seemed to instruct the others to quit before any other distinct theme could evolve.

At the beginning of the percussion segment, Bill remained at his kit, while Mickey immediately moved to congas and talking drums, playing them with mallets. There were lots of wonderful traces, trails, and other video effects choreographed to the drumming. Enough of the percussive mechanics were revealed to be informative, while the right side of the brain was allowed to run wild following the spiral trails as they wound and unwound. Surprisingly, we were able to sit down on the cool grass and still watch the video on the screens above. The spiral motif continued for a while, twisting fractals, ocean footage, and other forms in hypnotic fashion.

After Mickey beat a sudden frantic finale on the beam, the video changed along with the lineup. The ocean footage remained for a smooth transition, but the spiral effect was replaced by spacy outlines (they were to prove particularly impressive on Bruce's accordion). Early Space recollected vintage Pink Floyd. Then, in a game of MIDI masquerade, the strings played percussion (I think it was Bob on the cymbals).

Suddenly, the assembled band pulled out of the drums; Jerry tipped their hand immediately: The Other One. As the song gathered inevitably, the video featured a shot of a Godzilla model (perhaps foretelling a monster version?). Instead, Bob swept the band into I Need A Miracle. Appearing disgruntled, Jerry slowed the headlong substitute down a couple of notches just before the lyrics. Miracle was followed by a strong Wharf Rat (thanks to Jerry and Bruce).

Then came the monster: Sugar Magnolia. This was a towering version with too much mass and momentum to come to an easy halt. It was also a collaborative effort. Phil thumped mightily, filling my body with glorious sound. Bob was so excited that he not only walked across the front of the stage way past Jerry to the far corner; he later skipped across it. Bright party lights danced across the entire expanse of the stage, banner to banner. It was all so intoxicating. As Sugar Magnolia continued beyond reasonable expectation, Mickey was positively manic, wailing on his kit. Bruce kicked in with a great solo. And the finale kept building and building past dizzying heights. Would it ever stop? When the dust finally cleared this was the longest version of the year (over ten-and-a-half minutes); it was also longer than any other in the previous five years, and longer than the 35 versions timed in DeadBase VII. Had not Uncle John's Band already stolen the show, Sugar Magnolia would certainly have been tonight's pinnacle.

Before the encore thousands of fans held up their lighters in appreciation — thankfully neither green grass nor cement are highly flammable. The video crew covered the pyrotechnics on the screen, causing thousands more to flick their Bics. The stadium was really quite stunning, brimming with jubilation as we had claimed this Washington night for ourselves. The Weight was the perfect encore. The warmth of the shared vocals and the bittersweet lyrics were fitting tribute to Bruce's momentary return. It also allowed the audience to mellow after that rip-roaring Sugar Magnolia.

The show was over at 11:45; it was too beautiful an evening just to pack up and go home. Fortunately, the police waited almost two hours before starting to encourage people to leave. One of the most memorable aspects of these concerts was the parking lot scene afterwards — a tie-dyed carnival on a warm summer's night. Vending was still in full swing, the tables and blankets now each sported at least one Coleman lantern. There were four or five large U-Haul style trucks with full-size kitchens setup inside producing excellent food (my favorite was the giant French bread pizza, but there was also some exceptional Mexican available). Then there was the disco bus (complete with a mirrored ball) which blasted the Bee Gee's "greatest" hits while the crowd danced with reckless abandon. Many had a great time goofing on Travolta's best moves, but most were too young to be nostalgic. After such an enjoyable concert, it was not the music that mattered — it was the celebration of music that mattered. Sometimes it feels great to be a Deadhead.

09-20-93 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

On its second incarnation, the Dead Pool grew to nine participants, now complete with official pre-printed forms. This time I prognosticated five of sixteen; the winner had six — this would continue to prove a humbling experience. Our seats were low on Phil's side in line with Dan Healy, providing a nice overall view. We happened to be sitting next to Phil's masseur — you meet the most interesting people at Grateful Dead concerts. More importantly, my brother was my seatmate — the Dead are good for family reunions, too.

With lights out at 7:40, this was the latest start thus far of a remarkably prompt stand. The treat of the first set was The Race Is On (obviously). While the rest of the material was solid, this song was exceptional in execution as well as selection. The only other first-set notable was an energetic Johnny B. Goode to close. I can't say that I was disappointed with the bulk of the material (it also included a Dire Wolf); it just doesn't seem very important in the balance of this concert. If there was any disappointment at the time, it was eclipsed by excitement when an extra microphone was set up onstage during the break. All the ugly-rumored guests for Saturday's concert sprang back to life — which New York native (or visitor) might grace us with his/her presence this evening?

Perhaps mindful of his whereabouts, Vince impatiently toyed with his West Side Story mini-medley tuning before the second set. The front half of the set was okay; that was to prove enough given what followed. It started out with a Monday Samson... oh boy. Actually, it was a good version — robust, energetic even — thanks to Jerry's measured aggression. So Many Roads was also respectable, despite my negative predisposition — notably the closing pleas. The first-half highlight was a solid Truckin with a hot central jam. That gave way to an average He's Gone, which in turn relinquished to Drumz without any of the improvisation that often makes it a standout. With a first set, and front half of a second so easily dispensed, one might be inclined to despair. Fear not, for there was an extra microphone onstage; the Grateful Dead were far from done.

Everything from Drumz on was fantastic. After a series of well-textured percussion, Phil was first back, then Jerry, then Bob. Soon a woman wearing a vest stepped up to the mystery mic. On the darkened stage I couldn't see who it was: Suzanne Vega? The suspense was killing me. It seemed odd that a musician without an instrument should be out so early in Space — to sing amongst such chaotic improvisation was certainly not for the faint of heart. Our mystery guest stood there for what seemed a long while with her hands in her pockets, waiting and measuring. Then, in the middle of the musical anarchy, she confidently sang. The first strains were clearly signed Edie Brickell. Her vocal jam, nearly unprecedented in Grateful Dead guest history, was amazing. Edie's lyrics comfortably belonged over the free-form background, and yet they seemed fresh and spontaneous. Even over the massing Other One her words rang true; Edie's vocal musings to open this enigmatic number were one of her highlights. My only misgivings about the vocalized Space was that Healy took more than his due liberty in looping and distorting the vocals — it is a mistake to try to reinterpret such bold creativity.

The Other One started on the heels of an odd swerve, but picked up again quickly. Its best feature was the jam between verses — even Edie seemed impressed. As the jam built, she stood there gracefully; her smile grew as the band wailed. Having seemed at a loss on how to contribute on this foreign song, Edie sang on the chorus after the second verse. Perhaps to reassure her of more familiar material, at Goin' Down The Road Bob ran up to talk to Edie; she then stepped up to the microphone again. Going Down The Road was exceptionally energetic. Jerry was having a great time, grinning ear to ear at Edie. In turn, she stood back between verses and beamed her charming smile which again broadened as Jerry's fingers tore into his fretboard — chemistry among artists.

When the transition arrived, Morning Dew was the obvious song to pray for. In the instant in which it was answered, I was simultaneously bitterly disappointed as Edie Brickell left the stage. It could have been such a sweet marriage. Nevertheless Morning Dew was very strong, easily weathering the impressive peaks and fragile spaces, leaving us exhausted and happy. An encore seemed superfluous — I was fully sated.

Happily, this encore was far from superfluous. It was wonderful to hear Baba Never Knows again; this medley should not be allowed to lapse into memory. Very energetic and enthusiastic, this was one of most passionate renditions of each that I have heard. Phil sang harmonies with Vince on the "don't cry" part of Baba O'Riley. On Tomorrow Never Knows Vince's vocals and Jerry's slidework combined to create the perfect Eastern atmosphere.

Despite the rather plain first two-thirds of this concert, it ended up being the sort of performance I had hoped to see for the benefit concert on Saturday. With the Grateful Dead it is not so much a question of if as when.

09-22-93 Madison Square Garden - John W. Scott

This stand at Madison Square Garden culminated in one of those once-or-twice-a-year concerts. Its superior status was evidenced in Feedback '93 where readers who were in attendance rated it as the best show they saw, while those who were not there rated it as the concert they most regretted missing. September 22nd was also chosen as the favorite tape of the year. Before the event it was a different story — I refused to count chickens. I was excited at the prospect of the final night at MSG, but frankly, my expectations weren't that high — the spring tour had reached a remarkably unexceptional conclusion at the nearby Nassau Coliseum. This twin-series stand had some impressive highlights, but it is telling that the most memorable moment of Series 1 was the opening few songs of the first set on the first night. It is rare for a first set to overshadow the second; trebly so for one to overshadow three in a row.

Opening with Help On The Way is always a good omen — it immediately changed my attitude from measured skepticism to carefree optimism. I was not disappointed. The trio was wonderful, particularly the playful and restless Slipknot. The show of the year was off to a strong start. On paper the center of the set might appear ordinary, but all three songs were played with exceptional confidence. I would hazard that Ramble On Rose was the strongest of them; it was preceded by a curious lounge piano tuning. The first set culminated in a Bird Song featuring saxophonist David Murray — the best version I have heard live. When he came on stage it was obvious this was not Branford; a quick check through the binoculars confirmed that neither was this Clarence. But we had no other idea as to who this might be. His mysterious identity grew in importance as I was very impressed by his performance on this song as he displayed some wonderful, fresh licks. Bird Song took a little while to find its wings but when it did, it soared. I have always regretted not being present for the Branford Bird Songs; finally here was a version to start my atonement for my grievous sins of omission. While many in the bar backstage were similarly bewildered by our most special guest, a Deadhead from Ireland correctly identified him for us.

Although the second set began with less-than-ideal selection, the execution was uniformly impressive. Easy Answers was much tighter than it had been at its Giant's premiere. While I did not recall being impressed with Lazy River Road at the time, the tape proves me deaf — particularly with the tasteful saxophone accents liberally sprinkled through the second half of the song. This is the best version to date of a normally pretty-but-bland song. The Grateful Dead then handily leapt to a higher plane with a magnificent Estimated Prophet. It was another great version featuring a saxophone. I am continually surprised and impressed with this song — on a visceral level it has jazz possibilities that rival Eyes of The World and Slipknot. Estimated was nearly sixteen minutes long, easily the longest of the year, in fact it was the longest one in the past six years — the only longer one I can find approached nineteen minutes on 12/26/79. This mammoth version was also one of the finest the Dead have ever performed; I even found it superior to the hallowed gem which followed. Everything about this song was exceptional, from Bob's vocals to Vince's piano. David Murray contributed his most heartfelt performance of the night — that is no mean claim. Phil had lots of fun, nimbly visiting a host of jazzy bass lines like a boy let loose in a toy store for the first time.

Following the spacy fusion recesses of Estimated's ultimate jam, there was but one place left to go. They arrived effortlessly — "Oh yes, this is Dark Star now; maybe it has been for some time." The respondents to Feedback '93 rated this the best Dark Star of 1993 by an overwhelming margin. My personal slim-margin-favorite was the longer version from 03/17, but what do I know? That one was ranked dead last in the same poll. In any case, I certainly agree that tonight's was superior to the other two, even shorter, performances in this Dark Starved year. Born of Estimated Prophet, this one embraced its fusion heritage. It even seemed in a hurry to do so, dispatching the introduction and verse in distressingly short order to get to the heart of the improvisation. The jam did justify the expediency. The musicians slowly unraveled the Dark Star theme into its anarchistic threads — exposing its innermost nature to those assembled. Lucky us.

It seems as though the greater the jazz influence on a guest artist, the more s/he relishes Space. It was then no surprise when Mr. Murray excelled during the Drumz also, and had a great time doing it. Though its evolution from Space was totally unexpected, Wharf Rat was a natural. The Dead performed with uniform resolution. David Murray took a long time measuring this song, but when he eventually joined in, it was perfect poetry. As with Bird Song, the final jam soared ever higher on his brass wings. Next: Throwing Stones was excellent also, though you couldn't hear James Cotton in the mix from where we were sitting. David Murray kept up his end of the deal, making this an all-time great version of this oft-played piece. Lastly, the second set culminated in a compact (the shortest of the year), but powerful Lovelight. Fortunately it was easy to hear James Cotton on this song — whew! The selection of I Fought The Law, and the absence of the guests were both disappointing. On the other hand, this was the hottest I have heard them perform it, and any encore at all was unnecessary. I guess they can be forgiven.

For me, this was my show of the year. It even surpassed the highly improvisational St. Patrick's Day concert in my ledger. A show which opens with Help> Slipknot> Franklin's and closes the first set with an epic Bird Song is by definition off to a good start. This one was crowned by a second set boasting a talented guest and plenty of meaty improvisation, making each song a best-of-the year candidate. A second guest and the rip-roaring finale was but icing on the cake. If this sort of brazen inspiration can result, the Grateful Dead owe it to themselves to entertain guests more often.

09-26-93 Boston - John W. Scott

The rainy day encouraged me to eat my Red Sox ticket and work on DeadBase VII, which I did. The productive precipitation turned merely grey and drizzly by evening. The Dead must have been playing forecaster given the previous night's rain songs. This was the one night I had killer seats: tenth row, dead center. I was pleased to find two couples from our obscure region of Vermont and New Hampshire shared in my good fortune — they occupied seats in the two rows directly in front of me. Sometimes I marvel about the bizarre alchemy that brews in the offices of Grateful Dead Ticket Sales.

The first set was fine — my personal favorites were Jack Straw, High Time, and the semi-acoustic Uncle Maggie's medley. The only flaw in the set was when Parish had to come onstage and perform emergency surgery with a screwdriver on Jerry's guitar during Easy Answers — the song proved vigorous enough to survive in good condition.

I had forgotten to put Sunday Samson on my betting sheet. Fortunately, the Dead had forgotten about it also. Like the first, the second set was solid, but largely unexceptional (with a large caveat to be named later). Truckin was the standout of the first half. Though I had been led to expect that the jam was going to go independent (it was energetic enough to achieve escape velocity), it never quite did. Truckin's jam was impressive nonetheless.

While the pre-Drum segment was short, post-Drums was barely fourteen minutes, easily the shortest of the year. It did, however, have a redeeming quality. There have been several exceptional versions of Standing On The Moon to date. But for me, tonight was a rite of passage in which this song transcended from the excellent to the ecstatic. This song was a frequent topic of salutary banter over the remaining shows: "Were you there for Standing On The Moon?" The closing crescendo was magnificent; it stopped the set dead in its tracks. That was just as well — anything on its heels would have seemed trivial by comparison.

The Rain encore kept us from bolting, and getting a head start on the two-and-a-half hour drive home. It was well worth the delay. This was one of the strongest finishes to an otherwise mediocre concert I can remember in a while. But it is likely that the encore (and the rest of the concert) will fade, outshone by a Standing On The Moon destined to live the lives of fourteen-thousand, five-hundred, and fifty-two memories.

12-10-93 Los Angeles – Thomas Bellanca

Rumors had been flying from the day these shows were announced about whether or not Branford Marsalis (whose day job at the Tonight Show keeps him in LA) would show up. Most people figured if he would show up, it would probably be at Friday's show. Having gone through two shows with no signs of Branford, all signs pointed to a Friday appearance and anticipation was running high for an all-time show. Branford did show up, of course, and what followed, while not "all-time" was very fun and very well played with a few exceptional moments.

In my opinion, Branford is THE perfect guest for the Grateful Dead. Not only does an extra musician provide a different sound to the songs we've heard so many times, but the way Branford integrates himself into the music places him at the top of my list of guests. Branford pushes Jerry, as well as the rest of the band, in a way no other musician can do (Bruce Hornsby excluded). His playing is not forced into the music and blends with exceptional ease. When hearing him play with the Dead, it makes me think that these songs were written to included a horn player. He not only plays the notes that matter, he plays the notes between the notes, and I think this is what really separates him from others. He really listens to what is going on and is able to pick what and when to play, and the result is magic. On this night the magic was definitely there, but you had to listen for it a little harder than previous Branford shows.

Being a Friday night, the energy level was already topping out but when Branford walked out on stage soon after the rest of the band, the place felt energized. First up was Hell in a Bucket which gave Branford little room to jam, but which was well played by the rest of the band and provided a good warm-up. It was immediately noticed that Branford was very low in the mix and unfortunately this never did completely get fixed, so in order to pick-up what he was really doing required some focus. Next up was Loser which really caught fire. Jerry forgot a few lyrics (I almost think he gets distracted by Branford's beautiful playing at times) but the mid-song jam really soared with Branford stepping out to add some nice textures. Rooster was probably one of the highlights of the night. Everyone gave their all and a classic version was the result. Bobby sang some new lines right before the big solo which caught me off-guard and added a new feel to the song. Each member took a solo, including Branford. By that time, the music was really starting to gel and I knew we were in for a great night. So Many Roads was nice with Jerry really crooning out the end and Branford laying beautiful notes stretching the jam higher and higher. Tom Thumb's Blues is always welcome and this also was an all-timer. Phil never looked happier, and the jam in the middle was really stretched out with Vince doing some great piano work. Eternity followed and was the high point of the set. When this song was first played, it wasn't obvious where exactly it would fit in. It contained the "cheesy" Bob lyrics we've all come to love (or hate) and many people immediately dismissed it as a loser. I felt the mid-song jam had some real potential and this night proved me correct. Space was the place, and everyone fully obliged to take us to parts unknown. Vince's solo was truly hypnotic which gently eased into a full band space jam with Branford tagging right along. At this point my mind and body was ready to stay in space and was hoping for a Bird Song, but Jerry chose Bertha as the follow-up. It took a minute to get adjusted to the change of emotions but what followed was a ultra high- energy romp that had everyone dancing their butts off and leaving nothing but high expectations for the second set.

My main question during set break was whether or not Branford would stick around for the second set, but any doubt was quickly squashed when he walked out during the tunings. High on the list of many people's list of songs for Branford to play on is Scarlet> Fire. Unfortunately this version did not meet everyone's high expectations. Scarlet was played at a much faster pace that usual and quickly began transitioning into Fire on the Mountain. Branford left the stage soon after Scarlet ended and did not come back out until the band was almost fully into Fire. The jam seemed unfocused but once Branford came back out, the groove began to shine once again. There were some nice jams between verses but it did not reach the intense peaks we were all hoping for. Next up was Corinna during which Branford left the stage again and did not return till the beginning of the next song. Corinna has become a great second set tune with the ending jam usually hitting some great spaces, but this also was unfocused and the post-song jam was virtually nonexistent. Luckily, the next song made up for all previous problems.

Terrapin Station for many of us is the ultimate Grateful Dead song. It is delicate yet majestic and conveys so many emotions that every time played, it brings new meaning and portrays the song in a different light. This version was no different. Branford added subtle tones to Jerry's lines during the "Lady with a Fan" portion and the explosion at "Inspiration..." was deafening. The whole crowd was hanging on the band's every note. The repeating jam after the lyrics went higher, farther and played with more intensity that I've ever heard. Just when you thought they would begin the space jam out of Terrapin, they would climb the ladder again with Branford blowing with all his might. The jam out of Terrapin was ultra-spacey. Complete dissassemblance of any order with Mickey and Billy pounding a tribal beat behind the space- bound band leaders. Drums and Space were not merely a time for rest, each had definite focus and Branford's integration was at a peak during the full-band jam before Miracle. Miracle provided a brief trip to reality before becoming entranced once again during Standing on the Moon. This tune has gotten better and better every time played for the past year and this was no exception. This is a song where Branford's musical skill really shines, he is able to fill in spaces you never knew existed with a single note or tone. Jerry was screaming, "Be with you," over and over again and the jam at the end had the power of a set-closer. Fortunately out of the din came the bopping Not Fade Away. This was Branford's home-turf and he was really able to find a groove with Jerry playing 'Caution-style' fan chords throughout. The chant at the end went on much longer than usual, staying at a high intensity until the band reemerged for the encore. A couple members of the band actually played the NFA beat a couple of times, but a reprise was not to be. What was played was a beautiful Brokedown Palace that ended the night on a perfect note.

While many people were disappointed with this show, I for one had a great time and while it was not the best show ever or the best Branford show by far, those are very unfair comparisons. What did happen was some great music was played and provided glimpses of the power of what the Grateful Dead can do if fully inspired.

07-13-94 Highgate - John W. Scott

July 13, 1994 provided a sublime example of how much more there is to a Grateful Dead concert than mere music. On one hand, Feedback '94 rated this show as musically well below par (68th of 84). Then again, the same survey voted it as the most fun Dead concert of the year. While I feel that the evaluation of the music was (only) a little harsh, I find the contrasting opinions to be wholly appropriate.

This was a very special day in my Deadhead career: my first true family concert. Terrie has joined me regularly at shows; this time we included our three sons. The stakes were high in this kindred crapshoot; so much could have gone wrong that I was determined to plan and control every aspect I could. Motel reservations were made ten weeks in advance (upon mere rumors of the event), our route to the venue had been carefully charted in light of the miserable access, and Terrie and I packed for every contingency including hi-fi earplugs for five. But there were many variables beyond our control. The weather was my first concern, but there were plenty of others: while we were nervous about exposing our children to rampant drug (ab)use, the chimerical nature of childhood dispositions, and the possibility of an unending rotation of port-a-pottie trips also weighed heavily as parental concerns.

As it turned out, the unplanned and the planned cooperated for a promising start. It was a beautiful day — a little hot, but the forecast possible-thundershowers never materialized. While traffic looked terrible on the meager main access, we breezed in using my alternate route and parked in someone's yard for $10. Obviously many residents earned some serious cash — at sites closer to the venue, lawn parking fees climbed to $20 and even $25 (though some of those included camping privileges). Our lot was a nice family operation; they sold tasty barbecued chicken afterwards at a healthy but reasonable price. The most tangible benefit Deadheads offer local communities is the considerable amount of money we spend. If we can so strongly impact the economies of cities as large as Albany or Boston as to perpetuate our welcome despite the negative press we earn, just think of the economic impact sixty-thousand Deadheads would exert in the smallest of small-town America. It is rare that the residents benefit so directly; more power to them — it couldn't happen to nicer people.

I had promised to meet a friend before the show to loan him my DAT deck. It didn't take me long to realize just how ludicrous such a meeting would be given the tens of thousand of Deadheads spread among a hundred different parking lots. Oh well... one might then easily imagine my surprise when he and his wife appeared from the other flank of the same lawn on which we had parked. There were at most two dozen cars parked there; our friends had arrived some two-and-a-half hours previously. Obviously synchronicity was in overdrive for this event.

On the yang side of the equation, we still had nearly a mile hike to the venue. Our careful planning now demanded we become beasts of burden. We hauled two large Greenpeace shopping bags (warm/dry clothes for five, food, blankets, and a multitude of diversions for the children), my tour backpack, a diaper bag, Terrie's knitting, two lawn chairs, a small soft cooler, nearly two gallons of water and Gatorade, and a pack in which to mule our twenty-one-month-old son. Whew! We looked wistfully at the farmer who gave Deadheads hay rides to the concert from his distant one-day lot.

Surprisingly, the scene around this impromptu venue was not completely dominated by the gargantuan vending scene. The sprawling marketplace was to be expected; what struck me instead was the exceptional number of people trying to dump extra tickets. I had earnestly feared Highgate would be besieged by ticketless hoards — this was, after all, a Grateful Dead concert in a Vermont field — as close as we get to paradise on the East Coast. Instead, my relief at already having sold my spare pair grew quickly: I saw someone selling for $25, know someone who took $15, and heard of a number trying and failing to give away tickets. Police reports of 80,000 in attendance, and newspaper stories of 100,000, were certainly exaggerated.

A minor inconvenience of this last-minute overture to the summer tour was that the World Cup semi-finals were played on the afternoon and night of the show. I set my VCR and hoped that our rural power would not be interrupted. I was gratified that the games were a topic of conversation as we waited to be allowed in — "soccer" has finally made it in the U.S.. Sometime during Let It Grow, Romario scored the only goal of the game (a great header) for Brazil. The fans in Sao Paulo went wild, celebrating at the video wall. We had our own video wall and our own celebration in Highgate. The World Cup final on Sunday was one of many factors which kept me home from RFK. It was a painful decision to let my tickets go: the first show was scheduled for the day that a fragmented comet would crash into Jupiter — I was loathe to pass up such blatant Dark Star inspiration.

But this was not an evening for wistful regrets of future concerts to be missed. It was a carpé diem experience to seize and enjoy. This was an even kinder and gentler venue than its cousin in Oxford. While Highgate lacked the grandstand (a mixed curse), the grass field was superior to the expanses of asphalt which dominated the best seats at the Maine speedway scene. It harkened back to Lewiston. Given the venue's neophyte status, the basic logistics were handled reasonably well. At least fifty port-a-potties were lined up on Phil's side, and there were even more directly back. There were two giant water tankers: one on either side of the field, with matching mega-dumpsters. The water lines were very long (I would guess about 40 deep). Potty lines were more moderate, averaging six or seven. There were large food concessions to the cultural left of (and superior to) the hot dog and Carvel approach of, say, Giants Stadium. Grilled chicken kabobs and Ben & Jerry's Peace Pops proved the official sustenance for this Vermont convention of Deadheads.

As a family, shopping for a location was more complex — the claustrophobic regions with the best views were clearly out of bounds, so we considered setting up in the back on Phil's side, about twenty feet behind the delay towers. Thanks to a dry spell, the grass was sparse there. It was easy to anticipate a dance-inspired dust bowl; great for whirling dervishes, not so hot for younger lungs — we moved up fifty yards to the perfect family locale. The view was better, the sound was perfect, and we were still far enough back to avoid crushing our children. We were soon joined by other families — friends I had known as long as I have followed the Dead. This is what the Vermont show was supposed to be about. Even if the show did not quite sell out, absolutely everybody was there: John, Cathy & Emily; Rich & Barbara; Timon; Don & Nancy; Dave, Megan & Allison; Rudy; Mark & Emily; Tim; Matt & Nancy; Brian; Doug; John & Lisa; Tom & Wendy; Buddy & Ginny; Duane; Keith; Rick; Tom & Bonnie. (I can name-drop with the best of them when pressed — I apologize to those I've omitted.)

It thus turned out we could have left the weighty bag of kiddie-diversions at home (or at least back at the car). The boys were very well entertained by us, by our friends, and by their children — in that order, in ascending importance. This was but one among the myriad examples of harmony which threaded our experience. While Allison entertained Cassidy and Dylan through much of the first set, Graham (not yet two) was particularly enamored with Emily (exactly one year his junior) — fascinated by her when she was sleeping, he fed her toys when she awoke, and was later astonished at seeing someone else breastfed. These are the priceless memories which will always composite the Highgate experience for me. I suspect that for most of those in attendance, their memories were equally personal and profoundly special.

Yassou N'Dour was a surprisingly appropriate warm-up; there was an earthiness to the music that perfectly suited the setting. Unfortunately, like many opening acts, he did not receive the attention he deserved. The children at our site were more appreciative than their aggregate elders. They were enthralled by the colorful clothing, and danced to the unfamiliar music with an openness that was beguiling. Graham boogied with abandon through most of the set.

If the Dead's sets were not impeccably performed, they were well-chosen for the company at hand. A few days earlier Terrie had quipped: "Tell them to play Althea." She got her wish, plus two runners-up: Tennessee Jed and Truckin. Cassidy was fixated on Sugar Magnolia from the car ride through most of the show. I had duly warned him that they play lots of songs, and you can never know what they are going to do. He was thrilled, despite the very late hour — I have never appreciated a selection more. Off my wish list I was granted the novelty of I Want To Tell You, and a personal favorite: New Speedway Boogie.

Likewise, if the music was at best average, the visuals were nothing short of spectacular. The lights danced off the brushed metal surfaces of the sculpture which arced gracefully above the stage. The same lights played over and through the colorful scrims in a stunning display of contrast and complement: the bold strokes of Van Gogh were well matched with the balance, rhythm and depth of Titian. The video was its best ever, even at our abstract distance, featuring new split-screen technology. The integration of light and video with the music was mesmerizing. A waxing quarter moon set early in the second set, leaving us under a crystalline canopy of stars.

But I digress — on to the contentious performance. As the first set opened the band seemed to wrestle to control the music. Following a haphazard Good Times, Jack Straw gained tempo in an apparent attempt to escape its labored beginning; despite the song's frantic approach the result was average at worst. While the music cantered along below, a hot air balloon sporting a Vermont farm motif floated casually over the stage towards the still-colorful clouds in the distant twilight. Althea demonstrated more confidence than its predecessors; the band began to settle down. As the set wound on in satisfactory fashion my attentions were focused more on my family than the music. It was just as well — I couldn't have been happier had the Dead raged through the set of the year. The pace which had seemed frenzied earlier in the set suited Let it Grow. The signature song for this agricultural setting spanned a generous and magical fifteen minutes (the longest since the second-set version from September 19, 1990). It was easily the musical and spiritual highlight thus far... perhaps of the night.

Like its predecessor, the second set got off stumbling start. Truckin began sloppy, under-powered, and disjointed. While each of its elements rallied at some point, they never quite fit together. That is, not until the seamless connective jam which sailed into New Speedway with barely a whisper of notice. Yes, there have been better versions, but this one was loads of fun; New Speedway Boogie has never been performed farther afield from its inspiration — Vermont no longer bordered on upstate New York.

Corinna sported a funky bass intro which I found very appealing. And do my ears deceive me, or did Jerry actually scream out the final chorus (a paler shade of Vince's earlier banshee pleas)? It must have been that mystical morphing Vermont breeze. Corinna's close featured some more bouncy bass, but was denied the beautiful meandering jams which are this song's most beguiling promise. After a brief and unfulfilled hint at a Matilda Jam, we were swept into Uncle John's Band — the second signature song for this gathering. It is unfortunate that this was one of the songs marred by vocal miscues and forgotten lines, but it is hard to be too judgmental. I understand getting lost in the Vermont night — I often found myself distracted from the music. To the song's credit, there was a beautiful but brief theme which surfaced just before the strings relinquished the stage.

As was often the case in 1994, Drumz was a highlight of the evening. The percussion was passionate. Ever expanding his musical horizons, Mickey hip-checked the beam repeatedly for emphasis. Some beautiful fragments of themes were woven into the later reaches of Space. Then we were treated to some pure fun, the moment where Jerry seemed to be enjoying himself the most and we caught a glimpse of the relaxed solo artist. I Want To Tell You was a falling star from the night sky. All too fast, it tumbled brightly — sparkling in a jam which harkened to Jerry Garcia Band — and then faded into Miracle. I confess that I found Miracle mundane by contrast; I let vague expectations and fantasy cloud my experience — an ungracious lapse on my part. While I have also heard better versions of Standing On The Moon, this one seemed particularly well suited for the setting at hand, even if the moon had set an hour earlier. And then Sugar Magnolia, the song that made my night by making my son's, provided the perfect pastoral finale for Vermont's outdoor Dead debut. The expression of realization and pure joy on Cassidy's face will always stand out as one of my most powerful Grateful Dead memories. Everything was right with the world.

U. S. Blues seemed quite incongruous; it was our cue to exit stage left. Our egress could have been much worse. Dylan woke and walked at a moment's notice. We made good progress on the lateral leg, and even made it half way of the vertical leg to the gate before the song was done. In an instant, it was packed, but not mired until we got to 78. Terrie and I both did serious damage to our backs and arms on the walk back. I was very impressed by my five-year old's valiant midnight mile — I wonder if we could have made it otherwise.

While we were all safe back at our motel before 1 AM, that was the exception that proved the mathematical formula flowibus staticus — it dictated that most were mired in the lot until at least 4 AM; some didn't leave until after 9. Curiously, the tales I hear from my stuck friends have all been romanticized — it seems they treasure every memory from this show, as if everything was connected and a little patience was a small price to pay. I can buy that. My one lingering concern was that the word would get out and next year a special venue might be swamped by the ticketless hoards that plague many of the best Dead venues. I had no idea just how well-founded my fears would prove.

Having listened to the tapes, I no longer understand this show's miserable musical rating. Perhaps it was the burden of fantasy — deep within our hearts we collectively hoped for, then depended on, a historied performance punctuated by spontaneous revivals and decade-defying improvisations. What we got instead was a respectable, though flawed, performance in an idyllic setting; an experience I would not forgo for all the MSG meltdowns on my Deadhead resume.

Epilogue. Before I went to Highgate I was contacted by someone who wanted to interview me for a movie about Deadheads. He suggested I find them at their van before the show — it would be marked with a flag. Yeah, right. I was perversely flattered when they tracked me down at my motel the following morning. Sorry, but an interview at their motel with a carload of homesick children was not going to happen. If they wanted to detour and visit me at my New Hampshire home on their way to Boston, well that would be okay. Damned it they didn't take me up on it. I expected two Deadheads and a camcorder. I was interviewed at home on that afternoon by an eight-person film crew doing a feature length documentary on Deadheads (Tie-Dyed) for release in theaters; they were very nice and far more professional than I had expected. You can never tell. I debriefed our children afterwards.

Graham, age 21 mos.: loved dancing, especially for the warm-up act, but also most of the first set. He spent most of the second in his pack on his mom's back, he fell asleep during Way To Go.

Dylan, age 5: It seemed like all the people in the whole world were there. The drive didn't seem that long, but the walk in to the venue was too far, particularly when you have to carry stuff. The waiting for the music was not bad. Dylan was never bored. Played with kids. Colored. Threw a Frisbee. Dad took him to the bathroom several times. Was angry at the guy who purposefully popped the balloon tethered to one of our two streamer poles. "It took me nine tries to do it," he boasted. They didn't have the TV on for Yassou N'Dour — so even on Dad's shoulders up by the light board, Dylan never got a good look at the costumes. The songs were very nice. Dylan liked to dance, which was his favorite part (despite telling the film crew that his favorite part was the ice cream bar purchased before the show.) He liked the animated skeleton. Ate crackers, cheese sandwitch, ice cream bar!, M&Ms. Liked the drum solo (though he fell asleep thereafter). The stage was very big and awesome. Pretty lights. He liked all the pretty shirts that the crowd was wearing. It wasn't too bad having to wake and walk back to the car — he liked getting to hold the flashlight, it was nice of Cassidy to offer. He liked the Grateful Dead and all the stuff about it. Dylan would like to go to another Dead concert soon. It was fun staying up extra extra late.

Cassidy, age 8: His favorite part was crossing his fingers right before the last song, and having it turn up Sugar Magnolia, as he'd hoped all day long. The drive seemed like a short time — two hours wasn't that long. The walk to the concert was good exercise, but it was too long. Waiting was okay (he liked coloring, playing with the other kids, etc.). He liked having a warm-up band — gave them something to listen to while waiting. Not as good as the Grateful Dead, they were still really good. Jazzy clothing. He really liked it when the Grateful Dead started. "So this is why you like to come to all those Grateful Dead shows." When the Dead started he thought that this was the best rock band in the whole wide world, he could see why there were so many Deadheads. He pretended to play guitar for some of it (some of it on a miniature guitar). He didn't dance that much, until some crazy dancing when it got dark. He could see the TV screen very well: he could even see it sometimes when sitting down. He liked the big slinky arched across the stage, as well as catching and throwing a very large long balloon. He liked holding the flashlight for most of the walk back to the car — he was very nice in suggesting that Dylan might like to hold it for a while. It looked like a different place in the dark. He would like to go again, to the very next Dead show.

08-03-94 Giants Stadium - John W. Scott

The following is an interview of Bob Hartnett, the video director for the Dead's summer tours, which I conducted before the first Giants show. Most of the interview occured during Traffic's set, and much of the transcription was difficult given the background music — consequently there are gaps and inaccuracies.

As the interview started, Bob had just described the elaborate air-conditioning system that kept the band cool. He noted that this was the only outdoor air-conditioned stage on tour, and that it did not provide relief for the staff, not even the video crew working under the stage. He then moved on to describe the equipment.

B: This is the Nocturne system that U2 used on the Zoo TV tour. So it's pretty much configured similarly, and we're using the same media engine. It's kind of a proprietary program that was written by Dave Lemmock who's the EIC on this tour. Basically that's controlling the laser discs. We have the songs laid in by song title and then we just click on a title and that'll cue and spin the laser disc for whatever we're using as roll-ins. So the media engine is driving the laser discs and, in some cases, routing them to where we're gonna go.

J: Does that mean you always get the same images on the same songs?

B: No, because, as I told you last year, we had broken down the songs by groupings, categorizing them — there's no way to have discrete imagery for every single song. When they do two songs in the same category in a row we need an alternate version of each so we don't use the same visuals back to back. We have a pre-plan, because this year — between the video walls and the scrims — Candace is throwing up imagery and I'm putting up imagery, so we're trying to coordinate it overall. We have a format that is our A choice or our B choice and then some other suggestions, other ideas about what if we want to go in another direction. When a song is played at a slower tempo and it's not really fitting the pace of the visuals... or what if it's a longer jam and now the jam is starting to permutate into something else? Let's switch track on the visuals. We have five laser discs each and only four players each so we do a hot switch right before Drums and Space because we each have one disc that's dedicated to Drums and Space.

J: You only had three laser drives last year?

B: Yes, we had three laser drives last year and this time we each have four, we actually have nine hours of laser disc material. I have four laser players and Candace has four for the projections. Candace is actually driving the projectors that are on the scrims stage left and right, and I'm controlling the video wall images. Now sometimes we do a global where I'm feeding something that goes every surface or I'm taking Candace's feed and adding it to the camera — image magnification stuff — so we're actually cross-pollinating back and forth.

Originally we built in the redundancy for a couple of reasons. If we had some sort of catastrophic failure we could keep going because she could punch me up or I could punch her up. So if either of our systems crashed independently then the other system could carry the whole load so the show keeps going and we don't lose any of the imagery. It's kind of a fail-safe for that reason also.

This is the Pinnacle, it's the same DVE as we had last year, digital video effects made by Pinnacle. And, again, we have the same effects guy this year, Jerry Belec, he works for BCTV, Vancouver. He's the demo person for Pinnacle at all the broadcasting trade shows. He pretty much drives this in real time. Again, one of the limitations, or one of the challenges, is that we're doing this in real time. We never know where they're going, we don't know how long the song's going to be. The instrumental break could be four bars or sixty-four bars, you have no idea where it's gonna go. We have to pretty much flow with them. (To Jim who is editing the parkling lot footage: That's great, with the bear and the kid, Jim.) We can only pre-program a certain amount of stuff and then, of course, they'll throw a song into the repertoire that we haven't even considered. Especially in Drums and Space it's total improvisation for us as well as them.

J: Which must be the fun part for you, you get to cut loose.

B: It's the challenge. You get to use every wipe that you've never used in conventional broadcasting. Those are the different wipe buttons down there. When they did Foolish Heart the other night, we ended up using the heart wipe. We try to be a mixture of somewhat literal as well as somewhat abstract at the same time which is a fine balance to follow.

J: So there are 24 different wipes?

B: Actually there are more because there's an extender card so each wipe is doubled. So we have a ton of them. This is a Grass Valley 250, it's a step up from the switcher we had last year. It can do more levels of keying which is essential because a lot of times we have six different keys in. We have the laser disc, we have the cameras, and then we're adding wipes and colors on top of each other so it gets very heavily layered. I end up sitting here and I'm directing the camera, the TD, and the effects.

(Broadcast to crew:) Be aware that Traffic's going on now, and there's a chance Garcia may play with them tonight. I'm gonna try to get word from it, but if Garcia plays with them tonight everyone needs to be in place by the last couple of Traffic songs.

Here I'm looking at all the cameras. Basically, the cameras as I have them all laid out - there's one long lens, a 55:1 long lens out in the house. They're all chip cameras, we're using this Sony HL 55As. They're a little bit more light-sensitive than last year which is good because this is basically a low-light-level show. So I have one camera in the house, which is camera 2, that's out by the sound mix. Camera 1 and camera 3 are the two pit cameras. And camera 4 is what we call "Vinnie Cam," just down stage left of Vinnie; I have three robo-cams. Five is the Disc Cam which is mainly for when Billy when turns around and plays his pods during Drums, and it's for Mickey because that's the part of the show the fans never get to see. They have their backs to them or they are in profile and because the pods are hidden, the fans can't see that, so this is the only way we can do this.

J: You pointed out last year that lighting was a problem too.

B: This year they have re-lit with some lights actually down low behind the drum kit so they're illuminated during Drums a little better. Camera 6 is what we call "Beam Cam." It's hung off to the side and that's mainly for the shot of Mickey at the beam. The last camera, camera 7, is what we call "Way-back Cam." That's in Candace Land, and that is just an ultra wide shot which shows me what the overall palette is looking like, so I know if I want to match... we're constantly dialing colors. One of the things Candace and I have tried to do is to get the lighting more in synch with the video and the pieces within the video.

We went in three days early in both Vermont and Las Vegas. And what we did was, for three nights, we put up all the possible video combinations and looked at them with the lighting macros for the individual songs we wanted to use. So even though we didn't have rehearsal time with the band... it's funny, our band was cardboard cutouts that we used to pick the lighting spots. So we had all different cutouts representing the band members and we actually did a rehearsal with all the laser discs, with the lighting frames and macros, and then with the cameras, to peg out in this look. We want a big Jerry, a small Jerry, a face Jerry. For this Phil song we want Phil, we want the harmonies on either side of him.

J: Did you actually play music over the PA?

B: No, but we had a boom box out there playing show tapes, so we were playing the home version of the game. We really took a lot of time.

What we're trying to do, and really the biggest challenge, was to make the video that's on the scrims look like it's melts into both the lighting frame as well as carries up into the video wall. Because of the different technology that's really hard to do — the video wall is a very different look than the projection look. The video wall is really good thing because it's letting us do video for the first set. Previously, we would shoot the first set but nobody could see it because it wasn't dark enough. Projection doesn't read until dark, but the video wall lets us get video up during the first set and then as it starts to get dark towards the end of the set, then we can come on with the projectors.

Now what we're actually going to do tonight, which we've done in a couple of places, is while all four of them are singing, have two of them on the wall, and two of them on the projection surfaces. So you can actually see all four at the same time. We've done a variation of that where we've put up all four side by side on the wall, but it's a little crowded and if they move around you start to get cut off.

Tonight we're gonna try something different; Candace and I are constantly trying to make the show different... We can route all four surfaces independently. You can see down there: it's labeled Candace A and Candace B. I have a stereo feed, if you will, a right and left from Candace because she has a stereo feed — she can feed different images to each side. Some globals have an A, B and I have an A, B. My aux 1 and aux 2 up there, that's what I'm sending at Candace. So when all four are singing on the program I'll have, say, Bob, and on the small wall stage left I'll have Jerry, and then I'll send her Vinnie on one line and Phil on the other, so she'll put up Phil and Vinnie and I'll have Bob and Jerry up, so we'll have all four up at the same time...

Nobody's really done it, we're doing it differently. Zoo TV kind of pushed the envelope in terms of electronic technology, but we're using it a little differently than they are. We're trying use the set to create a mini-environment. When it's songs pertaining to the road and road life we want to get that highway feel, and we have a white line on a highway we shot. And then we have star field look for nighttime or space or trippy things. We have kaleidoscopes...

This color wash which was done for us by a guy out in New York, Cliff Moorehead. It's been the usual submissions, we have about ten different artists who've given us pieces for the graphics. Robin Stelling was the art director and she was amazing — she created nine hours of video material with not that big a budget. The Stones had double the budget for an hour and a half worth of stuff. We did nine hours, which was amazing.

J: Why are you located under the stage?

B: For one thing, I get claustrophobic. So if I had to walk through the house, they would have to carry me out on a stretcher.

J: You don't get claustrophobic down here?

B: No, we're the only ones down here. But to go through a crowd of this size would be terrifying for me, so I try and avoid it.

More importantly, it gets so loud out there, that no one can hear me with my mic open. The head sets have an amplifier which also amplifies the music — while I'm giving camera directions it becomes impossible to hear. So that's a practical reason. Another consideration is cable runs. We have about five miles of cable, so by being here it's a very short run up to both walls and it's a short run to the cameras. Our long run is to Candace and that's about a 250 foot run. We have a 150 foot cable run to the house camera, the camera out by the mix platform. So it's practical considerations. Another one is space-wise. If we were out there, there'd have to be another deck on the lighting booth to accommodate us. This way we can keep the lighting booth shorter, obstructing fewer seats. So there's really a bunch of considerations that make sense. Plus this way it's easier for load in and load out. And actually, if there's an emergency we're close to a) power, b) water, that sort of stuff — there's necessities that we have to deal with.

The only place for us would have been out in Candace Land and she's so far back it would have made a nightmare. Signals need to be timed, that way we can dissolve between them without there being any kind of bump or shift, phasing or horizontal or vertical shift. And to time cable runs of that length is a nightmare. We have so many sources that we took the shortest distance to make sure there's no shifts either horizontally or vertically in the picture — it's kind of like X marks the spot.

We have a stereo input, we have audio coming at us, and we run simultaneous time codes back and forth to audio. Which we needed, because in Las Vegas the temperature was so hot that the tape melted, literally. We had video but the audio track melted on a portion of the video tape. So, luckily the DAT machine that's recording the show is slaved to our Beta recording machine and we passed time codes back and forth. All we had to do was run the DAT in synch with the Beta. We relayed the audio track in perfect synch, so we were able to salvage the masters from Vegas. It was 115° before the stadium was filled with sweaty, dancing people. It was 135° under the stage and we had equipment dying left and right because of the heat.

J: Who was it who scheduled a show in a desert three days after the longest day of the year?

B: Well, we got bumped because of World Cup Soccer. All the venues we are playing were World Cup Soccer venues, so we got pushed out a little further which really made a big difference. Just the difference between early June and July created logistical nightmares for us because it was so hot. People and gear were dropping like flies.

Traffic, the opening act, has been wonderful. They were kind of the inventors of the psychedelic jam. They were the first group to do that. I always thought they were the most Dead-like in terms of stretching out on pieces. They were faithful to the record in terms of verse and chorus, but the breaks could always go in very interesting places. We've been blessed every year by great having opening acts. Winwood himself is amazing, he hasn't aged a day, his voice. One of the keyboard guys was telling me that they used to do Gimme Some Lovin' in G, now they do it in F sharp, so in all of these years he's only lost half a step in his voice. It's been fun. The audience is very appreciative, they get very much into Traffic. There's the tie between... Brent used to do Dear Mr. Fantasy, so the crowd is always really appreciative of that song.

J: I thought Sting was incredible last year, but noticed he wasn't as appreciated by the fans.

B: Yeah, they were polite, but certainly not the enthusiastic response that Traffic's been getting this year. At soundcheck each day they'll pull out other chestnuts they haven't done in twenty years and they are right on. It's amazing how tight they are.

One of the other things we're doing is, we've gotten computer animation of certain cities and venues that we're playing in. We're shooting day-of footage, both local scenics as well as day-of footage at each of the concerts. And then we kind of roll that into the opening each night to give everyone the feel that: a) it's not only customized, but b) each show is unique. So we try to get footage of the crowd, because the crowd is unique night to night, too. Yes, we get a lot of repeat audience which is always an impetus for us to change things and try to make the show different every night. But also there's a certain feel for each night which we try to catch in the crowd as well as the band.

Well, this is pretty much the engineering setup. This is Jerry, who is actually the effects operator. And then Jim down there, he's driving laser discs and tape. And this is my preview station where I can see all the cameras, I can see the laser discs.

J: What is VT 1 and 2 (pointing to two monitors)?

B: That's two things: a) we record every performance for the archives, so I can look down and see that, yes, tape is rolling and recording. The other VT is a playback VT, because not only do we have daily-output footage coming back at us (you see the tail end of the Columbus footage there)... So that is the playback reel which has not only daily footage, but other effects — we'll build effects that we'll play back off tape. So one's a record reel, the other's a playback reel.

The playback reel has certain pieces we've either speeded up or slowed down if we've realized the laser disc is too fast or too slow. We can play the laser disc at half speed or full speed, but if it falls somewhere in between we'll then lay it off on tape in between the two, like three-quarter speed, or maybe one-quarter speed. Sometimes, like on a star field — which works very well on Long Way to Go Home — if the band is playing at a slower or faster tempo, we want to compensate. So the important thing is not only the look of the visuals, but the pacing of them. To me the most important thing is that what's happening is a complement to what the lyrics are saying and what the music is doing. Like when Jerry changes MIDI voices I always try to go to a new effect — because the music is taking a new direction, so the visuals can take a new direction also. We're trying to be in synch with everything that's going on. It's like this giant, multi-headed monster with 200 arms, legs, and heads trying to all row the boat together at the same time.

It's like Jerry Belec during Space. We're listening, because when Bralove starts playing loops, or when we hear the drum pods change, or when we start getting the 360° sound wash, then Jerry takes off in a direction... We are constantly moving to match the whooshes that we're getting, what we're hearing. So everybody is trying to be in tune, and it really takes a lot of concentration. This is really a challenging show to do.

J: What do you think of the John Cutler sound system?

B: I think John's been doing a wonderful job. He's been their record producer for years. He's been doing that job, and he's never done a stadium tour before. I think the mix I get, what we've been hearing, is wonderful. It's been a little bit different. John's trying some new things, it's gone in different directions, so it's hard to directly compare left and right. They've got some new gear this year, they're trying to work out some new delay scenarios, and I know it's been a lot of fun, because John's been back with us. We'll record the soundcheck and the shows, and he'll come back and look at tapes with us, listen to tapes with us, and we'll talk about it. "Do you want to try this," and "Do you want to try that?" It's been really good. Everybody has been collaboratively working on ideas for visuals, lighting, and sound. John will come up with some visual suggestions, and Candace will come up with sound suggestions, or we'll all sit and brainstorm and try to come up with new ways of doing things.

We've been trying to bring video up to the same state of the art level as the music; at this point I think we are succeeding.

J: When are they going to bring back pay-per-view?

B: Well, they're kicking that around, it's in the works. But the timetable's always closed — they're all real busy, so finding the time is always hard.

They realize that when they're playing a big stadium, they're really concerned that everyone who comes to the stadium "gets the show." And it's hard if you're sitting up in the back row, they're this big (holds his thumb and forefinger barely apart). So this is one way of bringing it closer.

When Bill Graham died some of the archive material opened up and was made available to us. The Dead then realized, we need to document this. You never know what's going to happen, so it makes sense to document the whole scene and the shows, and it's a good thing to have.

During the intermission, we wanted to get more submissions from fans — doing fan home movies and that kind of stuff. We thought the fans are such an integral part of this, and we really wanted to do things that involved them more and more. We've already started talking about a video game that the entire audience could play. Like a Pong, or a MIDI ball that we could throw out to the audience, and by way they bat it around it would change lights or play pong on the screen.

(...) The thing is, too, there's such a myriad of ages at the shows. We want to appeal to the different age groups, too. This is one of the few shows where you have infants in their parents' arms and people in their fifties and sixties who've been fans for thirty years.

(...) This is the Robo Cam station. It's a real good system that we've been using. Jim, who's the operator uses a touch screen; he has three different cameras. He's got a combination of pre-programmed moves, and he can operate them with a joystick, zooming in, zooming out. We have three robo cams now, but at some point I hope to go with four.

This is Bruce, he's the shader. He ends up doing the iris levels, the brightness and the darkness levels on all the cameras. So for this kind of show where the lights are constantly changing, it's a challenging position.

On that rack we have the four laser disc players and four frame synchs that take the input and put it into the switchers so we can dissolve in and out.

(new tape...) For my own amusement I checked how many hours I put into it, and I put into about 1500 hours already since the end of February. It's a humongous undertaking.

It's certainly a fun show to do because the crowd makes it a lot of fun, and it's an ever-changing universe. No song's ever the same twice, so that part of it always makes it a challenge. And to keep the concentration level up for the amount of time is really hard.

Why don't we walk out, we can go out to the house cameras and see the viewpoint from out there.

(...) This is the video and audio feed that the press come and just plug in directly. McNally will come out with all the various press people for the first few songs. Usually the local stations show up. All the networks have shown up at various places. CTV came over when we were in Vermont because we were just over the border, plus we had a Canadian on the crew.

We have two projection areas: that one up there which is projecting to stage left, and this one here... There are six projectors projecting to stage left, and three here which are going to stage right. So actually as you're looking at it now, it's kind of non-descript, but then later, once it gets dark, the wall and the screens come up, then you'll see the whole picture. There's the smaller video wall, it's four by five. These are digi-walls.

J: Why don't the walls have to be even, or square, say five by five?

B: It ended up being that way. Originally, we played with different shapes, but then we realized we're combining projection and video walls, and it was better to go with this configuration. And the reason we ended up with squares is because we only have four hours to hang all this stuff, and this was the easiest hang; it had to become simplified. Next year we're talking about doing four individual shapes in different places, like having a circle, a triangle, an octagon, and some other shape. That way we'd have four discrete surfaces and they could all be up at the same time.

(...) This is Bob Loney.

(...) To keep the projectors cool — especially after Las Vegas — we have an air conditioner that's blowing cold air under each projector lens to keep them from blowing up as one did in Las Vegas because of the heat. So this creation (points to an elaborate system of dryer hoses), this octopi, was fabricated on the fly to save our asses. It was Bob's idea and design.

At this point Bob Hartnett needs to get back to his station in anticipation of Jerry's apprearcance for Dear Mr. Fantasy. He leaves me in the capable hands of his projectionist.

Bob Loney: (...) In Vegas we had to go back to the old dry ice method. We piled dry ice under the fan inlets. We still had a couple failures; it was basically just ambient temperature — projectors overheating.

This is the old stand-by light valve projection, developed for the military just a little over a decade ago. It's still, as of this year — it seems the LCDs may actually be taking over in terms of brightness and resolution — but right up until last year, this was the best machine you could get. Those machines over there are the triple light valves, the 3LVs they call them. They're typically stacked vertically, those first three units, and sell as one machine. They create one image between the three of them in red, green, and blue. All six machines are mechanically-aligned to create one image. It's overlaid for brightness. The screens are 240 feet away.

The interesting thing about this production is that we have no video screens. It's very non-traditional, and it's also very chancy, actually. We're losing a stop and a half just because the scrims are non-reflective. It's a chance Candace and I figured we could take in order to get a non-video look, less of television, more of a daydream.

As to the subsequent concerts — each night I found Traffic to be excellent. I was a fan of theirs before I discovered the Grateful Dead and was thrilled to find Winwood and Capaldi in such fine fettle after all these years. John Barleycorn was my personal highlight of the run. Frankly my other memorable moments were all of Traffic — Low Spark, Medicated Goo, and all my other favorites culminating in the closing jam on the second night with Jerry, Mickey and Bill. Sigh. I'm still looking for tapes. The Dead sets paled by comparison, despite a few good individual efforts and Bruce Hornsby's best intentions. The visuals, however, were never less than enthralling.

10-01-94 Boston Garden - Peter Lavezzoli

Having seen every show in 1995, and most of the Fall 1994 Tour, this show stands out as the undisputed heavyweight champion. If I had to pick one show to represent Jerry in the best light during the final 12 months of his life, 10-1-94 is the clear choice. Not only because of the extraordinary power of his performance, but also because of the songlist. We virtually have the ideal "Farewell" show for Garcia, with Help>Slip>Franklin's, heartwrenching ballads like So Many Roads and Stella Blue, along with classic performances of Scarlet>Fire and Terrapin. Of equal importance is that the entire band is equally as inspired, each player giving their best. Both sets are developed and very well played, almost an impossibility for this final period in their career.

The opening Help> Slip> Franklin's immediately finds Jerry in a special place, extroverted and focused. Slipknot goes into some colorful and substantial jams, but things really fly with Franklin's. Garcia conjures up as many vocal and instrumental flourishes as he can muster, and the band has no choice but to follow suit. This sets a powerful trend for the rest of the night. Walkin Blues is prime Bob Weir blues. Althea is another standout, with Jerry having the attitude to really pull this off handsomely with his vocals and leads. Weir harkens back to the old spirit with a robust Uncle> River on his acoustic, with Jerry again in fine form. Phil gets inspired to join the party with a bright and witty Tom Thumb where he says, "My best friend, my drummer, won't even tell me what it is I DROPPED." Jerry goes deep with a version of So Many Roads that reaches some of the highest emotional peaks this song has known in its brief existence. His closing vocal climax will likely bring tears to one's eyes as he reaches for the highest peaks. Simply stunning. What always struck me as interesting was how Garcia could evoke such powerful vocals from such a frail body during this final period. Truly the sound of a fighting spirit. Promised Land closes the set in fine style, with a rocking finale.

This Scarlet>Fire may not be as celebrated as the subsequent MSG version from 10-14, but it is equally as exciting, particularly in context of this whole show. The lengthy transition jam goes far out to explore many different colors and themes before Phil brings in the Fire. The entire band is engaged here, but Jerry is at the forefront. Fire is all Jerry, with some of his most extroverted vocal flourishes during the song's final choruses ever. This man is simply performing at the peak of his ability tonight, there is no sign of anything being held back.

Way to Go Home could have been a disaster at this point, but it is quite well played and exciting. Vince's vocals are up front and committed, as is the band behind him with their harmonies. Even Saint of Circumstance works well here, given a powerful treatment during the "Rainfall" jam. Then we get to the next highlight of this show. This is the last truly great version of Terrapin in GD history. Not only does Jerry sing and play this version with absolutely no mistakes, but he gives that extra effort that pushes it way over the top. Every lyric has emotional emphasis, the quiet middle jam is fully explored, and the closing jam builds to dazzling heights before it expands out into a freeform "Jam" that slowly works its way into Drums. The "Jam" segment is very well developed and certainly should be labeled as such in the setlist. Drums and Space are both colorful and exciting in ways that carry over the power of the Terrapin>Jam.

The remainder of the show is one grand finale. As seems hauntingly appropriate for what seems to be the last truly great GD performance, The Last Time rocks hard, working its way down into one of the finest versions of Stella Blue ever done! This has to be the most heart-wrenching version from the 90s (although 5-26-95 is another great one). What makes this one unique is that apart from an outstanding vocal performance from Jerry during the main body of the song, at the climax of the closing jam he comes back in shouting "Stella BLUE, BLUE, BLUE!" Again the listener may find themselves on the verge of tears at this extraordinary outburst, truly soul-shaking. Saturday Night closes the set in fine rocking form, with everyone giving their all. Garcia comes back for a Liberty encore that sums up the power of this night: when he misses the lyrics for the final verse, he waits until the next go around and sings the verse again the RIGHT way, with extra emphasis, as if to say: "THAT'S how it's done." Yes, Jerry, that most certainly is how it's done.

12-09-94 Oakland - M. Dolgushkin & David Greenberg

Unlike the night before, this show was more/less sold out, but was still not overly crowded. Feel Like a Stranger was a strong opener with a likewise strong jam, even though all we could really hear so far were the drums and vocals. Stagger Lee was a good second choice, providing a great one-two punch. The guitar break was extra long, much like Ramble On Rose these days (more on that later). The mix was still muddy, although we could hear Bob when he played slide. Bobby's blues slot was inhabited by The Same Thing. Vince fluidly switched between piano and synth to an outstanding effect. His piano playing on this tune lent it an authoritative blues flavor. This being the first ever show where the TelePrompTers were in use, they were either not on yet or not in focus, as Jerry was obviously not sure of the words to Loose Lucy. There was still no audible bass, which perpetuated Dave's disgruntled state of mind. El Paso has experienced a rennaisance since Bobby began playing acoustic again. This version was typically good although Jerry was not really there during the guitar break. Conversely, Vince's piano playing was outstanding to the extent that it compensated for Jerry's tentativeness. Which carried over into the next song, Broken Arrow. A rather marginal version. Jerry lost it during the break, but not nearly as monumentally as he did during the next tune, Ramble On Rose. Ramble was the operative word here. Not only did Jerry forget the beginning of the second verse, but the break was stretched to a record length because he essentially forgot how the song went. He looked like a deer caught in headlights, but recovered nicely at the end. we wondered if part of the problem was that he perhaps couldn't hear himself in the monitor mix. We sure as hell couldn't hear a lot of things coming out of the P.A. Which brings us to the set closer — The Music Never Stopped. In retrospect maybe the music shouldn't have started if Phil and Jerry couldn't have been dialed into the mix properly. Cutler must have been taking a piss during this song.

None of the preceding could have prepared us for what was to follow. Scarlet Begonias (during which Mickey and Billy were joined by Sikiru Adepoju) was a departure from the norm. This version was BONAFIDE! We looked at each other, smiled and said "3/16/88!" The jam on Scarlet bore this out. It was long and sumptuous. Fire on the Mountain raged, despite the absence of verse 2. Not that too many people probably noticed due to the epic jam of Biblical proportions. Next was Phil's choice (he counted off the intro) — Way to Go Home. This song is much maligned for being overplayed but in many cases, tonight included, it's one of their stronger numbers. Possibly the slowest ever version of Truckin' came next. Steady but slow nonetheless. Dave thought he picked the right time to give up Quaaludes. This slid neatly into That Would Be Something. We both feel that if Garcia ever forgets the words to this tune, then we're really in trouble. The highlight of the show was the jam out of an adequate He's Gone, with hints of the Mind Left Body jam. This was followed by an EXTREMELY long drums and Space, during which our friend Mike Wolfgram who had been sitting with us disappeared and was never seen again. Parts of Space hinted at the jam out of The Other One from Reno on 5/12/74. Things were looking bright when the band went into a nice Box of Rain. Imagine our surprise when they abruptly left the stage at the end of the song. Sure enough, it was 11 o'clock. They came back for a smokin' Johnny B.Goode, the tightest song of the show. The sound was amazing. Why couldn't it have been that way the rest of the night?

02-21-95 Salt Lake City - Brett Parnes

What a treat to get the opportunity to review this particular show, which I consider, hands-down, the best show of the 28 I had the pleasure of seeing in 1995. Although unbelievably conservative, Salt Lake City is one of the most beautiful cities in this country, and the weather for the Dead's first visit to Utah since 1987 was astoundingly mild for February. A couple of our buddies live in town and took care of booking us a hotel room and all of our friends came to town to kick off 1995 tour, of which we crammed about twenty into the room. As far as location goes, you couldn't beat this place, as this hotel room was practically in the parking lot of the Delta Center! Like Bobby promised, you really could feel the magic in the air and this was one of those weekends when everything was absolutely perfect. The first two shows were great. And the third night was chock-full of surprises.

For Mormon Town, the lot was remarkably relaxed. I didn't see anyone getting hassled by event staff or the cops outside. Vending was decent, although not spectacular and I made my money selling some airbrushed shirts my friend Michael kicked down to me. The Delta Center is located right downtown, just a couple of blocks from Temple Square, a Mormon religious epicenter and home of the Tabernacle Choir, which was kinda cool to check out. They've got these four plaques on a wall there, and three of them can represent Dead tunes (or covers), if you're in that mindset: The Law, The Way, and Liberty. At one point, I saw the skeleton walking around inside the Square.

Like the lot, the inside of the venue was pretty mellow, too, although there were so many event staff cracking down on dancing in the aisles and the like (at least on the lower level and floor) that I wouldn't have wanted to press my luck doing anything too crazy (translation: blatantly illegal). The Delta center is an ample facility, although not great. There is a decent amount of space in the corridors and the venue provided a smoking section—something which too many venues never took the effort to provide. Unfortunately, the sound was terrible, which would explain why every audience tape I have ever heard from these shows sounds like it was taped in a bathroom.

The first thing that pops to mind thinking about this show was when my buddy Kevin called me just after the shows were announced. He drew my attention to the fact that the last two times the Dead played Salt Lake City they brought songs back. Now, Kev probably spends too much time reading DeadBase, but in this case he was on to something. After giving birth to all those new songs the last three Februarys, the band was ready to shine the light of day on some older tunes this year. It was revival weekend in Brigham's valley.

The Dead had never played the tune Salt Lake City before, and our inside joke was that they were sure to play it at these shows, although I doubt any of us actually believed it. By the third night we had all forgotten about the song, which gave it back its element of surprise when they opened this show up with it. What a thrill! The lyrics were hard to hear, at least where I was sitting, and it did come off performance-wise as you might expect a debut to sound — but WOW! This set the stage for a really great show; although there were a couple of patches of average play and selection, overall this show was really solid and the special inclusion of some rare numbers gave it a unique personality all to its own.

The first set continued with a cool FOTD and a Wang Dang which featured some nice guitar work by Jerry. After Tennessee Jed and Broken Arrow, we were treated to a sweet BT Wind, one of my personal favorite first set numbers. The So Many Roads was an emotion-laced masterpiece, as most were in 1995. The set closed with a really great Music Never Stopped. The slow jam was nicely spacy and Vinny went off loud in the mix on the hard jam, celebrating his 44th birthday with flare.

I went up to the upper level to be with some friends for the first half of the second set. If you've never been to the Delta Center, you can trust me when I say that the sound up top absolutely sucks. The venue is very short in length, but more than makes up for it in height. The second level starts at an unusually lofty elevation compared to the bottom tier. Clearly, this venue was not built for acoustics. The second set was very short. In fact, the entire pre-drums clocked in at a mere 35 minutes or so, barely longer than your average Scarlet/Fire. While it lacked in the wide-open jams which always get me off, it was a really good set nonetheless. The Foolish Heart came over strong and, following Samba, the band launched into Truckin'. This version was short in the back end and didn't have the exploratory zeal that so many renditions possess, but it joyfully segued into surprise #2 of the night: I Just Want to Make Love to You. It was the first time the boys put it on stage since they played a pair of them in 1984. But Jerry's version was much different than the Brent versions and was a little hard to pick out at first. I can't say that I'm too disappointed that they never played it again after this show. It didn't come off too well. Truth is, it was barely coherent. To say it needed work is probably a severe understatement, but WOW again! It was an incredibly unexpected treat to see the Dead reach so far down into their bag of tricks — and this was one of my highlights of the year to be sure. Following That Would Be Something, I headed down back to the lower bowl where the sound was a little better.

Drums was pretty cool, and had this submerged-under-water-type-thing going on. Drums gave way into Space pretty quickly and Space rapidly congealed into the melodic realization of surprise #3 of the night. I've always liked Visions of Johanna and I've listened to the '86 versions countless times, but I never would have thought that they would possibly bring that one back. Not tonight, at least. But WOW again, again! It came off nearly perfect, settling the show's claim as one of the greats of 1995, in my opinion. A truly rocking Sugar Mag closed the show off and we were waiting for the encore a scant one hour fifteen minutes after the start of the set. This show really deserved a special encore. Unfortunately, it wasn't to be. Liberty was the final number of the three night stand. We rushed back to the hotel room to grab some floor space and went skiing the next day. I fell down a lot. Then, off to Oakland.

The Wolfgrams, in their cute little van, showed up at my house sometime in the afternoon. My pal downtown never came up with the extra ticket although, to be fair, he didn't come up with one for himself either. Cindy dropped Mike and me off downtown and we took BART to the Coliseum, where we encountered the Lewises and waited in line FOREVER. During this time I found bottle caps from every microbrewery in the United States.

Upon finally entering the venue our intention was to cut directly across the floor and up to the roped off section, however, the floor was full and one could not enter it without giving the password. One of the BGP bluecoats was nice enough to give it to us, so we cut across the floor and made it to the roped off section before it filled up. Backstage the situation was still as it was the previous two nights.

David Murray opened the show with some out-there, spacy jazz that, for once, sounded good in this cavernous arena. During the next break I found Dave Greenberg sitting closer to the floor not too far from us. Mike and I also wandered around backstage some more.

The Dead's first set opened with Good Times, the first I'd heard live since Brent died. The rest of the set was played competently but not with as much fire as the other nights. Was it ever short! Thirty-seven MINUTES! Have the Dead ever played a shorter first set? I think not.

We went backstage again to mull over the length of the preceding set. I decided to go behind the party room to look at the parade floats before they went out. My boss MVD was back there, so were Whitney and her brother. She told me she would be dressed as the Moon on BGP's float. I said I'd keep an eye out for her.

We went back up top. Soon the parade started. Such dazzling sights to behold! The Mars Hotel. "Skelvis." A pagan-ish float with lots of bare-breasted young maidens. However, I did not see Whitney dressed as the Moon, no matter how hard I looked.

The parade drumming melted expectedly into Iko Iko after which the music inexplicably continued in a similar vein with Samson and Delilah. An awful Ship of Fools followed. David Murray showed up for the jam. This jam has been almost universally badmouthed with good reason; the sound coming out of the PA sucked! Murray was playing his ass off and we couldn't hear him! The band could, he comes through loud and clear on the monitor mix tape that recently surfaced. There was some amazing interplay happening onstage during Estimated Prophet and Eyes of the World, it's just too bad that Cutler or whoever didn't have the presence of mind to dial it in so we could ALL hear it. How frustrating!

The rest of the set carried on in the same fashion. It was painful to hear Days Between get cut off prematurely. Not Fade Away was alright. The encore was Box of Rain. Mark went a night too early.

03-23-95 Charlotte Coliseum - Anonymous

Except for the "Unbroken Chain" breakout in Philadelphia, this is, arguably, the other big highlight of Spring Tour, 1995. By mid-afternoon, everyone in the parking lot knew that a grand piano had been delivered for the show, and that could only mean one thing — Bruce Hornsby would be making a welcome appearance.

Despite the beautiful weather and a fun, sprawling vending scene, no one with a ticket and their right mind would have been anywhere but inside as the lights went down. This Thursday night the anticipation crackled. Something special was coming, there was just no doubt about it. The band was grinning as "Mississippi Half Step" opened up what was to be one of the best shows in recent times. Jerry was bouncy, happy, grooving with Bruce's piano from the get-go.

Bobby answered with a "Wang Dang Doodle" that had the crowd leaping, and it was quite certain that we WERE going to pitch one all night long! Everyone was pumped; rarely in recent years have I seen so much energy flowing between the performers and the crowd and back again in only two songs. Jerry brought out a "Cold Rain and Snow" that was a great juxtaposition to the hot, sunny spring day we had all enjoyed, and Phil's scorching bass lines rocked this version to new heights. Next up, Bobby on an acoustic "El Paso." There are a few picky Deadheads that pride themselves on their musical elitism, and they seem to think of this song as a throwaway. But truly, Bobby's acoustic work is lovely, and on this night, it added a wistful, romantic dimension to this old standard.

Jerry got back into the act with "Loser." This rendition had more of a shuffle to it than other darker, slinkier interpretations, and Vince's vocals rounded it out nicely. Jerry flubbed the lyrics here and there, somewhat distracting, but not alarming. His execution, however, was flawless and cut right to the bone. Bruce's piano laid down an added texture that made this a lively, complex version.

A somewhat sloppy "Easy Answers" was the only weak point in the set, with uncertain guitar licks from Jerry, and everyone seeming somewhat out of sync. But this fully satisfying set was rounded out with a soulful "So Many Roads." Although, again, Garcia's chops seemed tentative, almost out of key, he belted out the final refrain in a crescendo that brought tears to my eyes.

"Unbroken Chain." Probably everybody has a very special, deeply personal history with this song. My husband, photographer John Rottet, "got it" many years ago, thanks to "Unbroken Chain." Hearing that Phil had given it live birth at Philly, we had walked around in tears and goosebumps for three days. As the lights went down after the set break, and Bruce's piano introduced the first chords, meltdown was achieved. From those very first notes, anyone that attended that second set at Charlotte was probably changed for life. It was one of those golden moments that we hold forever, that will shine no matter how dark the days may become. With Phil faithfully following the "Mars Hotel" recording, augmented by Bruce's skillful and beautiful interpretation, this version is transcendent, and is perhaps the finest ever performed.

There was only the barest pause, as Phil smiled, receiving the crowd's passionate appreciation. And then, with an excess of purest heaven, Jerry cranked up a stunner — "Scarlet>Fire!" Jerry stoked the flames — huge, round licks, firing back and forth with Bruce, who just grinned like a demon and flew right along! The rest of the band rode the groove perfectly, but this was for sure the Jerry and Bruce show. They danced, dueled, challenged, going head to head, note to note. On and on they rolled. Unlike in some past shows, the pace was intense but unhurried, coaxing every liquid drop of joy juice from their instruments. Twenty six minutes of sweaty, ecstatic bliss.

On the verge of collapse, I expected some sort of musical letdown. Wrong. Even though "Corinna" is not always my favorite, it is great for jammy explorations, and this one was exceptionally fun. Garcia was clearly enjoying every single note, and was rocking right along, finding groove after groove, underscoring Bobby's vocals. If the groove was ever in danger of dissolving into boring repetition, Vince's powerful harmonies and Bruce's pounding gospel-drenched layers kicked things to new heights.

As "Corinna" wound down, it was clear that Jerry was just not going to quit. He was having a pure blast, and kept things humming right into a tasty "Matilda" that rocked and rocked like there was no tomorrow. He and Bruce continued to trade licks, until, satiated with the music, he stepped off and Bruce took the jam onward. Cranking out riffs that spiraled and spilled over each other, Bruce blew the show to soaring heights before turning the stage over to the drummers. With a stellar, pulsing performance, Mickey and Billy kept a complex groove going, until they were joined by Vince, Bobby, and Bruce. The space jam was quite dynamic as a result, boosted by the later appearance of Phil. At last, Jerry came out, winding down some of the energy. He added a long, sweet but sad note to the mix, leading at last into an incredibly powerful "Days Between." The vocals were exquisite, tender, heartbreaking on this profound song. Bobby's "Good Lovin'" brought back the fun-loving rocking vibe, but everyone was deeply moved by the various moods and flavors of this set. Then, just when we were sure it couldn't have gotten any better, the boys served up "The Weight" for dessert. It was a delicious choice, the perfect ending to a perfectly wonderful show.

05-19> 21-95 Las Vegas - Frank Hanwell

It may be an oxymoron, but the Silver Bowl is the coolest stadium in which I have seen the Grateful Dead. The Dead's first set began with Vince asking, "Whoa... Can you hear me out there, audience?" Of course, the crowd cheered in response. "Ok, can they hear me or can't they? What's the deal.. have I got... you guys switch the pedals on me now, is that the story? If you can hear me out there, throw marshmallows." After some vague tuning, Bobby kicked off the weekend with a noticeably short, but tight reading of Picasso Moon. One might think I'm nuts for commenting on this song any further, but it's a lot better suited for late in the first set or opening the second. It's never really been BIG as a show opener. What little energy it produced, short and jamless readings of Friend Of The Devil and Wang Dang Doodle disposed of right quick and proved that this set was going nowhere. It hit rock bottom with the worst version of Althea I've ever heard. At one point, Jerry attempted to sing the bridge, but NOBODY was playing the right part. When Bob picked up his acoustic guitar, it looked like we'd finally get a keeper, but after only a minute he reverted to the electric. The choice of Queen Jane left many, including myself, writing the set off completely. However, as is often the case with this song, it picked up steam somewhere in the middle and came to an impressive conclusion. Deal, after only five songs, was a definite head-scratchier of a choice. Despite delivery of the same quality as the rest of the set (anemic and absentee come to mind), it managed to cough up twice the energy of any of the entries.

As is the norm these days, Here Comes Sunshine was really tight. It was also appropriate with the relentless Nevada sun blazing down on our heads. Ironically but thankfully, following the song's completion, the sun disappeared behind cloud cover for the rest of the day. After Way To Go Home, Weir led the band into an extremely laid-back Playing In The Band that featured a jam that was anything BUT laid-back. Weir engaged what is apparently a new toy for him, commonly known as a phaser (not to be confused with Star Trek), which added a nice spacy texture that was attempted previously in Althea. At this point, I noticed that Bobby was playing a Telecaster guitar, though probably not a Fender, considering his preference for extremely high-tech equipment. Definitely the antithesis of the first set, the jam built strongly for almost ten minutes before climaxing in a crackling cacophony. Some gentle and reflective noodling soon gave way to Uncle John's Band, also very well played but not remotely the same springboard for exploration that Playin' was. In fact, after the final chorus and coda, what normally would be jamland simply defaulted to Drumz.

This edition of Drumz was just as essential listening as on the following two nights. In fact, it may actually have been more intense as Mickey single-handedly outdid Playin's crescendo, drawing the biggest reaction of the day from the crowd. Additionally, the wall of noise generated by The Beam dissolved quite effectively into Space, pre-emptying the section where Bob Bralove twists his knobs. Space didn't really get interesting until its last five minutes, and then Weir took the opportunity to crank up an Easy Answers as laid-back as Playin'. I think the song works fine in this slot, considering our other frequent choices are Miracle and The Last Time. Standing on the Moon made me realize two things: first, Jerry's voice sounded INCREDIBLE compared to Memphis. Second, the song doesn't evolve as much as it's DIFFERENT every time lately, as Pittsburgh would later prove. This particular version featured Garcia bringing the tempo and mood down as he sang, "Be with you." He then took it all the way back up and played his solo before the final climax for another outstanding rendition. Bobby got the final word with an all-out barn-burning Around & Around, chock full of subsonic support from King Phil.

Jerry's flub on Lucy in the Sky, "Picture yourself on a train in a river," ended the evening on a humorous note.

Saturday's festivities began on the way into the parking lot, as the line of traffic came face to face with an enormous dust devil that was easily eight stories tall and fifty feet wide. Not surprisingly, there were a number of lunatics running into and out of it, frolicking like it was a gift from God.

I went in by one o'clock to ensure finding a decent seat. Along the way, I assessed the vending inside the building. Fresh fruit, garden salads, Philly cheesesteaks, fresh-squeezed lemonade and orange juice... Get the picture? There simply is NO other stadium on Dead Tour that goes to lengths as great as these to accommodate concert-goers.

Dave Matthews Band came out and showed me the best opening act for the Dead I've ever seen. Between Dave's numerous humbled appreciations for the people who came in to see him, and his random between-song tangents of speaking in tongues, one might not have known whether to take him seriously or not. His music spoke for itself, though. Highlights included Tripping Billies and #36. They closed the just-over forty-five minute set with a powerhouse version of Ants Marching.

Jerry kicked off the day with a well-received but average Mississippi Half Step. His worst lyrical stumble of the weekend came when it took him three tries to deliver the final verse. The Race Is On, played in honor of The Preakness and not heard since 9-20-93, was the biggest surprise of the day. Bobby missed the last half of the second verse, but with as much fun as it was, I doubt anyone noticed or cared. After a more upbeat version than normal of Lazy River Road, Garcia let loose with some hilarious banter: "Just go ahead and pass all the unconscious people up to the front of, up here... They'll prop 'em up somewhere, stack 'em like logs." Weir interrupted the end of the sentence with, "We collect 'em." Jerry finished the chatter with, "We're not doin' this for fun, ya know... I mean, God." Ironic, considering this was the coolest weather at Vegas shows in four years. The set closed on a mellow note with Eternity.

A strong reading of the warhorse pairing of China Cat Sunflower> I Know You Rider was given an anticlimactic twist when Garcia mistakenly sang his "headlight" verse where Bob's "sun gonna shine" would normally be. I must say that Samba In The Rain showed signs that the song may actually be evolving. The real highlight of pre-Drumz came in the Weir double-shot of Women Are Smarter and Truckin'. The latter featured zesty background vocals from Phil. Unfortunately, the post-song bomb was nowhere to be found, though three aftershocks occurred before Truckin' quickly dissipating into Drumz.

That Would Be Something felt more like it should have emerged from Truckin' instead of The Last Time. Little did anyone know that Jerry was just taking the first half of HIS double-shot, which triumphantly ended the show with a titanic Morning Dew. The middle jam was HUGE, almost as big as the conclusion. Though the day of the week made it obvious, Weir sent us to the casinos with the best encore of the run, One More Saturday Night.

On Sunday, Dave Matthews Band's set featured not a single repeated song from the previous two days. One highlight was True Reflections sung by violinist Boyd Tinsley. Its lyrics were eerily appropriate to many of us who live from tour to tour. They ended with the most explosive version of All Along The Watchtower I've ever heard! Get the tape.

The Dead opened with a scorching Jack Straw, then settled into a mellow set, typical of the previous two days. Highlights came more often, though; this set was twice as well-played as either of the other first sets. Bobby stepped to the front of the stage for some fiery slide work on Little Red Rooster. Phil again swapped "Sergeant-At-Arms" for "Speaker of the House" in Tom Thumb's Blues. However, the real keeper of the set came from Jerry with one of the best So Many Roads I've heard. Put this version on the album. Promised Land displayed the most energy since the set's beginning.

Over the last three years, Sunday second sets in Vegas have become legendary. This one was no exception, rendering the five previous sets as mere building blocks in comparison. Samson & Delilah was huge, with Garcia doing fan-chords at every opportunity. It was magical to be in the company of mostly Left-Coast heads as they roared in appreciation of hearing Unbroken Chain in its first western appearance. Eyes Of The World was a pure natural, done just exactly perfect. Corinna didn't slow anything down, either, and the lengthy jam that followed has me convinced that I Know You Rider is going to pop up in that zone someday.

Carter Beauford of DMB added a third pair of arms to Drumz. Mickey and Billy are formidable in their own right, but every time a guest drummer shows up, the tribal madness is guaranteed to keep almost everyone on their feet.

Traces of the Spanish Jam were frequent through Space, but when Weir began to make it more obvious, the rest of the band snapped up the bait and played it to full bloom for at least five minutes. Not surprisingly, it veered directly into The Other One, with Phil's signature riff slightly understated but up front enough for a big cheer. Days Between stood as the only song that came close to just average. The delicate dynamic balance that's usually achieved wasn't fully on the money. So leave it to Bobby to send us home, without a care in the world, with a simply huge Sugar Magnolia! The climax featured him at the front of the stage, showing off the Bob Weir Horn Section (via MIDI, that is).

Without a doubt, Las Vegas is worth blowing off Spring Tour for. Unless they play Memphis again, of course. But the red-eye back to Babylon sure is a bitch.

05-26-95 Seattle - Thad Taylor

"Never underestimate the Grateful Dead," I said to myself while drifting out of the Seattle Center on this gorgeous May night. I walked aimlessly, utterly astonished at the musical prowess that had just been displayed. Despite all the negativity surrounding the band during the past few tours, the magic hadn't been totally extinguished. This concert proved that the Dead were still perfectly capable of blowing you away on any given night. They capped their three-night stand at this charming outdoor stadium with what might have been their final awe-inspiring performance.

The Seattle Center is a terrific place for Dead shows. There are a several acres of territory to absorb and lessen the impact on Queen Anne and downtown. The police, veterans of this scene by now, were benevolent as far as I could tell.

Memorial Stadium serves primarily as a soccer and football field for high schools, and it had accommodated the Dead beautifully in 1994. This year, however, the place seemed to he oversold. An expressway of bodies ran through the stadium throughout the concert. Coming on the heels of two peaceful shows and positive reports in the local media, this third show had a great feel from the very start. The weather was flawless; the extremely young crowd very well behaved.

Looking at the setlists from the previous two days, I suspected that some of the heavy arsenal was due in the rotation. Wednesday had been a warm up, apparently, but many folks were raving about Thursday's show. Branford Marsalis was in town and this was a REX Benefit concert, so I was hoping for some kind of miraculous collaboration. As it turned out, the band didn't need any help whatsoever.

Immediately I sensed an urgency and intensity in the air when the band walked onstage. All eyes were peeled toward the white mane and dark glasses. There would be no gentle, sunny afternoon warm-up stuff "Help on the Way" ambushed the stunned crowd. Jerry's chops teetered on the edge of collapse, but he hung on and nailed everything perfectly. Phil went absolutely berserk. The unison "Slipknot!" riffs echoed off the coverings that jutted out over the stands. Although a little low in the mix, Garcia patiently sifted through his musical vocabulary. He floated along in the wake of the drummers, who attacked their kits with astonishing intensity. By the time the band kicked into "Franklin's Tower," the floor appeared to be on fire from all the smoke billowing into the air. With beach balls bouncing across outstretched arms, the audience celebrated this epic with unadulterated joy. Suddenly Jerry stopped playing, cocked his head, and pointed out towards the Phil Zone to see if we were into it! We roared, and Jerry put his arm back down to the Bolt for some more bluegrass-tinged soloing. The line "If you get confused, listen to the music PLAAAAY!" sent the place into a frenzy. Jerry rocked backed and forth as though electricity was shooting through his body. His cries at the end of this song reminded me of the classic 1993 Eugene version of "Franklin's." The buildup between the crowd and the band on this one will live with me forever.

An inevitable letdown followed. "The Same Thing" gave everybody a chance to settle in and recover from the thunderous opener. Vince's solo has evolved nicely, giving the song some juice. "Loose Lucy" sparked the crowd. Jerry sang loud and clear, showing no signs of going into any kind of funk. Phil pitched in for the background vocals. "Eternity" had Welnick once again leading the charge' gamely trying to steer the middle jam, which meandered all over the road. Vince went into his Muppet routine, mouth open and head rolling around. It looked like wires from above the stage controlled his hands as they flickered across the keys. With his profile toward the audience, Hart smacked those African-sounding drums in a trance-like state. Bob's acoustic guitar and singing were as steady as ever, and Jerry offered another earnest solo. The crowd acknowledged this nice attempt to get back into "the Zone." "Don't Ease" had some people shuffling their feet and eyeing their watches. I headed toward the stadium entrance to check out the sizzling barbecue offerings. Jerry left the stage looking fatigued. Little did we know, he would get his second wind and take us sailing into the farthest reaches of Dead space during the second half.

The break seemed to last forever. It had to have been over an hour long.

A buoyant "Scarlet Begonias" opened the second set, complete with botched lyrics. This was the perfect choice for the setting. By this time I was feeling nothing but gratitude for the privilege to be there. Similar to the 1994 Seattle version, this "Scarlet> Fire" took some time to get rolling, but the end result was nothing short of spectacular. Jerry wasted no time diving into the transition jam' cruising with his wah-wah on top of Hart's drumming and Phil's relentless bass. Eventually Garcia began creating hysterical whooping noises with his pitch-bending effect pedal. He also let loose with heartfelt vocal improvisation towards the end of "Fire." This was a version unlike any that I have ever heard.

Bob came off the bench to instigate a spirited "Playing in the Band." As I walked around the rear upper walkway, the entire venue seemed to sway in the fading evening light. A hush came over the crowd during the mellow jam, which eventually found its way into "Uncle John's Band." What could be better? Even the security guys sang along. The emotion in the air continued to swell.

With a great burst of Weir feedback, the drummers took over and nearly stole the show. "Drums" was a freaky tribal ceremony right out of a National Geographic TV special. The lights behind the scrims that flanked the stage glowed pink and blue as Bill and Mickey rumbled toward the climax. What followed was one of the greatest post-Drums segments I've ever heard. "Space" contained incredibly coherent, freeform jamming driven by an electronic pulse. With the sun setting, this was a perfectly relaxing interlude. But at least one guy at the show saw it differently. He walked around the bottom rung of the stands, periodically stopping to scream up at the various sections of seats as though he couldn't take any more. That's a telltale sign of a great "Space," if you ask me.

Weir did a tremendous job of sliding from the jam into a funky "Easy Answers," which served as yet another showcase for Welnick's blaring synth. The crowd gave the band an ovation for "EZ" — an unusual reaction, apparently.

Then all eyes turned to Jerry. Standing in a blue pool of light, Garcia ever so gently started "Stella Blue." This song was another thrilling highlight, and one of the most peaceful scenes 1 have ever been a part of. An absolute stillness and quiet came over the stadium. Everyone carved out his or her own spot, giving Garcia and the perfect Spring evening our total attention. Jerry seemed to pour everything he had inside of him into each note. He softly crooned "Stella Blue" over and over at the end. The volume of his voice and the intensity of the band steadily increased. Finally he erupted: "Stella BLWUUUEE!" The emotional impact shattered the audience. A mixture of tears and cheers exploded from the crowd as Jerry launched into his final solo. I stood there completely humbled. This was something special. I had just witnessed a spiritual event that transcended rock and roll.

Without delay, Weir capitalized on the energy and brought us home with "Good Lovin'." A girl up in the stands grabbed a blue-shined security guard and they danced feverishly as tons of folks turned to cheer them on. Oblivious to this sideshow, the band hunched over their instruments and pounded out that timeless groove. Weir tried to get a rap going but probably was just too exhausted. His voice started to give out as he sang, "Feeeeel It! Feeeeeeel it!" With nothing left, Weir turned to the drummers, lunged forward and ended the song with a yelp. Nobody could fault this premature ending, however, and the band received an ecstatic ovation.

A bunch of people hit the exits during "Liberty." "They need to find new encore... new encore."

Goofy smiles and shocked expressions dominated the dark Seattle Center grounds afterwards. I felt so lucky to have been there. Garcia bared his soul and gave such a great effort — a spellbinding farewell to Seattle. This show made me think what the fall 1995 tour might have been like had Jerry been able to get one more reprieve. Dick Latvala, are you reading this?

06-15-95 Highgate - John W. Scott

For those of us prone to exaggerated comparisons, Highgate 1994 might be a contemporary reflection of Woodstock, a refreshing celebration of music and nature, far from the maddening cement and asphalt that makes cruel mockery of the Dead's of standard outdoor offerings.

If Highgate 1994 might be compared to Woodstock, then the Dead's return in 1995 must have been an echo of Altamont. While both analogies are obvious exaggerations, the latter concert was indeed an ominous harbinger. It heralded the arrival of clouds which gathered and darkened over summer tour; a storm which was destined to close the thirty-one year Summer Of Love known as the Grateful Dead. In the midst of it all one could nervously dismiss the crowds, the gate crashings, the mounting tension, the freak lightning strike and fatal accident, and even the death threat, as merely an inevitable escalation which would be weathered until fall tour when all would be sane and safe again. But in retrospect it was a horrible and inescapable message of doom, all the more cruel as it began in the same field that had hosted the most idyllic east-coast concert since Lewiston.

Of course, this horror is retrospect. At the time all we knew was that it had been over eight months since the Dead had graced the Northeast with their presence; we were hungry, and salivated at the prospect of five shows in the region, including three at our favorite venues. And it all was to start at Highgate, Vermont's newfound Mecca for New English Deadheads. Again we harkened to its beckon call. Presumptuously, I had tried to follow last year's resounding success. Once again I brought my wife and children, expecting to treat them to the best the Grateful Dead has to offer. Months ahead, reservations were made at the same motel, and parking spots were pre-arranged at the same lawn.

It was quickly evident that things were different this year: unfortunately this Green Mountain Mecca had drawn the multitudes, the crowds seemed easily double that of last year. The back roads over which we breezed last year were now congested; I shuddered to think how horrible the main route was. Tickets had been plentiful in 1994; there were stories of people failing to give away their extras. Now there was a desperate frenzy as people searched for spare tickets; more ominous still were the multitudes without who had no intention of looking.

On the positive side, we had been blessed with beautiful weather. The early morning rain abated by 10:30 on our drive up. As show time neared, the temperature was perfect and the skies were only slightly overcast. We set up camp well behind the soundboard, about sixty feet behind the final video screen, with a clear, though distant view of the stage. Again we were joined by friends and families so that soon our little plot looked more like a daycare center than a rock concert. For a while it was relaxed, and even fun back there. The children had room to romp; the parents a moment or two to catch up with each other. Members of the Abenaki Nation officially blessed the afternoon's events with drums and chants — all seemed karmically correct.

Bob Dylan took the stage early at 5:45 — the extra fifteen minutes was appreciated as his set proved to be the highlight of the night. I was pleased that my sons got to hear, if not see, the greatest lyricist of our time work his magic — I even took turns holding each of them on my shoulders so they could catch glimpses of the legend. With countless favorites in his repertoire it was impossible to come up with a wish list. Bob did a great job of selecting it for me. Nearly his entire set had Grateful Dead connections; I was uncertain if this was intentional, or if it merely reflected the Dead's impeccable taste in cover material. While It Takes A Lot To Laugh was well chosen and executed, Watchtower was just a little too obvious. It was remarkable that with such an incredible catalog of his own, Dylan should perform a tune penned with Robert Hunter — Silvio was excellent. They then switched to acoustic and played a beautiful, exquisitely slow Tambourine Man. Standing on stage with microphone in hand, and without his guitar, Bob looked like a lounge singer. His fine suit completed this incongruous image.

It was during Masters Of War that I first noticed people climbing trees to drop over the fences; they seemed not to care as branch after branch was torn off — dozens of trees were destroyed by those for whom hearing the music for free was not enough. After a haunting version of Baby Blue it was back to electric for Stuck Inside Of Mobile. These Memphis Blues were punctuated by a hot air balloon which sported a pastoral Vermont landscape wafting by the stage. Highway 61 — my personal favorite of the whole night — rocked to close the set at 7:00 exactly. Like a Rolling Stone was the perfect encore. At the time I felt fully satisfied; If I had packed up my family and headed home the trip would have already been worthwhile. In hindsight, that is exactly what I should have done.

Between acts the crowd was already larger than the previous year's high-water mark — I found myself playing the role of bouncer as I tried to prevent our twin blankets from becoming a thoroughfare. Parental apprehension became concern. When the Dead took the stage just after 8:00, what had been Frisbee space in 1994 was now standing room only. It was logistically impossible to move our families back farther so we did our best to protect our modest homestead and hoped we would be rewarded with a memorable concert for our efforts.

Unfortunately, the music was, at best, mediocre. The opening Touch of Grey was lackluster: the band was disjointed and Jerry's seemed uninterested in either his lyrics or leads. As the Dead continued to stumble through the first set they gradually managed to improve their footing, though they never found solid ground for long. The sun set just before Peggy-O and introduced a gentle breeze which was particularly welcome given the stifling cigarette smoke which had been accumulating. I hope the loud cheers during Ramble On Rose were for the powered glider which soared above the audience rather than for idiots scaling and toppling the fences; it certainly wasn't for any musical achievement. Black-Throated Wind was, perhaps, the closest to a highlight that the first set achieved; fortunately, this was also where that the video wall was turned on so we could finally see what was happening onstage. While Jerry's contributions were still lacking, at least the rest of the lads managed to rally for a respectable crescendo. Some of its energy even managed to spill over into Loose Lucy; fortuitous, as it is rare that they play these two songs together (a total of six times since they were revived in 1990). Loose Lucy was accompanied by breathtaking fractal animation with beautiful colors. The cigarette smoke continued to collect. My eldest son, Cassidy, had to lie down — he was soon joined by my wife, Terrie. Here we were in the middle of a field in Vermont on a beautiful summer's evening and we couldn't breathe — disgusting!

Before second set began, the video screen traced a journey on a topographical map from San Francisco across the US, then zooming into Vermont, county by county, until they arrived at Highgate, cutely designated by a cow in sunglasses.

The second set opened with a Here Comes Sunshine that was special more for its selection than execution. Still the harmonies were respectable by Grateful Dead standards, and the selection was absolutely perfect to the point where it defied any criticism of the song's mechanics. Shame on me. The accompanying video morphed mandalas in synchronicity with Candace's lights — stunning. Samba In The Rain, however, was indefensible. Incredibly, the crowd seemed to be growing still. A constant stream shouldered their way to and fro, many stumbling oblivious through our blankets. It was only a matter of time... and sure enough one zoned asshole stepped squarely on a sleeping child, and without even a glance of apology vanished into the night. There was no consoling the terrified youth — his family packed up and left. Others soon followed.

Rollin' And Tumblin' would prove to be the last song that the Dead ever broke out. Aptly, it rolled out of Truckin (complete with Deadhead license-plate video), and tumbled along with its syncopated beat. While the vocals could have just have well been omitted, the song itself is a wholly appropriate vehicle for the whole band's talents. This raw version still had charm; with more time Rollin' and Tumblin' could have become a real gem in the Dead's impromptu repertoire. That Would Be Something seemed at best an afterthought; short and awkward it would best have been forgotten. He's Gone also seemed like padding — yet it only served to lengthen the set thus far to 38 minutes, one of the shorter pre-Drumz of the year, barely half the longest. He's Gone was, however, notable for Phil's vigorous choruses.

The cigarette smoke had become unbearable — my wife and children were in tears. It is incomprehensible that people would travel to this remote corner of Vermont to enjoy this gorgeous setting, and then chain-smoke, but there it was. I had feared having to explain the odor of pot smoke, but had never even considered that tobacco might be a problem. Never before have I felt so bitter and betrayed by "fellow Deadheads." As a parent I doubt I can ever forgive us. As a result, even before Drumz, clan Scott gathered our belongings and retreated through the crowd best we could. It took the duration of the Space for us to reach the gates, and even then we had to snake our way through the throngs and mounds of trash that had turned this Elysian Field into landfill. Thoroughly disgusted, I didn't even care that it was a rare out-of-Drumz Box Of Rain that was materializing from the chaos. The retrospect of the remainder on tape has not improved my estimation of this concert. I was left with nothing but bitter disillusion. These are the memories by which my children will measure the Grateful Dead.

So, as with the previous year, Highgate's lackluster performance was overshadowed by the scene. Unfortunately the scenes were polar opposites. The nadir of this dark night was the toppling of the fences by the ticketless masses; particularly unfortunate was that a stand of port-a-potties against the fence were tipped over onto their doors in the process, several were occupied at the time. I could not have fathomed that any individual incident would dissuade me from my obsession with seeing the Dead, but being trapped in a toppled port-a-potty might have done it. Just attending this concert with my family came close.

06-21-95 Knickerbocker - John W. Scott

Since it welcomed the Dead in 1990, Albany has been one of my favorite Northeast venues. It has reliably sported the finest Grateful Dead marketplace in the region, along with a sensible police, and a chemistry that ensured that each concert would offer something special. This year there was a tension that had been absent previously. There was a rumor that the reason that he band had taken a year off from this prime venue in 1994 was to try and avoid the crowds. This effort to cool down a hot ticket backfired. It is unlikely that Albany would have been spared the crowded insanities that plagued this summer tour; however the sabbatical had clearly exacerbated the situation.

It seemed as though there were as many without tickets as with. The marketplace was as healthy as ever; the police showed admirable restraint once again. Fortunately the rumors that an officer had been pulled off his horse and beaten proved to be an ugly exaggeration (apparently he had fallen off his mount and suffered nothing worse than embarrassment). Still, stories like this spread like wildfire, and only compounded the tension.

Once inside, the vague sense of foreboding vanished — we were safely home once again. The technical difficulties before the first set were greeted by the enthusiasm born of a confident optimism — Bobby quipped lightheartedly and the audience cheered. Nothing was going to stop us now.

As the first set opened it was clear that the band shared that confidence. To enumerate each song would trivialize this show, so I will make a point of not doing so; do not take omission as a sign of weakness. A scorching Hell In A Bucket immediately dispelled all the qualms from the past three shows — our band was back with a vengeance. As the set unfolded, I could not believe that this was the same Grateful Dead who had stumbled through a show one week before at Highgate. The selection was rather ordinary, which made the execution all the sweeter — this set was not founded on flashy songs or gimmickry. Nor was the first set particularly long; it might even be considered short by quantitative measures: six songs spanning fifty minutes. But those fifty minutes were oh so wisely invested. Due care and deliberation was taken between each song, and yet they never lost momentum. Particularly memorable was the longest Row Jimmy since 1987 — perhaps the longest ever. And when we had just collected ourselves we were treated to an exquisite Broken Arrow — no sooner had I found my breath and it was gone again. I know of no better version.

The second set opened with a magnificent Scarlet> Fire which would have satisfied me even if the band had then left the stage for the night. Its construction seemed endless as it towered ever higher, branching out into new and unanticipated directions. It defies explanation that this version was "only" twenty-eight minutes long. It also defies explanation that this was not even the highlight of the night.

An adequate Woman Smarter delivered us to the second Northeast-debut of the night. Spring tour had uncovered some very interesting material, material which was only now migrating north. In the first set, Take Me To The River had surpassed the usual fare that might occupy its Bobby-slot. All Too Much was a different kettle of fish: it completely consumed Vince's second-set-selection. This is a such big song, bursting with MIDI horns and confidence, that it is hard — if not impossible — to squeeze it into the Samba slot. But it was more than a mere matter of contrast; All Too Much is so perfectly suited to the Grateful Dead it seems impossible that it is a cover tune. It might even be considered an anthem, even celebration, of that ultimate oxymoron: Deadhead philosophy.

The Playin' is hard to trace down as it wanders in and out of a Supplication Jam, a wonderfully fluid dance between two fond and familiar partners. In the end it is the Supplication theme that keeps on resurfacing, even echoing through the waxing Space. The coupling is thoroughly satisfying, whichever title you pin on it.

I suppose that the Easy Answers which shouldered its way out of the Drumz should have been a disappointment (if only by selection). But my enthusiasm would not be denied. At the time I was already satiated, and when I listen to the tape I know what is yet to come. Retrospect can be cruel, but there had to be a final Morning Dew and this version was worthy — the perfect balance of those dizzying summits and soaring weightless tumbles where down is up, and all is right with the world. Morning Dew was the perfect musical and emotional pinnacle on which to close a magical first night of summer.

06-24, 25-95 RFK Stadium - Ross Warner

RFK Stadium. The boys certainly played their share of great shows there. Even forgetting the historic June 10, 1973 show which featured a guest appearance by the Allman Brothers, RFK has housed some monumental Grateful Dead moments in recent years. In 1990, it was a mammoth, two verse Dark Star. In 1991, it was a nearly perfect show which featured a phenomenal Music Never Stopped and an entirely awesome second set. In 1992, it was the return of Casey Jones after an eight-year layoff.

This year was to be no exception the band brought their usual arsenal of solid song selections and high energy to our nation's capital. Although everyone agreed that the Sunday show was amazing, possibly the show, in terms of summer tour, I seemed to be in the minority in my assessment that while the Saturday show had high energy, the extended jams that make the Grateful Dead, well, the Grateful Dead, were lacking. But more on that later. Both shows were opened by a living legend and good friend of the band's, Robert Zimmerman, a.k.a. Bob Dylan. Since Dylan's appearances on the tour weren't announced until after mail-order, but before TicketMaster, one has to speculate if his appearance wasn't intended to boost ticket sales for the stadium shows. It doesn't matter why, but Dylan was there and he was damn good.

On Saturday, Dylan played his usual arsenal of tunes which he had showcased in Highgate and Giants Stadium (Watchtower, Silvio, etc.), but this show featured an acoustic set, which he had not done so far. And what a set it was. He busted out Don't Think Twice It's All Right and Tangled Up In Blue, which got a warm welcome from the crowd. The acoustic tunes featured the intimacy which made his fall tour and subsequent appearance on MTV's Unplugged so critically acclaimed. He made have had his problems before, but Bobby D. is definitely back. After closing the show with an upbeat Joey and encoring with an emotional Knockin' On Heaven's Door, Dylan was done and it was up to the boys to keep the ball rolling. As Bruce Hornsby's once-familiar piano was rolled onto the stage (he is a Virginia resident and appeared at RFK '92 and '93 and Cap Centre '93), hopes ran high for the Dead's sets.

Unfortunately, while Bruce's presence seemed inspire the band, particularly Jerry, you couldn't tell by the jamming. There was nothing bad about this show and there were some solid moments, but nothing to distinguish it as a real good show. The set-opening Jack Straw, a Hornsby favorite, lacked any real guitar jam or any of the fiery keyboard jams the band was doing in 1991. Since it is my favorite song, I was pretty disappointed when Bobby stepped to the mic to finish the song. The rest of the set, Jerry featured a nice Althea, a sweet Friend Of The Devil (ironic since the New Jersey Devils were playing that evening for their first Stanley Cup) and a solid So Many Roads. Bobby kicked in with It's All Over Now and an acoustic El Paso. In terms of the vocals, these tunes were strong, but the jams were pretty short and didn't really take off. Of course, this didn't really affect songs like Friend, El Paso and So Many Roads, where the jams are pretty short to begin with. The Promised Land, a tune where that Bruce and Jerry used trade some pretty hot licks, also lacked that ol' Bruce magic.

But enough with the bad. The second set definitely showed the signs of life that the band was to clearly show on Sunday. Aiko definitely went some places, and was probably stronger than the version in Giants a few shows before. Saint of Circumstance was great to hear, although it wasn't quite as hot as it's been of late. The pre-drums ended with the slightly overplayed That Would Be Something and New Speedway Boogie, which has definitely been helped by the TelePrompTers. Out of space, the band played strong versions of The Days Between and the expected One More Saturday Night. For the encore, the band revived Black Muddy River, which they had soundchecked that afternoon. It was good to hear it again and Jerry definitely was into it. My highly amusing and informative "Deadheads For Kojak" flyer informed me that the song hadn't been played since 8/13/91 out in Shoreline. It's funny how when tunes like Black Muddy River, Lost Sailor, Saint of Circumstance and Alabama Getaway debuted and got heavy play in the rotation, everyone got sick of them, but put them on the shelf for a while...

On a more positive note, Sunday's show was awesome. In retrospect, it was to be the last complete Grateful Dead performance I was to attend. Dylan's set may have been his best of the tour. The now-standard acoustic set featured a super Desolation Row and he closed the set with a rockin' renditions of Maggie's Farm and Like A Rolling Stone. Ironically, not only did Dylan not jam with the Dead, but they did not do any Dylan tunes in any of the shows for which he opened, which I assume was intentional. That's respect. For the encores, the crowd got the next best thing to Dylan coming out during the show when Jerry came out for Dylan's encores: It Takes A Lot To Laugh, It Takes A Train To Cry and Rainy Day Women #12 & 35. While the collaboration never quite took off during the former, it was still great to see and hear. It seemed like Jerry was very careful not to upstage the old master, who played exceedingly well. After the Rainy Day Women at Madison Square Garden last fall, which was barely audible, it was good to see the two play it well.

I once read that a show that begins with Shakedown cannot be bad. With a few exceptions, I agree with this theory. Luckily, this wasn't one of the exceptions. The set-opening Shakedown may have taken a while for Jerry to get control of, but escalated into an outstanding version. It reminded me of one of the early versions, where everyone is in there instead of just Jerry. Of course, the sounds of Bruce Hornsby's piano probably contributed to this. In the middle of the jam, the band seemed to find a little riff and stick with it. Someone told me that they were playing another tune, but I think they were just in a groove. Bobby was also strong with his "you just gotta poke around" parts. Unfortunately, the crowd was pouring all over the field during the song (memories of Giants '89 and Foxboro '90). I'm not sure if general admission on the floor really works at RFK. However, nothing can ruin a good Shakedown (you can quote me on that). The set also featured a strong Wang Dang Doodle, and a rare Jack-A-Roe. The acoustic pairing of Mama Tried and Mexicali Blues was particularly hot. Now that Bobby's acoustic guitar can really be heard, it's great to hear those hot Jerry licks over it. Later in the set, the band played a version of Picasso Moon which was so hot, that we knew that they would leave after it.

The second set started out with a real sweet Box Of Rain, even better than the one in Highgate. The band stuck with the precipitation motif and played The Beatles' Rain, which is always cool to hear. Then came the required Sunday song, Samson. This version was smokin'. Jerry was jamming all over the place and Hornsby was doing a great job as well. A sweet Ship Of Fools followed, with Jerry passing the lyrical and vocal litmus tests with flying colors. I haven't heard him sing a tune that strong in a while. Out of Truckin' came a jam which seemed to be going the Smokestack route, but Bobby never stepped up to the mic. Jerry seemed to be leading him there, but Bobby-O declined. Instead we were treated to Rolling and Tumbling, which the band busted out in Highgate. It's an old blues song, most notably covered by Cream. Jerry continued his excellent singing as he belted it out to the crowd. His jamming was feisty and directed as well. The tune sounds a lot like Nobody's Fault But Mine. We all assumed that with six songs under their belt, the band would head for the locker room. But, as my friend Ian noticed, Vince moved his mike in front of his keyboard and then led the band into Samba In The Rain. Now although I can't say I'm a very big fan of this song, I will give it credit for having a jam that changes each time it's played, à la Eternity. Unfortunately I can't say the same for Long Way To Go. When the band finally left Billy The Kid and The Vulcan to their drumming duties, us working folk were wondering how we'd get back to New York in time for work. It was already past 11:00! It didn't matter. When the band's playing that well, nothing can stop them.

Certainly the Drums didn't. Out of Space came an awesome Wharf Rat. Jerry sang every verse to perfection. Some of them he sang for so long, I couldn't believe my ears. The band finished with a blazing Not Fade Away, that seemed to go on forever. In fact the band came back to do their point out, with great restraint, however, that they had ripped off the Rex Foundation with their act, since it was a benefit show. They asked what the Rex Foundation was.

The second set began with Scarlet> Fire. Jerry trailed off during the verses of Fire on the Mountain. He let the guitar do the talking. It was a blazing, furious version that disintegrated into a rambling, lost conversation with no one. The rest of the band seemed to be waiting for him to wind it down, but he seemed completely preoccupied, withdrawn in his music, oblivious to the world. I have never seen him that way; it was chilling to the extreme. Bobby had to simply step in, and he pulled things back together with his shot, another angry, intense response (it seemed) — a white-hot, tear-up-your-face Victim or the Crime. Every word was loaded, he was clearly choked with emotion. The gate crashers around us danced and said, "Whoo-hoo! Kewl!" It was gut-wrenching for anyone with any brains left.

At about this time, we saw some other friends of ours from North Carolina. They had just that moment gotten in to the show. They had been trapped in traffic for 5 hours. Was it because the parking attendants were slowing things up demanding that people have tickets to get in? No, they were checking for drugs. We were blessed indeed to have left very early that day. Our friends had driven the 700 miles, only to get the last 5 songs of the second set, thanks to the priorities of the People In Charge.

Vince sang his piece with All Too Much, intense as hell, clearly as upset as the rest of the band. This song has always been a dearly loved favorite of mine because of it being the film Yellow Submarine's glorious climax. But in this context, it was a powerful statement of a different sort, and Vince did an excellent job. Next came Jerry with another take — a Speedway Boogie that was, like the Victim, razor sharp with its pointed statements. By this time, I was in tears. The anger and hurt were, indeed, all too much, and I could only pray for the darkness to give.

Drums and Space followed and seemed brief. The highlight was a jam with Phil and Bobby and Vince, with bell sounds reminiscent of King Crimson. The mood seemed to turn to forgiveness and redemption, as Jerry sang an emotional Attics of My Life. I was crying my heart out by this time. His voice was hoarse, it made for a very intense rendition. Bobby turned on the sunshine again with a Sugar Magnolia that was sweet and comforting. The Quinn the Eskimo encore seemed to promise that all would be well again, and was, in retrospect, a poignant way for me to end all my many years of Grateful Dead shows. Fare thee well, old Quinn.

The next night's show was canceled. We drove the two day trip back to North Carolina, weeping at times, furious other times, but mostly in silence.

07-06, 07-95 Riverport - Thomas Bellanca

After experiencing utter hell and disappointment in Indiana, I felt any change would be welcome. To say I was disenchanted with Deadheads would be an understatement. I could not believe a bunch of so-called (but definitely not) Deadheads would cause the cancellation of a show. To my relief, there were MANY others who felt this same anger. Entering the parking lot was a minor hassle, seeing as how the venue was checking each car for tickets. While it was a inconvenience, you could tell the true Deadheads were OK with this considering what had happened a few days before. There was a renewed sense of community and togetherness for those who were there for the right reason and a complete rejection toward those who thought and acted otherwise. It was great to share smiles and waves to fellow heads while playing hacky-sack and sucking down some cool brew in a relaxed environment. Tons of people were showing off "Gate Crashers Suck" stickers, cars had banners of "BEHAVE" and "its our job to save the scene" so instantly my mood was somewhat elevated. To top it off, there was a distribution of a flyer signed by the band, condemning the actions committed at Dear Creek. Maybe these obstacles are not insurmountable.

While waiting for the gates to open, the soundcheck was clearly audible. They played Childhood's End and Corinna a couple times and Bobby played solo what I could swear was Weather Report Suite Prelude. Too bad it was just a guitar tune-up!

The first show, set one, started with a great Stranger and instantly went downhill. It was too short to matter and not a note of interest was played — o'well. I was with friends, the vibe was better, the band was playing, I was happy (if only they'd turn off the fucking lights!).

The second set was much better. The Playin, was out there and the reprise seemed a bit disjointed, but cool none-the-less. There was a stop after a standard Iko and again after Playin. Hearing Corinna for the third time that day brought a smile along with a meaty jam. Into drums Jerry was teasing Matilda. Drums and Space were weird with the lights on. They just didn't have that feel that works so well when the lights and music melt into one. That in conjunction with the horrible slide show on the sides of the stage combined for a totally uninteresting piece. There was a full band jam after space that was really cohesive and led into a rowdy GDTRFB that had everyone up and dancing all the way through the end of the set with a fine Throwing Stones> Not Fade Away set closing combination. No matter how many times these are played together, when played right they still provide a great time. Black Muddy River was a welcome surprise, as I had been hoping to hear it since the unforgettable evening of 8/13/91. Although Jerry missed the re-entry from the bridge and skipped a jam, I had a huge smile and felt quite content with his effort.

The rain didn't start for about an hour and a half after the show. The area our car was parked in was at a stand-still, so we spent some time in the car before we finally got moving, just in time for the heaviest rain. I read in a news report somewhere that most of the people at the campground, where the shed collapsed, were ticket-less and that seemed correct as they wouldn't have had time to make it back before the rain started.

The next night was a God-send. McNally had said this was a night for healing and those that had been injured the previous night would be remembered. It started with a great 1/2-step and Take Me to the River was tight. Big Boss Man was short. I think Jerry once again skipped a verse and a jam... Was hoping for BT-Wind instead of the cowboy tunes. The Cassidy however was perfect! Just the right amount of Space and delicately mastered changes into a wham-bam ending — yes, that was good!

The second set started with the house lights being turned off, which brought a huge cheer. I knew we were in for a great set. Eyes timed out at about 17 minutes and Jerry was actually playing notes!!! (As compared to the chord-playing he had been disguising as notes for the past six months) His jams were reminiscent of '90-'91. Phil was huge here as well dropping bombs all over the place. When Jerry went to the waa-waa pedal, Bob stepped up and played a great solo. This was the Grateful Dead I knew and loved and the music was flowing from the stage as if everything was going to be all right. Unbroken Chain was the best version I've heard. The middle jam was hit right-on and was extended a little more than others. Great transition back to the vocals allowing a little more space, similar to the Mars version instead of slamming back into it. Man, am I glad Phil insisted on bringing this one in. I consider it a great gift to us Deadheads and I will always be grateful he took the time to re-learn and teach the band to play it again. Thanks, Phil!!!

Samba was OK — I've seen the best (12/16/94) and it's an impossible and unfair comparison. Phil was singing louder than anyone on Truckin, and the line "what a long strange trip it's been" had a totally new meaning that night. There was a quick Other One jam after Truckin which Jerry turned into a jam with a distinct theme, having not heard it before thought may be Rolling & Tumbling. He's Gone was good with Jerry really crooning at the end. No jam into Drumz. Last Time was substandard, but Stella picked things up again. Beautiful version with Jerry signing his heart out at the end. Around and Liberty were afterthoughts.

Seeing a show like this was exactly what I need to refocus my energy. So much was spent on the negative this week, it was a welcome feeling to remember what I came all this way for.

The trip finished on a high-point as I was voluntarily bumped from my flight home and was put up in a Courtyard Marriott, given a 1st class ticket home, and a free round-trip ticket good for one year. Hmmm where should I go... MSG?? Naaa, I'll probably use it this winter and go to Whistler/Blackcomb, Canada for some great skiing. One full day to rest before reality kicks in and I have to return to work — d'oh!!!

{Note: this was a review I wrote immediately after returning from these shows. I made very few changes as I felt the tone was more appropriate than using the knowledge of what occurred less than one month later. These shows will always hold a special place in my heart. It will forever mark the end of a long and wonderful chapter of my life and I would like to wholeheartedly thank the Grateful Dead and all the Deadheads for providing me with such incredible joy and unforgettable memories that will last me many lifetimes}

08-13-95 Golden Gate Park - E. Ellen Jardine

It's November now, and with a little distance between me and August 8, I can finally sit down and collect some reflections of Jerry's memorial on paper.

Mostly I remember not wanting the day to ever end. It was the overwhelming feeling of needing something to hold on to All these wonderful people I knew, some of whom I would never see again. How do you let go of something like that? It was a real catch-22 situation because a lot us went to the Polo Fields that day to let go of Jerry even though we didn't want to. But we did because we had to.

I also remember what a sad event this was. I arrived at 7am that morning to a small gathering of tents set up the night before. The stage/altar area was slowly being put together by a lot of familiar faces I'd see many times before at shows. As the morning continued, tents slowly came down and more people showed up. People were hugging and crying and laughing all at the same time. There were so many strange emotions all happening at once. No one knew what was going to happen that day, but we all knew why we were there, and it made us awfully sad.

As the day started to reveal itself, there was a bond that formed among me and the people I was there with. To see some of my more macho friends cry like babies was a moving experience. And to cry so hard, so openly, knowing that I had the full support of everyone around me, was a feeling I cannot describe. All I know is that it doesn't happen often. A lot of people were at a loss for words, but at the same time, a lot was said that day.

The parade took on a festive air, and gave us something else to focus on for a while. It was a beautiful, colorful, thankful parade. For me, the best part was the red phoenix that brought up the rear and flew high with silver streamers. At the end of the parade we all gathered once again to face the stage and listen to what the band and Jerry's family had to share with us.

They told us to carry on this thing that we'd been involved with all these years. Take all that we had gained from all the experiences, and give it to others to enjoy and benefit from. In other words, continue the loving. To see Bob up there just barely keeping it together, yet telling us all to reflect back to Jerry some of what he had given us, was powerful. The sense that I got from hearing all those people talk was that this memorial was really from them for us. I mean they gave a little bit of Jerry to us that day. It was a sincere effort to give back to the fans a bit of what we have given them over all these years. I am thankful for that bit of Jerry, which I cherish.

It was a strange day. It was an overwhelming day. All in all, I think it was a good day. A lot has happened since August. People really have made an effort to come together since we cannot wait for shows to bring us together. The bond that was formed has remained a constant in my life. Some days it seems stronger than other days, but it is still there. Good things have come from Jerry's death. Although it feels weird to say that, it is true and I think Jerry would like it to be that way.

If anything that Phil, Mickey, Bill, Bob and others said to us that day rings the loudest, it is the message to carry on the giving and living and spreading of goodness that Jerry and the boys, and ourselves, created during shows and after. That's why we all let go that day. Without letting go, you cannot really move into today and tomorrow.

So let us continue to share all the positivity and goodness that we have learned can surround us. It's so much easier to be kind than it is to be mean.

09-19-95 The Boston Garden - Chris Fields

September 19, 1995, A Day That Dreams Might Have Been Made Of....

Today would have been a day of such excitement that might make any Boston area deadhead burst with pure joy, yes today would have been the final night that the Grateful Dead played in the Boston Garden. What did this mean you ask ? Well I can't say what others might feel but for me this is what it would have been....

Not often in ones life do you get to see your favorite band play in such a hall as the Wonderful Boston Garden. Yeah the place looked like hell but the events that had happened in the building were pure heaven. Was it the teams and the bands that played there or was it the building that gave life to the these teams and bands ? Any event there was fun to go to, from Barnum & Bailey's Circus to the one that followed the Dead there time and time again. The place was to hot that in late season Hockey games a fog would cloud the ice and who could forget the play-off Hockey game that was canceled due to a power failure. For me tonight was the night I could be proud to tell my grandkids I was at...right after I explain to them who the Grateful Dead were...I could have even popped a tape into a deck and let them hear it ! Other people brag about how they saw the Celts win the NBA championship or even say they saw Bobby Orr fly through the air after scoring the Stanley Cup winning goal, me I wanted to have the right to say I saw the Grateful Dead tear that old building down...

Well I guess I do have the right to say I saw the last night, as I did see it and yes I can still pop a tape into a deck for my grandkids to give a listen and I'm sure I will still have to explain who the Dead were :')

...this morning I went to my tape box and pulled two sets out. One was the last show I went to with my Wife Sparky, Sept 28 1994 the other was the last show I saw Oct 3 1994....the idea was I was going to listen to both tapes during the day, even Drums and Space as in most cases I would not want to.....so I put the 28th show in the player and started the car for my drive to work, it started off with "Let The Good Times Roll" and the flood of memories rushed by, I smiled and sang along. Then it was Bertha, man I was dancing in my seat and smiling and singing, it was at this point I stopped the car on the small back road I was driving down and with tears welting up in my eyes, it finally hit me it was over for real....

We will never know what the band had in store for us tonight, only I somehow know it was going to be a lot of fun....yes tonight was to be my swan song to the grande old building and I could not have been able to pick a better way to say goodbye. And the day that they do tear that old building down I will be there with a boombox in hand with a tape of the Grateful Dead playing just that song....

They can tear it down but the can't take it away

"all of my friends came to see me last night....."

GarciaBase - Songs Played

This section is devoted to the songs Jerry performed in his solo bands. The first line of a citation lists our title for the song, its four-character abbreviation, the number of times it has been played, and the first- and last-time played dates. The second line identifies the "official" name for the song (or, if in quotes, a common nickname) and its author.

GarciaBase - Every Time Played

Since we introduced the complete version in DeadBase III, this list of every time that each song was played has become a favorite section for many readers. This cross refference is useful for selecting tapes as we as for placing unidentified set lists. We are happy to extend this popular feature to Jerry Garcia's solo efforts here for the first time. • The second column is a character abbreviation for the set that song was played in. • The next number is the Last Time Played (or LTP) and indicates the number of shows since that song was last played (for the premiere of a song, this is the number of that show in the chronology of Garcia solo concerts). • The final two columns contain four-character abbreviations for the previous and subsequent songs. These can be particularly helpful in determining to which show a given song list might belong (a key to the abbreviations can be found on page 443). When a song opens or closes a setlist, the column for the previous or subsequent song indicates that instead with a "OP" or "CL." When a song opens or closes a set, the code for the previous or subsequent song is printed in italics.

Jerry vs The Dead

Jerry's solo music was different from his work with the Grateful Dead. What made it special for you?

Smooth and that organ • It was pure Garcia and it shined every time. • Songs like Shining Star • very eclectic, and it spans many kinds of music • 100% pure Garcia. No lame tunes . Garcia's heart & soul laid out for all 2 enjoy • I think it was more of a beautiful storm of music that took you away • Jerry's playing seemed more focused in his solo work and I think he felt more comfortable in those settings. • the people that was around me YOU JUST FELT LOVE ! some times you just need that not saying my family could give that but some-times you JUST NEED LOVE AROUND YOU . • He was able to express himself more as an individual. With the Dead he was locked into the persona of Garcia. His solo works allowed him to explore anything and everything. • Jerry made it special for me. The variety of his musical taste and the magnitude of his many skills enthralled (and continues to enthrall) me. • What makes Jerry's solo work special is the simplicity yet passion of the music. The man was brimming with soul and he found a special outlet with the JGB that just clicked so well. • It was only Jerry tunes, only Jerry lead vocals. He was the band leader, it was his show. • Its more intimate • We are from the same tribe...we are family....we love each other...and Jerry lead the way ... Peace • JGB touched our culture more personally then the dead sometimes • The organ, the freshness, the greater infusion of gospel- Jerry seemed happier • Just Jerry. All Jerry all the time. • Jerry's own brand of mellow intensity • He would open up more with his Music. He showed his love of Motown by doing music by the TEMPS. SMOKEY. And he never did those with the dead. • Jerry alone was much more "intimate".. much more "personal" ... much BETTER!!!!! • He experimented more with his solo work. Almost as if the Dead held him back in some way. • Much less mainstream. The setlists of JGB are much more fun to listen to. • Jerry has the ultimate taste in music stylings. By himself, he could explore his vast musical influences and push them to a level beyond reach. • He didn't have to worry about allowing Bobby, Phil, Pigpen, etc. to sing their songs. His solo stuff just really touched me. • the girls in the band...they made it happen at some shows along w/melvin on organ • His interpretations of all the songs especially the Dylan and Motown stuff... The band was tighter at times more concise... Bit more funkier it was the music Jerry loved... Had passion • To see Jerry in a small venue was very personable, just Jerry and all his roots showing. He was a lot of fun, solo. • There was more emotion I felt. I also thought the acoustic sound was more pure. • The acoustic and banjo playing really touched me.... But hey it's Jerry • The other side of a Great Man... I think: free... free • Just Jerry, less of the carnival, more pure music • He seemed more creative, I loved John Kahn • Jerry's solo efforts were special to me because he sang every song, and his guitar was out in front with much more feeling. • JGB had more of a gospel feel to it. With the backing singers, and the soulful organ of both Merl and later Melvin. • Jerry was the show. Every song was a Jerry song! He got to break free from the mold of a Dead show. • The show didn't slow down for Weir songs. • Jerry seemed to play what he wanted to play--enjoying every minute. • Jerry was the dominant player and I love the sound of Jerry's guitar. • It gave me the opportunity to hear the songs that he enjoyed playing the most, instead of what the dead enjoyed playing together. • It seems more intimate • It's all about Jerry with a purity unmatched. • It let him be himself • I always thought Jerry put more soul into his solo work... • Jerry's solo efforts were special because he explored areas he was unable to with the Dead, and in the process revealed more of himself, which made the music all the sweeter. • all JERRY-no filler. • I got to experience different aspects of Jerry's music influences or, I got to experience them in far greater depth than with the GD (i.e.; jazz/R&B-Garcia/Saunders; Bluegrass-Old • The bluegrass and Motown focus • He was front and center (except for Reconstruction) and 5 songs in 75 minute sets meant a lot of jamming • Jerry's music was able to transport us to another place. He bridged the gap between all types of music, from bluegrass, to acid rock to gospel, and no one seemed to mind at all! • He seemed to stretch out more and of course the (real) Hammond organ sound always blended well with Jerry's playing. • he could expand in directions that was comfortable to him, he didn't have to live up to expectations that were there at the venues • The songs are different and the music is sometimes less difficult to listen to. It's a nice change of pace. • Much mellower, more personal in a way. Seemed more soulful and meditative. I love the variety of bands he was in over the years. Particularly, LOM. • More variety in song selection from different sources (Beatles, Dylan, Motown, etc.) • It's a way to hear more of just Jerry. I think it's the way he wants to sound, without the greatest band in the world behind him. • Love the acoustic Jerry. The man was the best. His voice and guitar. What else do you need? • The music was so soulful & he seemed to be enthused every time I saw him solo • Extended solos and extensive exploration of R&B and gospel. Jerry + B3 at the Warfield! • It is a nice pleasant change from listening to the dead. There is a lot more musical diversity and diff. songs. • Hearing the raw, untouched acoustic sound of his bluegrass days. • The loooong songs and especially Jerry's noodling guitar throughout most every song. • A wider range of cover tunes, more jamming, more Jerry! • Longer instrumental interpretations and freedom to stray from the confines of the Dead • Pure Jerry, his views, pure joy and bliss... • Exploring new ideas with a different cast of characters backing him. • He seemed to enjoy his solo efforts more to me • More personal & representative of the "true Jerry". Always seems to have more "feeling". • It allowed me to hear different facets of the musician. • I believe that although many people viewed the connection of the Dead and their audience was religious. In my view it was at the JGB shows that I really felt religion. • He had more freedom to do what he wanted. He seemed to have more fun doing some of his solo stuff. • When you listen to some of the recordings (like with David Grisman) you hear a passion & a sense of fun that was sometimes missing in the final years of the Dead. • Garcia's solo work, for me, at it's best, encompasses all of the love and little of the dark spaces. It maketh me to grin. • With the Dead, Garcia was a star amongst many stars...solo, he was the sun. • A variety of styles, less intense than the dead. • The "roots" music he loved; bluegrass, c&w, the blues, r&b, reggae - its all there." • Jerry's choice of melancholy covers. • the variety of bands and styles - bluegrass, jazz, religious, folk, acoustic - made it something new every time!! • Listening to him sing with the dead was astounding, but the energy of his solos blew my mind!!! • Jerry's solo music was gentler than the Dead's work. That could be good and bad. But I thought alone, Jerry bared more of his soul. With the Dead you got his heart. • More focus on solos as opposed to group interplay; better, more consistent vocals; Grisman!!!!! • I really like the JGB with Keith and Donna Jean, because I think Keith is really overlooked and the smaller band gives him a chance to become more of a key player " • It was all Jerry, and after all he was the best thing about the Dead!" • I enjoyed hearing Jerry's take on other artists' music. This was fun for him and it showed through the music. • Motown influences • With just Jerry on Guitar it was pure joy. No Bobby. Jerry's band had was a lot more rhythm and blues with so much soul. Just Jerry being Jerry • Jerry CRANKED it

WeirBase - Songs Played

This section is devoted to the songs Bobby has performed in his solo bands. The first line of a citation lists our title for the song, its four-character abbreviation, the number of times it has been played, and the first- and last-time played dates. The second line identifies the "official" name for the song (or, if in quotes, a common nickname) and its author.

WeirBase - Every Time Played

We are happy to extend this popular feature to Bob Weir's solo efforts here for the first time. This cross refference is useful for selecting tapes as we as for placing unidentified set lists. • The second column is a character abbreviation for the set that song was played in. • The next number is the Last Time Played (or LTP) and indicates the number of shows since that song was last played (for the premiere of a song, this is the number of that show in the chronology of Bobby's solo concerts). • The final two columns contain four-character abbreviations for the previous and subsequent songs. These can be particularly helpful in determining to which show a given song list might belong (a key to the abbreviations can be found at the end of the previous chapter on page 511). When a song opens or closes a setlist, the column for the previous or subsequent song indicates that instead with a "OP" or "CL." When a song opens or closes a set, the code for the previous or subsequent song is printed in italics. Finally, when Bob Weir plays acoustic guitar the date is printed in italics.

Furthur Live 1996-1997

List one show you attended from the first two Furthur tours and include a short description of why it was significant to you

06/20/96 - I had fun returning to what was left of the scene and seeing how things were going to survive. • important to me becuase it was my first show back since Jerry left...gave me chills to be in the atmosphete again • "First show of first Furthur; bated breath; will the magic be there? Yes, kind of; but too much a carnival. Hopeful." • 06/23/96 - The Truckin' in the closing jam made the trip worthwhile... • 06/25/96 - "The Only One I made; being put on the jumbotron screens playing air drums, to Myst Box doing Fire on the Mt" • 06/28/96 - Seeing the old members of the Dead where I remember them most (at Deer Creek) brought back an irreplaceable feeling that makes me want to laugh and cry at the same time. • 06/28/96 - "The Blackbird was one of "those" moments. It just felt perfect, like everything was going to be OK." • 06/29/96 - My wife and I sat in the first row • How the rain fell during LLRain...perfect timing =) • very good Ratdog show and the audiences reaction at end of set with NFA was beautiful • 06/30/96 - "World Center outside Chi - hi & lo point were both the same: Mystery Box - hi because never had chance to see Hart outside of Dead, lo because of too-short set" • 07/02/96 - i had a blast at blossom because it is a beautiful venue and it was a great scene. when bob weir came out and sang fever it made the long day of bands seem fun. • 07/03/96 - "my 6th show in a row, I had a sign, it said Stander, bruce finaly got my hint and he played it for me, and he announced to the audience that there was a guy following him around " • 07/06/96 - This was the first Furthur I saw and I was trying not to get my hopes up. It was so overwhelming to find the best aspects of the community there! It felt like going home! :-) • "first post-Jerry show, had wondered if I'd ever hear some of these songs again live" • 07/07/96 - the chance to see los lobos perform was a truly inspiring moment of live music. they are said to be one of the best live bands to see and they proved it • "The individual acts were too short... one barely got itno each band, and they were gone." • 07/10/96 - "Bobby broke out Playin' In The Band during the encore. I was sitting around the seventh row, shut my eyes, and was in heaven again." • 07/12/96 - It was great to be back among family. • 07/14/96 - "I wasn't really over my grief and sense of loss yet, and I don't think that I was as open to a non-Dead "tour" as I should have been." • 07/18/96 - It is the only one I went to and It was the closest to the Dead that I ever got see. • 07/20/96 - "Fiddler's Green: Show culminated with "Knockin' on Heaven's Door", a perfect ending to a show where Garcia's musical presence was evident throughtout many performances." • "The magic was there for a fleeting moment during Jack Straw. Other than that, it just felt really good to be amongst the tribe." • 07/22/96 - It was good to get out and see friends on tour again and to feel some of the good vibes again • 07/26/96 - "This show left me missing Jerry more than I could have thought possible, the only light was I saw Steve Kimock later that week. He reminded me what Jerry was all about. Fun music" • 07/28/96 - braught home the fact that Jerry was gone • 08/01/96 - "Ventura was the first time I felt a stirring of the spirit that seemed like it had died in August,'95 • I had never scene a show at the Ventura County Fairgrounds. It was a cool place and the scene was good people were so up from the show before at Shoreline. • 06/20/97 - Hearing Sugar Mag. for the first time. • 06/23/97 - "When Sherri Jackson lowered her violin a bit and started picking on it, I looked to side-stage for the other guitarist at first. Fabulous! Loved the time to wander between acts." • 06/28/97 - I LOVED being back in the Dead atmostphere!!! There were just too many good times to mention! • "From seeing the look on the face of the dude I was able to miracle, to hearing the rumblings of a oncoming Other One moments before any of my friends did, a blissful day!" • 06/30/97 - "First visit back tot he scene; had no interest in 1996 Further, felt it was too soon plus I was studying for bar exam. welcome return" • 07/03/97 - "Forest Hills- The boys played 3 blocks from my apartment! After 18 years of following them around, they finally came to see me! Plus my 3 year old daughter grooved outside!" • 07/03/97 - "Because we could celebrate and mourn at the same time. The behavior of the black crowes at Forest Hills was despicable-rude and ungratious,disrespectful of the audience ." • 07/06/97 - I felt as though the spirit of Dead tour could continue • 07/11/97 - Further truely came alive and took off the way a killer dead show used too • 08/02/97 - "Best Moment: during Bruce's set when Bruce, Bob, Phil, Mickey and Bonnie Raitt played Jack Straw." • 06/22/98 - "this was the first of any show I went to in over 3 years. I did not realize how much i missed the dead & concerts in general until 1/2 way thur scarlet and got that "feel" again! " • 07/11/98 - Old Orchard Beach.....Hail storms!!!!!!!!!! • 07/25/98 - people were there more for the music than othe activities

List one show you attended from the most recent Furthur tour and include a short description of why it was significant to you

THE TOUR - Having gone to every show....each one better than the last, the tour kept building....only to end. The end of it seems more significant now...recaptured and lost once again.... • 07/11/96 - it was the first "dead" show after jerry passed away & was so special due to the crowd - the true dead heads. and, of course, when bruce played scarlet bagonias it was magical. • 07/12/97 - Polaris was a breath of fresh air. The place was really cool. Bruce singing BMR with the video screens it was priceless, this place wasn't cheap to turn on the hi-tech shit • 07/31/97 - This was a better festival. I did not leave depressed. There were some good moments. Seeing family was still the highlight :-) • 06/05/98 - the music and vibe brought me to tears in the middle ;the purest it has been in a while!please come back,and bring Bill back! • 06/25/98 - Great to see Phil again. • just to see all the guys on stage together again...that first note just sent chills down my spine. I felt like heaven had opened, and everyone was smiling down. • I met my husband a year before this Furthur. I had no idea what it was about. This was my first experience with • 06/26/98 - Lots of energy, in the music and the crowd. Despite a few slipups the music put me in a very Grateful state of mind. • 06/27/98 - Dark Star!!!!!!!!!!! • 06/29/98 - The indoor venue really captured the feel and atmosphere of a GD show. Proved that there was(is) hope for life after Jerry! • it was my first concert since Giants Stadium 6/19/95. I cried when I heard scarlet begonias. Saint Stephen> Eleven> Lovelight- what else is there to say • Seeing the Other Ones perform St. Stephen- I've NEVER seen that one done live! Amazing!!! • Crappy venue, wonderful vibe — felt like the best dead shows; everyone was glad to be there. • St. Stephan-> The Eleven, Aiko—absolutely powerful and magical, You wanted to dance like mad, yet stand still with your eyes closed to absorb every note. • 06/30/98 - The jamming and especially the drumz with Molo and Mickey were phenomenal. I think I lost my mind during the Dark Star. • My first real taste of what a Dead show was like. It was a magical night. I loved the NFA and encore's. • 07/01/98 - The monster was back • I wish they were recording some of this show for thier live cd... the whole show shinned.. the china>rider and estimated should be on the cd • My first Other ones experience, was soooooo much more than I hoped for the band was right on, and during the Wharf Rat (if only for a moment) brought me back to THAT place. • 07/03/98 - Donna Jean arriving on stage to wail with the boys • Road trip with some friends to see some great music...and Donna... • 07/04/98 - saratoga is simply one of the best venues to see a band and to hear U.S. blues on the fourth of july was really special • liked the Other Ones quite a bit, especially Bruce and horns • 07/05/98 - After seeing the dead 68 times i had never caught a dark star. It was my best friends first "dead like" show and i'm glad he could see a glimpse of what i had been chasing all thos • This was my first Dead, or Dead related concert. I had never seen such an incredible place before. The lot absolutely blew my mind. I loved it. It is the happiest place, I know. • the music kept me dancing the whole time, and mickey harts drum solo was AMAZING!!!!!!!! • 07/07/98 - despite this show's list being a duplicate of the other show I went to (Great Woods), the music was still amazing. I was not even bummed at missing the "special" songs. If they can do this with "mundane songs" than anything was possible! • 07/08/98 - I was ready and willing for whatever was coming at me that year; wow, was I impressed! Definitely not a replacement for what we once had, but beautiful on its own. • Such a beautiful venue. Bird Song had me THERE. • It was raining and the security sucks (I apologize on behalf of PA) but when they started playing Mountains of the Moon nothing else mattered! • 07/11/98 - My birthday, Darkstar to open... • The Eleven, first time for me. • TOO opened with Dark Star, it was the first time I ever got hear Dark Star live, and of course my favorite moment was when they went back into Dark Star in the third set. • Finally got to see TOO and was knocked out. I knew they would be good but not this good. • I remember being so overjoyed hearing the first notes of Dark Star to open up the show. • 07/12/98 - that moment when at the end of loser the monitors got fried...and when i thought the worst...black muddy river happened and i cry every time i hear it pure magic and beauty • showed me how much jerry is missed in Grateful Dead music...no more other ones shows PLEASE!!! • 07/13/98 - Franklin's Tower. Need I say more? • Pine Knob was my favorite of my personal '98 shows. It was my younger sisters' 2nd time ever seeing Phil and we just loved it. We will never forget that Birdsong. • 07/15/98 - it was quite an energy experience to see at the beginning people walking, trying to get somewhere but with the first chord of shakedown literally everyone froze and danced like mad • Front row at Deer Creek!! Let it Grow! the rest of the show also rocked! • Highlight was jamming like early Dead • Having never seen a dead show, Shakedown (my absolutely fav tune) opens one of the most amazing nites of my life • The broke out Let It Grow for the first time in the post-GD era. It was definatly a wonderful suprise. • 07/16/98 - i was unable to ever see a dead show, so this was the next best thing. the music blew my mind, and it was probably the best experience i've had yet • 07/17/98 - st.louis - st.stephen into the eleven into lovelite • 07/19/98 - Fiddler's Green: Hot Tuna, and the early 70' s Dead-like Other One's were just as good as being there 25 years earlier. WOW! • Finally, some of the magic returns, after 2 lukewarm further tours. 3 years is a long time to wait for the cup to be filled again. • 07/20/98 - When the other ones came out doing good lovin into Sugaree..that was magical. • 07/21/98 - Sailor>St, Corinna, Shakedown opener, Sug Mag, and a sweet Hornsby/Ellis instrumental duet -> The Way it Is • 07/24/98 - I'm not particulary fond of the Other Ones. They were fun, but I wasn't nearly as good as if Jerry were still playing. 07/24/98 was the best of the shows I saw. Very inspired. • one word Bill • Dead seemed rejuvinated by three year layoff and not having to "Carry" a dying junkie. New players helped, too. • Can't say enough good things about Kimock's playing....He's a GREAT phrase master • Opening with Dark Star and away we go..... • made me realize there could be great music after Jerry • 07/25/98 - I was amazed at the feeling of "togetherness" at the venue and on the stage! • Great show, so exciting to hear St. Stephen and Iko Iko. The crowd was mellow and really happy and positive. I had such a good time. It almost felt like the Dead again. • The show had all the energy of a Shoreline Dead show, I know this because my first show ever was at shoreline, and it was a phantasmagoric experience which I'll never forget. The O • It was great to is Billy with them. • 08/01/98 - Shoreline Ampitheatre makes any show GREAT-Robert Hunter set+Phil+Bonnie Raitt

Other Ones on Tape

Which is your favorite Other Ones tape, and why/musical moment)?

06/04/98 - Two sets and an energy in the Warfield that I would liken to MSG. • I liked there debut show because it was the 1st timew they were playing for a live audiance and they did so well!!! • It's the first show and my best sounding tape • 06/25/98 - This is the only TOO tape I have. • 06/26/98 - Saw show, then show via internet after tape-tree fell through. Now I have many shows from internet. • It's the only one I have. • 06/29/98 - i felt that the show and the set lists were one of the best! • the next show i saw after jerry passed away & it meant something. also, the selection of songs was true dead. • 06/30/98 - Simply Magical and forever in my heart. • 07/01/98 - It was the only Other Ones show I attended....and from the opening notes of Truckin' I could tell that the magic was back! • So crystal clear, and a fantastic version of Estimated! • My first Other Ones show • 07/03/98 - I was there & it was sweet • I was there :) • 07/04/98 - This show was simply one of the best of the tour. The smoking version of schoolgirl was awe inspiring as was the heart felt L. L. Rain. As it was pouring at the time, it was fitting • 07/05/98 - because i was there! • the show opened up with drums, and then I didn't even count on the sunday sermon opening, I am a long time head and I had seats right in the front, it sounded like IFTL, sue me! • it was the first dead related show i'd ever been to. • because i was there • 07/08/98 - Tasty nuggets from days-gone-by in a beautifully contemporary mise-en-scene! • Bird Song still gives me chills. • 07/11/98 - Dark Star>Jack Straw, and drumz on plus it is the only one I have that doesn't sound like shit • I like the selection of song from Alpine the most. • Set List and playing • My birthday, I was there... • it was one of the few i could get,my taper moved off • - FRANKLINS!!!! I have not felt more at home since the Dead were playing it. • 07/13/98 - Closest thing ive seen to a dead show • 07/15/98 - Clean and clear sounding (Norweigen Wood solo by Bruce before The Way It Is - crystal clear). I think it was great song selection. • I prefer this one because of that suite of songs, and also it was great that Easy Answers was no longer totally lame like it was with the Dead. • Sailor-> Saint & Let it Grow; on top of it all, everyone was on fire. • 07/16/98 - Incredible Estimated • i guess just because i was there, i have most of the shows that i was at, and it just makes it cooler to say "hey, i remember when phil sang china doll" (which by the way was rad) • 07/17/98 - Because I went to it. It was awesome. • Set 2 is is on fire- Hornsby is rockin! • 07/19/98 - Only 98 show I saw, so it brings back good memories. • 07/21/98 - Just listen to it, my friend! • 07/24/98 - Unbelievable Across the River->Calypso Jam->Uncle Johns Band • This is the only OO's tape I own. Other tapes I heard did nothing for me. I still collect Dead and JGB as there is still plenty to collect. • I was there. • A great night of music • Best show music wise. • 07/25/98 - The tape brings back the wonderful memories of the Shoreline , which was a delightful venue. • It's my favorite because I was at the show. And I have a really nice AUD tape with great sound quality. • the best other ones tape; but still they are way short of the dead. let the Dead rest in peace • While both shoreline shows rocked, the addition of BK on drums made the night!!! • It's the only one I got! • This show was one of the best I heard from all the tapes!

07-25-98 The Other Ones, Shoreline - Stephen Dorian Miner

06-25-98 Lakewood Amphitheatre - Eric S. Crane

Forget the previous Furthurs, this stuff was good, good stuff! Though I saw a few of the 98 Furthurs, including the monster of a show at Alpine on my Birthday, I will tell you about the Atlanta show, only because it was the first show outside of California. "Playin" just about had the place in tears with the opening chords, everyone let a sigh of relief that this was what we had been missing, and this was going to be good. The jam filled the air with huge splashes of color and excitement, and led into "Baby Blue," again capturing the feeling that we were all together again, and that the music never stopped, a triumphant return to the stage for these members of the Grateful Dead, and their friends fit together nicely.

This was as close as you can get to the real thing. Not every song was magic, but they all had their moments. I remember a spinner (did you ever think you would be happy to see spinners again?) in front of me shouting, "It's been a long time Phil," during his rendition of "Jack A Roe." It felt good again, like the gang was all here, something that had escaped the precious Furthur Festivals.

The "Scarlet>Fire" was definitely different, yet in a good way. I am a fan of Bruce's version of "Scarlet" and have always enjoyed Mickey's rendition of his creation. Very urban calypso. "the Way It Is" was nice to hear with so many talented guys on stage, which led into a "Playin" jam and into Hunter's latest, "Banyan Tree." If the dark and scary spaces of "Playin" had lyrics, they would be these, great new song Robby! The "Uncle John's" was also very different, with a much stronger and ethnic drum beat, but again, the first days are the hardest part, and it had been a few years- a few years too many. "Playin" sandwiched the show, left us scratching our heads what the possible encore could be. "Sugar Magnolia" had me sweating through my shoes I danced so hard. Wow, this was a warm and welcome surprise... And oh yeah, Alpine Valley had a tremendous "Across The River> Santana Jam!"

6-25-98 Lakewood Amphitheatre - Roach

"These are my people." I gasped, just like the four occasions I'd "scene" the Dead in Atlanta. This was outdoors (instead of the Omni) and the band was called The Other Ones now, but essence always precedes form.

Rusted Root made the newbies comfortable, and Hot Tuna made the veterans believe again. Then we ALL got something NEW. Obligatory homage to the big-guy aside, everybody missed Jerry and yet seemed willing to respect the spirit of FORWARD. It felt real.

The new line-up works. Competent and experimental, edgy and adept. Yes.

You can look at the set-list yourself, and hopefully find a clean tape to hear for yourself, but personally Scarlet Begonias pushed my buttons best. Got sucked-up by the lights in Space, and Drums wrung me out. Wow!

I couldn't even make the next show in NC, but I felt so good knowing some would. The world seemed safer for the family of humans with this band about. Atlanta's Deadheads had been fed manna again, and I am thankful for their nourishment. After all, "These are my people."

06-26-98 Blockbuster Pavilion - Josh Thompson

I am one of those unfortunate people that never got to see the dead live. I am now 20 years old and my ONE AND ONLY opportunity to see the dead came in the spring of 95, I was 16. My parents were pretty hard on me and would not allow me to partake in the dead experience. When Jerry died later that summer, I was devastated. My only outlet was my tape collection. This was the closest experience I had to the real thing. I heard about the Other Ones and immediately knew that I had to see them. I knew that it would not be the same, but I wanted to "fill that void."

Anyway, I went to the concert at Blockbuster Pavilion in Charlotte. The scene was incredible!! Although the traffic was terrible, everyone was getting out of their cars and talking to everyone and just having a great time. The lot was pretty cool with many-a-vendor with anything you would want to buy.

The show itself was incredible. The Other Ones came on stage and opened up with a Truckin. It felt so right as I listened to Bob mess up the words (I don't think he'll ever get Truckin' right). They also played one of the best versions of Birdsong that I have ever heard! They played many familiar tunes like FOTD and also some good ole oldies like Loser, Lost Sailor, and The Eleven. One of the highlights of the show was an incredible version of St. Steven. They also covered Wild Horses with Phil singing lead. The whole experience was capped off by an encore performance of Touch of Grey which had everyone singing along. The way Bob sang that song was as if he was saying that life goes on and WE KEEP ON GOING.

I know that it was not the same without Jerry, but it definitely filled that void for me. I hope they continue touring. The magic is still there, maybe not as it was before, but there is something still there. I hope they continue touring. It is something worth seeing for those who are skeptical.

06-27-98 Nissan Pavilion - Brian Shupe

I loved the show. I was really moved to tears at points thinking of Jerry but WOW it was a great time. I too felt like I had come home. I hope no one catches on to fast.

06-27-98 Nissan Pavilion - Stan Weschler

First of all, I have to say that everyone who said that the Dead couldn't continue to play without Jerry should have all of their tye-dyes taken away. The Other Ones rocked Nissan. I went to the show with some expectations, but what I got was nothing I could have imagined. Sugaree, Dark Star, Box of Rain...that's quality Dead! I thought it was all about the music. Jerry was The Man, but Mickey, Bobby, Phil, and Bruce are all The Man too. I only wish there were Another One this year.

06-27-98 Nissan Pavilion - Mark Morooney

On Thursday the 25th in the afternoon, my father suffered a stroke and lapsed into a coma. He came out briefly in the early evening, but was unable to hear and could not move. I spent some time alone with him and told him that I loved him and we said our goodbyes. He passed away on Friday the 26th. I was grief-stricken and needed time to just be. My girlfriend and I had tickets for the Nissan show and took off late morning on the 27th for the hour drive to the Pavilion.

It had been cloudy and there were predictions of rain. The show started. I was stunned to see Herbie Hancock and loved the Headhunters show. Rusted Root was good, but a somewhat stilted and lackluster performance.

The Other Ones came out cooking. Sugaree and Jack Straw resounded. Bruce wailed on Easy Answers. I was happy that the show was good, but still focused on my dad's death. Then the first tones of Dark Star came up and from behind the Pavilion the clouds provided their own light show as thunder and lightening abounded. We jammed the rest of the night, just me and my dad.

I came home to the funeral and my family. I comforted them. They needed it since they had not been with him listening to Dark Star in the storm.

06-29-98 Continental Airlines Arena - nick

Caught three super shows this summer, Nissan, Camden, and best of all the arena formerly known as Brendan Byrne. I've been going to shows since Watkins Glen and rank this in my top three along with 9-25-76 and 10-98. I say this can be better than it used to be. Go ahead, break the mold; open with a rippin' Goin' Down The Road into Scarlet> Fire. Phil, step right up to a beautiful Mountains Of The Moon. It's time to matter. Bobby, make that rain go away. Drums> Iko> Space anyone? Or how about a swirling Steven>11 to rival Live Dead? My strongest Bobby vocals since 10-9-89 Death. This is the season of what now ! Ripple for an encore I'll take it! It's a shame the fat man wasn't there but this is a band to praise Jerry as well as to bury him . And they can take you anywhere you want to go. If they would just tell the soundman that if it's worth playing it's worth playing loud !

And hey now - Nissan and Camden weren't too shabby either.

06-30-98 Nassau Coliseum - David L.

I caught 3 shows on the east-coast segment of the tour: 6/30 Nassau Coliseum, 7/3 Camden, and 7/8 Scranton (Montage Mountain). Before my first show, I tried to keep my expectations for the Other Ones reasonable and relatively low, out of fear of a huge let-down. I had seen Ratdog, and though they put on a nice show, it was far from a virtuoso performance. As a nineteen year-old, I was never fortunate enough to see the Dead. I knew that TOO would be the closest I would get, but if I built them up and they didn't deliver, I would have been crushed.

Fortunately, the Other Ones greatly exceeded my expectations. Yet they would have done so even if I had set the bar much higher. I have been a musician for ten years, and have an extremely critical mindset when approaching music — probably overly critical. I genuinely loved TOO, and this is NOT the product of blind admiration based on a love of the Dead and a void I was desperate to fill. Though the sound was spotty at times and the music had its peaks and valleys, the peaks were very impressive and moving. When TOO were on, they were ON, and each show I saw had its moments that floored me. Just as with the Dead, there were stretches worthy of a bathroom break and others that were pure magic all within the same 2 1/2 hour set!

Bobby, Phil, and Mickey are Bobby, Phil, and Mickey, they're the real thing — I don't think there is anything I could really say about these guys that hasn't already been said — they are wonderfully talented musicians who, when they come together, magically exceed the sum of their individual parts.

Hornsby, I felt, really shined both on the piano and on the vocals. He is a tremendous pianist who continually dropped my jaw and made me smile with his playing. After hearing him deliver solid renditions of Tennessee Jed, Scarlet Begonias, and Wharf Rat, I am convinced this guy should have free rein to sing just about any Jerry tune he chooses. My biggest complaint about the three shows that I saw was, "Not enough Bruce!!!"

Dave Ellis, I felt was also an enormous asset to the band and truly helped to define TOO as a unique entity from the Dead. Ellis's and Hornsby's chops often took TOO in jazzy, funky directions never explored by the Dead, and these two fine instrumentalists were a pleasure to watch perform.

Kimock and Karan really did a nice job with the lead guitar duties. The way they played together and complimented each other definitely justified the inclusion of both of them in this band. My only complaint about these two is directed towards the sound guys — give them a little more boost during their solos, please!

I realize it sounds as if I am gushing, but as a musician who has been part of a large band, I truly appreciate how difficult it is to form a high level of cohesiveness and improvisational unity among musicians, and these guys did an amazing job for the short amount of time that they were together. I promise you that I really am a cynic who just genuinely impressed by The Other Ones! I would love to see more from these guys, although I feel that they might need to start writing some new material if this is to continue long-term.

Though TOO probably will never be as exciting, entertaining, and musically proficient as the Dead were (when they were on), they hold their own pretty well! Judged on their own merits, without comparing them to the Dead, TOO simple are a very good live band, arguably better than any other current group. And most importantly, TOO shows were just a damn good time! The music is great, but the experience of the show, as clichéd as this sounds, definitely went beyond the music.

I will be the first to admit TOO will probably never produce a show that ranks among the great live rock music performances as the Dead did, but hey, they still provided me with three memorable evenings this summer, and that is all I can reasonably ask for. I really feel as if most who are especially critical of this band just are not approaching TOO with an open mind and with reasonable expectations.

Hey, even the hardest to please professional music critics/journalists are grudgingly admitting that these guys are pretty good! Though I will never have the good fortune to see the Dead, TOO have definitely helped immensely to fill the void I felt. I understand these guys now have families and other musical commitments, but I would love to see this, at the very least, become an annual affair, with hopefully a few dates mixed in during the fall, winter, and spring. But please, guys, don't let this be a one shot deal. And if you do choose to make it a full-time affair, you won't hear me complain!

06-30-98 Nassau Coliseum - Ed Brown

I'm writing this about a year after the fact, however the feeling is still fresh, and the vibes still good. This will be more about an overall impression about The Other Ones, rather than a review of this particular show. I went to this, as well as the nite before at Brendan Byrne (I will never give in to the commercial) and the 4th of July at the rain soaked SPAC (is it me? or did it always rain HARD every time the boys played SPAC in the 80's?...I'm still wet?)and was very very impressed.

I am a novice as I only saw about 200-225 shows and am very much in debt to our brothers and sisters who came before me during the 70's who kept the band on the road so I was able to enjoy just a small number of our beautiful days and nites together. I was very apprehensive the nite before and tried to keep an open mind about what was coming, and I remembered that a few weeks earlier, when the boys played the first gig at the Fillmore the following nite, a Friday, they GDM had a special on QVC. Did anyone see it? Well I bought a poster and weaseled my way on the phone in segment and asked Dick Latvala about the show. I already had the setlist and I specifically asked him about the Stephen-Eleven and his response was man...they didn't just play it THEY PLAYED IT!!!...So I was very happy to hear that the ol' time heads were happy.

Well back to the show I was keeping an open mind as I say, because I tried to remember various nites that Jerry would disappear for a few minutes prior to the drum solos and remembered that some of those jams were quite exceptional. Do you remember I do.. and so the thought of pappa not being there though sad as it was didn't seem so bad after all. (I wish Billy would have bought in) well at Byrne we got the Stephen-11 and the Mountains on the Moon and I almost had a coronary.

It was beautiful, and it seemed as if nothing had changed at all. Except the music. Isn't that why we al went nite after nite? The music always changed, and in an eerie way it seemed released with Jerry's absence and not stifled. The music was much more free- wheeling than it had been in years. the boys were exploring rhythms that were never explored before and it was great.

Now on to Nassau,... there is something very magical about Nassau, the boys always had great nites there, from the return from Egypt to Branford's first meeting of the collective mind it is a special place. (Jerry had some awesome JGB shows and Bobby and The MIdnites shows as well) It must be how the musicians hear themselves or something like that. Anyway opening with Mystery Train proved once again that there is no limit to where we would go... yes I know Mickey started the evening off with a solo but who's counting anyway...

The highlight of the evening of course was the Dark Star, and it sounded to me just like the darkstars from 1973-1974. Phil of course dominating the proceeding. Is Dark Star really a vehicle for Phil? More so than it was for Jerry? Probably. Keep in mind that after the song was basically dropped from the rotation in the late 70's that whenever it popped up, it was Phil who dragged it out. (remember the 20th anniversary shows at the Greek, "we're gonna do this one nite, one nite only" and then proceeded to show slides of the planets taken by Phil during the song.)

Is it me, or did you remember that all of those early Matrix shows with Phil, Jerry, Mickey and friends always had a Dark Star or Dark Star jam? Dark Star was one of the first songs the boys played, was it Phil teaching everyone how to play? Think about it, how often did the Phil-Ned Lagin portions of shows during Seastones revert to Dark Star? It makes sense, Phil was teaching a new band how to play improvisational music that creates a collective mind....WOW!

The shows were great, and a note to those who think that Mickey was bastardizing Fire on the Mountain....if you do your homework (tape wise) you will realize that the original demo for the song (written early 70's) had Mickey singing all along and it was sung the way he sings it now, just as he always has...again the Dead are at the forefront of music yes we rapped in the 70's before it was a genre of music. It was only copied recently by the masses who have just begun to catch up to our musical sophistication. And that is what this is all about.

I know there are die-hard heads out there that say this is an aberration and that they should leave the music alone and not try to continue playing. I don't believe that papa bear would have wanted that. Music always expands and it should as it is now time to do so. The mourning period is over for the band and now we need to get over it as well. We are the best audience in the world as well as the most musically sophisticated (remember disco-dead?) and we will and should listen to everything.

I am disappointed that as we speak Phil decided not to repeat this year (though his health is always more important than anything else) because of philosophical differences about the musical/commercial direction that the band should take. I agree with him. They should not be a Dead cover band but a new vehicle for exploration. I don't think that a band like that would forget it's roots as it re-invents itself into a cosmic flotation device and re-hashing already covered musical ground. well thanks for listening and hope that if they get it together in the future that I will see you all again. bottom line IT STILL WORKS!!!!!! yea.....

07-01-98 Great Woods - Rick Wolfish

Seeing Furthur with Phil is the closest thing to a GD concert we will get. I hope Phil stays healthy and tours again.

07-01-98 Great Woods - Arthur Dent

This show filled in the remaining gap that the previous Furthur Festivals had left The scene was on a par with the best mellow summer shows in the early SPAC days. Apparently there were even still tickets available the day of the show (silly Deadheads), but 5,500 walkups quickly sold out the show .

The guitars were way too low for the first quarter of the show. It left a gaping hole in the music. But as the levels increased, the fullness o the music became obvious. I was amazed at how rich and complete the experience was. Without playing any of the flashy old nugget songs, they still put on an amazing performance, leaving me hungry for more shows. I have high hopes for a long-term future for this band. They show such phenomenal promise once they get a few more tours under their belt and get to know each other more.

07-03-98 Sony Entertainment Center - Scott G. Koerner

This was my second TOO show, the first being at BBA 6/29. What a difference being outdoors, the Furthur concept does not translate well to indoor venues. I thought the band sounded tight throughout the entire show. A lot of people are anti-weir, especially when he performs songs that were "Jerry's." I personally give Bobby a lot of credit for carrying the torch, and think Jerry would be (or is) proud.

It was a big surprise when Donna showed up, I haven't seen her since '78, and to tell truth I didn't recognize her at first, what with the short blond hair and the fact that she sounded GOOD! Hearing her on Playin' brought back some memories, and Bobby doing Sailor> Saint was way cool.

This review is 6 months after the fact, so I'm going to throw in some opinions about two Ratdog shows I saw in 11/98. Although missing Mickey, Bruce, and Phil, Ratdog is starting to come into its own also, I enjoyed them more this time around than in years past, I think Mark Karan adds a lot with his leads (as he also did with TOO.)

Getting back to the 7/03/98 show, I enjoyed it whole-heatedly, and would recommend tapes of the show to anyone who wasn't there. Now that Phil seems to be out of the woods health-wise, I look forward to more TOO shows in '99, and hope that Donna will make more guest appearances.

To those who put down TOO and Ratdog because they play some of Jerry's song, I say GET OVER IT!!! Jerry's gone, I miss him as much as the next Deadhead, but the show must go on. I for one enjoy hearing the songs, I don't look at it as a substitute for Jerry, but as something different, new, but still of value. May the music never stop.

07-03-98 Sony Entertainment Center - Sam Graham

I miss the Dead. I saw them play the Sspectrum in Philly in '93, '94 and '95 not a phenomenal number of shows I know and regret, but I treasure every second of those memories. Jerry died two days after my birthday, the year I was finally set and ready to follow the tour. Shot those dreams out of the picture.

I went to the furthur fests when they would come near home. The scene was similar the crowd was the similar bit more sad but still dancin', and the music was similar, but still not the same. In 97 I still have a hard time believing it, but I enlisted in the Air Force. my lifestyle has changed drastically, but they cant touch my soul.

I took leave to visit home over 4th of July and I caught the 3rd of July show in Camden NJ. The Other Ones were terrific, that old feeling was back, the crowd showed up for the band and the band showed up for the crowd. every song was awesome I especially remember UJB and St. Stephen. There was a lady next to me who, when they kicked into St. Stephen, threw her hands in the air, began to cry and looked at me for some explanation, I didn't have one. I nodded my head agreeing that it sounded great and brought back wonderful memories, danced with all of my heart and smiled, smiled ,smiled...

I hope the Other Ones play for many years to come, I'd like to see Bill out there playin in the band. I'd also like Spring, Fall and Winter tours. no it's not the same but when you have to deal with what you can get, it's plenty close enough. LONG LIVE THE DEAD. peace and love, sam graham

07-04-98 Saratoga - Ed Mancari

Saw the fourth of July show at the SPAC. Started raining about four hours before the show and did not let up all night.

Regardless, the scene was mellow but somewhat overcrowded. Me and my friends found our way into the venue for the last three songs of Hot Tuna's set. I felt a rush of excitement as they left the stage because I could not wait for Bob, Mickey, Bruce and Phil to come on.

They opened with a high charged U.S. Blues (of course) and once again I was swept into the feeling of absolute joy and ecstasy. Although the mud was about six inches deep, it did not keep anyone from bursting into all out dance. They then belted out a delicious Bucket, and the fun was just getting started.

The Scarlet was a nice surpass however I cannot get used to the rap-style form of Fire. I credit Mickey for his different approach, however I feel that it is doing a tremendous tune a blatant injustice. Jerry's delivery of Fire was always so poignant and reflective, but maybe I'm just spoiled.

The rest of the show was highlighted by a well-timed Looks Like Rain, and a nice jam-induced Bird Song. Hearing Phil loop his bass around The Other One brought a huge grin to my face, and Bob was right on with Knockin'.

The Saturday Night encore seemed to be just thrown out there, and the lack of an encore left me somewhat disappointed. Overall though for many moments I felt myself back into a world dominated by music I love and dancing to the musings of musicians I respect and admire. Jerry's presence was all over the place, however it was a celebration of the present. I feel he would want the bus to go on and the wheel to keep turning. See y'all later.

07-04-98 Saratoga Performing - Tracy Hill

What a rainy day! And after standing in the downpour on the side of a hill with a mini-river running over my feet I did everything I could to keep my balance and dance when the sweet sounds poured over me... It is always a bittersweet experience to attend a Furthur Festival and this was a most memorable show. The guys did a great job and played fantastically and I would see them again in a heartbeat.

07-07-98 Hartford Civic Center - Billy Dougeneck

07-07-98 Hartford Civic Center - John W. Scott

While I was surprised and nervous about the prospect of an indoor furthur concert during the summer, my unease dissipated as soon as we arrived. The general scene in Hartford was surprisingly mellow, much more like 1983 than the cacophony that we often raised in cities in more recent years..

Before the show we ran into Bruce in the hotel. He had the room next to my friend's. He was just going into his room as we were leaving for the show, looking as if he had just finished working out. When I smiled at him, Bruce stopped, and came back out into the hall to chat. I had run into Bruce several times over the years and had always found him remarkably personable, but to postpone his shower and pre-concert meditations just to talk to some fans was far beyond all expectation.

Bruce offered that Buffalo, and Great Woods were the best shows to that point. He drew a bumpy graph in the air with a marked upward trend. Each show wasn't necessarily better than the previous, but Bruce had noticed a definite ongoing improvement. When he commented that there were no dead moments it took him a couple moments for him to grasp his double entendre, and our laughs.

This was very much a three-way conversation: Bruce asked us with genuine interest what we would like to hear at the concert. As seasoned Deadheads, we deferred, knowing that anything they chose to play would be just fine. In retrospect, perhaps we should have asked for something special, just for variety's sake.

I mentioned that I hoped that this would be an ongoing project, not a one-time flash in the pan, and Bruce replied that it was very hard to imagine that there would not be more tours. He would like to do more material, taking exception with those who held some Garcia songs sacred. Bruce said that Jerry would be the last person to deify himself, or his material.

When I offered that I would like to see the Other Ones do stands so they could some extensive exploration in a familiar setting he nodded. I wistfully recalled the MSG '90 shows as experience to be emulated; Bruce also remembered them as a peak experience. We finally felt that we should let Bruce go, as he was too polite to take his leave

The Civic Center was packed to the gills. The various vending and worthy-cause stalls occluded the hallways, and it was a tough to move around inside the arena. Accordingly we found our seats on the floor and remained there for most of the evening.

Hot Tuna opened and was excellent as always. Rusted Root was clearly thrilled with their own set with good cause. (Liz Berlin was absolutely bewitching.) But my excitement over the Other Ones was overwhelming, and my impatience denied both bands their due attention.

Phil danced a little jig before they started; displaying manic anticipation. He then introduced NFA with a goofy gesture. The opening song stood firm, establishing a strong groove which the band never lost. NFA turned to what appeared to be a mellowing transition: lingering and sweet, but the song ended never the less.

From our vantage, Phil was thrilled to be there, and his attitude was infectious. He did an excellent job with the vocals on an acoustic Jack A Roe, one of his best vocal performances I have ever heard. Phil sported an enthusiastic, then wicked smile before Strange Remain.

Miraculously the candles on Bruce's Baldwin almost made it thorough the three-hour set (one of them may have extinguished during Throwing Stones.)

While the setlist was nearly identical to that of Great Woods, I was amazed at the quality and enthusiasm with which it was delivered. While The Other Ones did not play any of the "special" songs that everyone was drooling over, I was still fully sated by the concert.

After the show I found the friend with whom I had gone to Great Woods. I smiled uneasily: "there are two ways you could take this show." I knew his reaction, but clarified myself anyway. "You could be disappointed that the setlist was almost identical, or you could marvel at the execution, the energy that had been largely absent even from latter-day Dead shows." He confirmed my fears. While I felt badly for him and his disappointment, I was thrilled to have heard the magic that had been absent from my life for nearly three years. And I had reached a conclusion: The Other Ones were worth touring for — I couldn't wait for next summer and this miraculous band to come around again.

07-09-98 Star Lake - Pat Kelley

I live in Erie so Star Lake is fairly close, only about two hours. I see several shows there each summer and I really like the venue. My only complaint is that the parking lot is like a big gravel pit and as the day wears on — your feet start to hurt from all the walking around. I saw the boys here before in '92 and that show was killer so I had good expectations for the show.

I was not disappointed. The Saratoga and the Darien Lake shows were both well played and fun, but Star Lake was the chicken out of the shows I saw. After Hot Tuna played a really hot set, the crowd was primed for a solid opener like Scarlet. Nobody was ready for the Shakedown Street that thundered down on us, and they coupled it with a twilight Playin'. You can find the complete setlist here and rest assured it was all well played. I really enjoyed Baby Blue.

07-09-98 Star Lake - Harry Moore

I went to the venue furthest from Pittsburgh for the third time, I guess to see what remains. I went out to a few shows around the east for years and after the '95 show in the stadium met and married a woman who had two children and who had never seen the Dead at, never really liked them, never got to see what was so apparent to all of us.

We went to a Further fest a couple of years before, but it wasn't the same. Her daughter, my daughter, likes to think she is a hippie so it was funny opening her eyes to the crowd. I had high expectations and were not let down. I enjoyed it and remembered some of the time I spent traveling and all the people I met along the way and some of the tunes that I heard and where. I was like coming home. I haven't seen them since, I moved to the beach and would love to see Bobby and the boys again, I hope they come down.

It was great to give a little experience to my wife and one of my children the experiences that I had not too long ago. I know this is not an normal review of a show, but I find it kind of wrong to really be critical of the guys who gave so much and asked for so little. When I look back to some of the shows, I remember hoping for the next song and not appreciating what I was listening too. Now I look a the lists that I download from that time and I can't believe I complained for a second. Every show was great, every song was great. We are the chosen to have seen as much as we did.

07-11-98 Alpine Valley - Scott R.

Just returned from Alpine last nite. Having seen the Dead over 100 times, I approached this show with anxiety and mixed emotions. Man, the place was crowded! I was extremely impressed with the performance, though, and it seems strange to say, but having been to Alpine '86, '87, and '88, this was the hottest Dead show I've ever seen there, and the "scene" was pretty cool too.

The Dark Star/Jack Straw opener was just mind-blowing! I swear, many times during that show, I was thinking "this is BETTER than it used to be"! The sound is so full, the jamming so intense and imaginative, and Phil, Bobby and Mickey are just tearing it up!!

Well, this should be kept short...but let me also say that the Eleven/St. Stephen were classic! Bobby has really stepped it up, and the show was a VERY pleasantly psychedelic surprise for me. If I didn't have a wife and three kids, etc., etc., I'd be on the tour for certain! It was so good to be back at lovely Alpine again (not so many tents as I remembered!). Prediction: Tickets to this newest incarnation of GD will soon be very difficult to come by! Happy Trails!

07-11-98 Alpine Valley - Gregory Ehrendreich

I never got the opportunity to see the Dead, and so I approached the Furthur concert with a mix of both wild anticipation and cautious wonder. I didn't have any idea what to expect.

I have never in my life had such a wonderful time at a concert. The weather was beautiful, some wonderful girl sold me two veggie burritos that helped me get through the day, and my god! the music!

Somewhere in the middle of Tennessee Jed, I saw lightning flash across the sky, heard thunder, and felt the rain hitting my body. Then I looked around and it wasn't even raining. The music did something to me. I am changed as a person because of that show. I have never seen such beauty and such happiness all together in one place.

I can still hear the music, and feel it deep in my soul. Jerry may be dead, but the music is still very much alive.

07-11-98 Alpine Valley - Josh Copland

I went to this show at the last minute. A good friend and his wife had two extra tix for me and my wife so we went. My wife and I were present at the last show on 7/9/95 and hadn't gone to Furthurs past so we wouldn't muddy our memories. But I have to say I was so surprised at what we encountered from top to bottom.

The lot was great, vending o' plenty and all of the cool people we missed. But on to the music. Dark Star!!! To open no less, Yes! That put a smile on my face from ear to ear. It was strange to hear Jerry tunes sung by Bruce or Bobby but they did nicely. I have no idea what Mickey is doing singing but hey he's an artist right? (BTW when did Fire become a rap song?)

Nice to see the dancers all around too but really the show was just enjoyable until... Box of Rain, ah the memories that brought. Then... Dark Star Again! Very cool! And just when it couldn't get better, St.Stephen!!! Holy shit that was cool! I never though I'd hear that one and the Eleven too did not disappoint. And then Lovelight! Is this Fillmore East 2/26/69 or Alpine Valley 7/11/98? I knew where I was but man it was soooooo cool to hear. And the Sat Nite encore as well sent me off to the night satisfied and content.

So what do I think of The Other Ones...Well it was a lot like eating low-fat cheese: better then nothing but something was still missing. Good to see Phil, Bobby, Mickey and Bruce working together and doing it well. Viva The Other Ones!!

07-11-98 Alpine Valley - John Green

Great Show! Very cool threading of Dark Star in and out of whole show. The DS itself was very powerful. They took a fairly weak late Dead number like Easy Answers and made it cook. Also, Tennessee Jed, which for me anyway, had become a pee-break tune in the Dead's later years, really smoked in this show. Took me completely by surprise! Hornsby was awesome (he didn't have half the energy this summer, at Ravinia). One thing, however, it was difficult to hear both Kimock and Karan in the mix simultaneously. Hope they get together and do it again soon (tomorrow)!

07-12-98 Polaris Amphitheatre - Lance

Hey Now. I must start by saying we have caught the Furthur Festival for the past two years and were not expecting anything special this year. Jerry's death devastated so many of us in many different ways. Rhonda and I have just recently started to get over the loss, as you know, it is extremely tough. The last tour foretold the end, we were on from RFK to Chicago and it WAS bad. Those of you there know its true. I have to shoulder some of the blame because I was contributing to the negative in some ways. Would I have jumped the fence in Deer Creek? I can't say for sure, but I never did in the multiple times I was outside in the past. But I digress.

I was just trying to say it had gotten pretty pathetic on tour. Back to the Other Ones, the first year was kind of strange. Mystery Box was a kind of love/hate type thing. The bands along for the ride were great. Bob had an ego problem though. And I'll be stir fried if he didn't give the impression that this was HIS baby. I have to admit the music was mediocre, the all star jam kicked at the end, but there were so many guitars anything would have sounded phat. We swore the only way we would be back was if Bruce came back also. He seemed to honor and keep something of Jerry about the whole thing.

The scene was very small, Shakedown at Polaris was like one aisle. There was plenty of room inside also. Polaris is about the size of Deer Creek, Star Lake or The Woodlands. There were not very many small vendors outside, it seemed to be mostly the larger folks. We left feeling a wee bit disappointed. The second year didn't do much for us either.

The Crows opened their set kickin hard, after the first song they were causing people to fall asleep. Let me say I got in to only 64 actual Dead shows, but I have trade tapes and listened and I had become anally critical about shows and for me 94 was a snoozer. One of the best shows I saw in 95 was the first night at deer creek, well the only night at the creek. And I feel qualified to evaluate their playing. And the second Further Fest was also just above lame at best. Sorry. That's just my opinion.

This year we were going to go and not expect too much. Tired of being set up like a bowling pin. I am going to email the dead folks and tell them they have hit on the right combo this time. We were so happy to see the crowd this year. The place was packed. Three Rows of Shakedown. People were actually nice to each other again, no flying beer bottles, NO NITROUS thank God. No hassles from each other or the law. It was beautiful.

I will not dwell on Rusted Root or Hot Tuna, they were good. I was amazed at the band though. They sounded nice and tight, halfway into Loser I told my wife the two guitarist and the sax player sounded like Jerry on a good night on steroids. But there was some spark or something slightly amiss. But they were hot. It just seemed like they didn't have the experience to take it to the cosmic heights. But they kicked ass. Sounded better than many Dead shows I have seen.

It was such a relief to see the whole scene so vibrant and HEALTHY looking again. Maybe our loss has made us realize how precious a thing this is, and what a shame it would have been to let it dry up and die.

The show did seem a bit heavy on Jerry tunes and at times his absence was overwhelmingly apparent. I would have loved to hear Bob do Black Throated or Looks Like Rain. But for once I don't have any complaints. The scene was like a nice mellow laid back Dead show at Bonner Springs or ThunderBird Lake. If you have half of a chance to catch an Other Ones show, do it or you may be sorry. Take care of each other and keep the faith.

07-13-98 Pine Knob - Bouwser

Before going to Pine Knob, I had been talking a lot with friends on the internet. So I didn't know quite what to expect from the show but I knew it was gonna be good. My excitement started way back when the official press release came out saying Phil was to be playin this year. I knew it was to be a special day because it marked the exact day that my dad and I went to Furthur last year and that rocked too.

So we get to the show. The parking lot is packed. The previous two years the parking lot has been very small before the show. So I knew this was going to be a good day. You could say it was an omen for the day. Rusted Root! What can I say. They were wonderful. I had not seen these guys yet but knew they were good. They only played one or two new songs so I knew most of them and I sang along too. At the end they brought out Hot Tuna and did the Rolling Stone song "Can't always get what you want." That was pretty cool. Hot Tuna came on next. I can't say I really like Hot Tuna but they played pretty well. Pete Sears really jammed on the keys.

Directly after Tuna The Other Ones were setting up. This drew a lot of excitement trying to figure out whose feet were whose. Then the circular thing came up and bam! Playin' in the Band. It was incredible. That all I can say. Hell in a Bucket segued out of Playin' and it too sounded great. Scarlet-Fire came next and it was very very tight. They killed this one. I can't wait to get a tape just to hear this. Jack a Roe came next with Phil on the vocals. He sounded great. And the song was great. Masterpiece came after and it too was special because Bobby whips out the gondola verse so we know this means business.

A small jam lead into Bird Song and then Rainbow Cadillac. Rainbow lead into a killer Phil jam. You could tell he was having fun. After this jam nobody knew what to expect. How could the show get any better. Unless they played Franklin's Tower! Absolutely sweet. The highlight of the night. Drumz came next and then space. These both were incredible and sounded tight. Out of space came Banyan Tree. I totally loved this new song and I hope to hear it again. Out of Banyan Tree came Playin' Reprise which surprise me and put a fat smile on my face. Wharf Rat was next. I love this song and Bruce sang it excellently. Throwing Stones and Not Fade Away ended this perfect night. Thank you: The Other Ones.

07-15-98 Deer Creek - Lindie

I'm sorry to say that didn't even know of the Grateful Dead until 1997, so I never got to experience a show with Jerry, but the show I was at was so awesome. Rusted Root started the night with happy and festive mood. I saw a man about 50 with his young son just getting down. It put a big smile on my face and it showed me how these shows bring people together. I danced my ass off during Rusted Root so when Hot Tuna came on, I sat down to rest my self up for The Other Ones. They were cool, but I really didn't get into. Then the DEAD. They opened with Shakedown Street that was so funky. Bruce Hornsby's ,That's Just The Way It Is, was wonderful. The best part of the night was the closing song, Uncle John's Band. Everyone sang along, screaming at the top of their lungs," Come hear Uncle John's Band, By the riverside, Got some things to talk about" What a night. I'm definitely addicted. I'll be at as many shows as possible this summer

07-17-98 Riverport- the blodge

07-19-98 Fiddlers Green - Rolfe Sauls

We really enjoyed Rusted Root ! They can play almost any style and have some really interesting original music in a variety of musical styles: rock, country, Spanish, middle eastern-ish. We noticed Phil, Mickey, and Jorma watching from the side at various times, peeking around curtains over speakers for a look. They seemed rather interested in this band. The closing number was an awesome Stones Cover, "You Can't Always Get What you Want", with Jorma and Jack joining in to make it an ultra-powerful end to the Rusted Root set.

Hot Tuna was Hot! Jorma was in great vocal form, Jack always at his stoic but rockin' best. Their pianist was particularly rocking through most of their short set.

The Other Ones' Playin in the Band> (very nice opener. everybody is up, dancin', and grinning) All Along the Watchtower (cool ! Reminded me of "All along the Watchwater", a set list entry from a rain-soggy 80's RFK show) Scarlet Begonias> (Yeah! Still got that funky "boink-a-boink" Dead sound. Funky Funky Funky. Long jams. Yeahhh.) Fire on the Mountain (Mickey's rap version; now in 7/8 time. I prefer the traditional version, but this was ok. Nice mid jam.) Jack - A - Roe (Phil) (GO PHIL ! SUPERB VOCALS! CLEAR AS A BELL ! He really nailed this one! Loved by all !) Minglewood blues (Yep ! Dead sound again, really great rendering, sounded a lot like the old days version) Down the Road (Mickey tune) (A rhyming reminiscence of days gone by and a mention of "Garcia"; super tear-jerker.) White Wheel Limousine (Bruce tune) (Grateful Bruce Dead-sby...neat song...but no one was quite sure what to do with it...) Bird Song (started with a SLOW tempo, bassy beat, thought it was "Victim or The Crime" at first. Nice job by all.) Samson & Delilah (w/Jorma) (Rockin dance tune, but wish Jorma had done more with the lead licks) Drums (John Molo, Hornsby's drummer, had a blast all night. He JAMMED to anything Mickey tossed him. Super Drums!) Banyan Tree (Bob tune) (Love this new introspective tune. Great Lyrics!) Space> Playin in the Band-reprise (Throughout Space, they each fell back into a Playin' hint and finally just went with it.) Wharf Rat (COMPLETE SURPRISE! SUPER VOCALS, even A CAPPELLA on parts of verses! Wow.!) Throwing Stones (Started out gang busters, then Bobby got so into it...he forgot the words.. Hell with it , let's just jam...) Not Fade Away (Strong "Not Fade claps" and responsive verses from the audience. MUST have an encore...)

E: Ripple - acoustic (OHHHH MANNN! Okay, everyone teared up. This was a complete emotional mindblower. The audience sang along softly. It just left everyone in a blubbery mess. What a wonderful way to close.)

Overall it was a really enjoyable show. I am still looking for that X-Factor jamming and it came close at times, but it's too early to expect that from the new members. The new guitarists are still learning the ropes, but I did hear some close references to Jerry's licks which was nice and some new interpretations which actually did work too! Bruce was in fine form and the new second drummer gave Mickey new spaces to play around!

The weather started off like an oven, but the sun got clouded over and we were treated with a lighting show behind the stage and nice, light sprinkling off and on. (Wonder if the band puzzled over what all those "Whoa! 's " were about when the lighting crackled above and behind them...?).

07-21-98 Thomas and Mack- melissa

There was little time from the time Hot Tuna ended to when the Other Ones took the stage. Boom! Love is shakin' on Shakedown Street! Then a sweet Ramble On Rose. When the first sounds of DarkStar were heard, the butterflies flew away with my stomach. There was want for nothing, I was filled so full. They played Hound Dog and the older folks really liked that. People were twistin' and stuff. It was strange when I looked behind me and saw a guy in a tie-dyed shirt just standing there like a brick wall. How could you not dance? West L.A. Fadeaway! And Mickey's Baba Jingo! That song is still in my head.

The first part of the show was my favorite. The Drums are awesome. Sugar Mag was almost sad for me because it was my last show. The Other Ones will get better and better as they go "further." Bruce Hornsby seemed a little dominant a couple times, and it made me lose my groove, because I wanted to hear Phil and Bobby. The saxophone player Dave Ellis is great.

07-22-98 Irvine Meadows - Patti Lord

I attended the two Shoreline shows, in addition to the Irvine show, and also the Warfield show in June. My expectations were exceeded. Of COURSE the Other Ones help fill the void. They help tremendously! The music was fabulous, and the scene was heartwarming. The song choices were amazing. This band rocks and jams, and also has those moments of touching delicacy, incredible sweetness, mainly due to Bruce Hornsby's evocative renderings of some of Jerry's ballads. Bruce has that subtle intensity so necessary for those songs. I say let Bruce sing as much as he wants. Dave Ellis is a tower of power, and Karan and Kimock have instantly woven themselves into our consciousness. Molo is delightful. As for Mickey, Bob and Phil, keep on truckin so gracefully.

My hopes for the future? How to make it better? Three words: More, More, More. More playing together so the band can season, mature and keep climbing. More shows to fill the void. More songs and more sets; two sets is really a good idea, because we get mighty uncomfortable in the last third of a one-set show, due to full bladders, yet the show is so compelling and riveting, one cannot take a trip to the loo!

Of course the band must realize that we dearly want to hear Terrapin, and I think either Bobby or Bruce should sing it. I am one of those deadheads who is thrilled when the band plays covers. I was very pleased by Mystery Train. What a great choice! In addition to Aiko Aiko, of course, at Shoreline. I would like to see them do Around and Around too. And any of the Beatles, Traffic, etc. stuff. With Mark Karan's expressed love of the Beatles, that would be good to explore! Also, Ship of Fools and Black Peter are songs that must not die! Again, Bobby or Bruce could sing, and Mark and Steve could take turns cutting loose, with plenty of Dave mixed in, and Phil, Mickey and Molo right there where we need them.

The Other Ones made us very happy. Just please, guys, don't do the bad heavy drugs, and don't leave us.

Love, Patti

07-24-98 Shoreline - Anthony Pulsipher

Shoreline: It seemed like these shows were populated by every stone cool person I've ever seen at a Dead show. Literally the cream of the crop. The coolest of the cool. The highest of the high.

The first show of Shoreline contained one of the best three hours of music I have ever heard. The Dead's set was breath-taking. They came out with a fierce jam, boom, like wow from the first minute. Then they dropped down into Dark Star and the place went apeshit. Dave Ellis blew on this man, I mean in the best possible way. He blew me the fuck away, stalking the stage like a madman. Dark Star> Hell in a Bucket? I wasn't complaining, I was just so happy to be there.

07-24-98 Shoreline - Rossgita

Driving into Palo Alto on Friday afternoon, I eagerly awaited the triumphant return of The Other Ones to their home base. Things got stranger when we walked to the ticket counter one hour before showtime. Of course, only lawn seats were available, but my wife asked if there were any reserved seats. The ticket seller pulled out an unclaimed envelope with two choice reserved seats and said, "Well, you can have these". We happily entered the amphitheater.

As Rusted Root wound down, we made our way to our seats. Hot Tuna immediately took the stage and played an all-too-short set, easily their hottest of the two days. (Saturday's Tuna set did feature cameos from Dave Ellis and Mark Karan, however).

The Other Ones took the stage a bit after 8 PM, and plunged into a spicy tuning jam, which just as quickly melded into the familiar melody of Dark Star. However, they sang the second, or "mirror shatters" verse. It is not known whether this was intentional or not, but all vocalists stuck with it, and it segued nicely into a comfortable jam.

I'm not usually blown away by Hell In A Bucket, yet this version was lithe and powerful. Weir had his act together, and led the song through a spry workout. The additional drumbeat arrangement punctuated the fact that this was not a Dead show in a very subtle way, and the two guitarists and Ellis ably tried to make up for Jerry's absence.

Hornsby took charge on Scarlet Begonias, yet neglected some vocals. The jam was interesting enough, but a plodding Fire On The Mountain by Snoop Mickey Hart made me wistful for times past.

Phil Lesh stepped forward and read through a fun Mississippi Half Step, but the guitarists were nowhere to be found. This tune, followed by a standard Queen Jane and a Baba Jingo by Mickey McCheese allowed me time to browse the fine collection of booths in the vending fair. Relax, I told myself, they're just warming up. I'm glad I was right.

A bottle of spring water later, I was back at my seat for the second highlight of the night, a searing Tennessee Jed. Karan and Kimock blended nicely on the solo portion, and the crowd cheered in excitement. Now this is more like it. Following Jed, an above-average Bird Song (post-Jerry, that is) led into a mystical jam which gave way to the drum duet.

I'm quite impressed by John Molo. He plays at a high level, and gives a charge to many numbers. Nowhere was this more evident on Friday than after the Drumz portion. Weir charged out first with a rousing Let It Grow. Remaining serious throughout, he sang with determination and intensity. Good fun! After an aborted attempt to settle back into Dark Star, Hornbsy spoke up with an incredible rendition of Across The River. Ellis led the band with lead after lead, and the guitarists again gave up the all-too-frequent goods. Bruce led the count-down into the calypso jam, which slid comfortably into Uncle John's Band. Again, Garcia was missed, and the guitarists were very quiet, but the emotional level reigned supreme, and when Phil pulled out Box Of Rain, it almost made you think, "Maybe these guys CAN pull it off!". A few vocal miscues to be sure, but still solid. Weir performed a superb reading of Good Lovin' to complete the set. Without an encore, the house light came up, the familiar strains of "Happy Trails" came over the PA, and 20,000-plus fans went streaming out into the cool California night.

07-24-98 Shoreline - Shaun Caldwell

I was only fortunate enough to have seen the dead twice before Jerry's passing, but I was highly pleased to get to experience a darkstar. Obviously no one could ever replace Jerry in the Grateful Dead but what the guys have going on I thought was pretty amazing. The whole setlist of my shoreline show blew me away. I got to see songs I thought I would never get to see. The people I encountered in San Francisco were some of the kindest people I have ever met. I can't wait to get out back to the bay area and meet y'all again. Thanks for the show and the good time

07-24-98 Shoreline - Mark Grissom

The Friday Shoreline show was just excellent. I had seen the 4.20 Phil and Friends show and really saw the potential that was there to explore again, now that Phil was back on board! The situation did not look good when Stan Franks left, but, outta that mess, the boys came out smelling like roses with the final lineup!

Friday's setlist and performance has been ably described already, I only second the emotion. I was lucky enough to have seats way down low and, as a veteran going back to 1967, I can say this was no nostalgic retread. Kimock, in particular, seems capable of lifting things up whenever feels like it, and, even with the size of the ensemble, the jamming flowed quite nicely. It got particularly fierce in the conclusion of "Weather Report Suite", when I swear they did the end of Santana's "Gypsy Queen". Never heard anything quite like that from The Dead... Hornsby is always great to have on board, and Dave Ellis did a stellar job, as well.

Here's how it went for me: the side street I usually park on was full, but turning around to look for somewhere else, a space had opened up! A miracle parking space...not to be scoffed at, considering the mess leaving if you use the lot. Once we got inside, I bought a beer...walking away from the booth, I realized, they had never taken my money! A miracle beer! And the seats were so low, we had to look up to see the video screen. Indeed, I was so satiated and satisfied, I passed on lawn seats for Saturday, even knowing I would miss "St. Stephen/The Eleven", which I don't think I heard live since 3.1.69! That's how strongly the show hit me...my girl and I had a fantastic time.

But, truth be told, the Phil and Friends show on the 8th topped Furthur. That was a classic night, for sure!

07-25-98 Shoreline - Tom Armelino

My first show since Jerry left us! I've seen over 100 -150 shows through out the years so I was excited to see Phil, Bobby, Mickey, and surprised to see Billy K. My wife and I took our three-year-old son to the show and met my brother from Colorado. The wild times (if you know what I mean) of the past are no longer needed so we settled in with a few beers and just plain family fun. I spent the first part of the show playing in the dirt with my son's toys and a few other little ones that joined us.

During the first song "US Blues" I was down in the bar and watched the boys on screen. I loved it and my heart jumped to see their energy. The rest of the show was just pretty damn cool. I definitely had feelings of loss and there were definite hollow periods where Jerry's licks were greatly missed. St. Stephen blew me away! The intro was hot and the leads were right on. Bruce nailed Ramble on Rose and Phil was awesome! Bobby was very good at times he lost the words but that's the way it has always been. If you are a musician you know how hard it is to keep all the words and verses straight.

My son fell asleep during the last hour. I got to dance with my lady and groove with my bro. All the deadheads around us were cool and all respective of our son's sleep and helped protect him, from falling stragglers. The night was great. The usual 2-3 hour wait to get out of the Shoreline parking lot but my wife and son fell asleep in the jeep and my brother and I bullshitted and helped others find their cars when possible.

The Other Ones are great! I can't wait until the next shows. My boy had a great time and enjoyed Mickey's daughter dancing to a Bruce tune after drums. It was weird watching the band hug and complete a group bow at the end. It was very heart warming. I think Jerry was smiling upon the whole scene! I hope my east coast friends caught the shows there and it looks like we will all have a chance to continue the party! This is no essay - just thoughts!

07-25-98 Shoreline - Rossgita

Saturday was filled with an excitement not even squelched by The Other Ones' pre-show sound check of Corinna :-) Ah, the final date on the successful TOO summer tour. We arrived early, to allow all of the karma and joy of this day to waft our way. Finally, as Rusted Root played to the masses, we took our seats for a brief and methodical set from Hot Tuna.

The main attraction hit the ground running with a laid-back rendition of US Blues... summertime done come and gone, my oh my, yes indeed...

The familiar strains of Playin' In The Band signaled a powerful version, full of crackle from Kimock and Karan, as the evening quickly turned experimental.

But wait! Not so fast! Who should hit the stage but long-lost Bill Kreutzmann, looking rested and ready! Whoops and cheers ran through the Shoreline crowd as Kreutzmann took the stick of his talking drum and waved it at the crowd. The energy flowed back to him, and he cackled and bopped around, ready to play, ready to dance, playin' in the band...

Here they were, all of the surviving members of the original incarnation of the Grateful Dead (Weir, Lesh, Kreutzmann), on a concert stage together for the first time since the death of Jerry Garcia, along with lifer Mickey Hart and honorary member Bruce Hornsby. Kreutzmann led the band into the rough beat of The Other One, and the old magic took the crowd's breath away. As the long jam, and first verse, wound down, various band members went over to Billy, as hugs and handshakes filled the stage.

Kreutzmann remained onstage as Bruce delivered a passionate albeit rusty version of Ramble On Rose, and Mickey donned the sunglasses to perform Down The Road Again. As Billy left the stage, we left the main theater area.

The indoor vending fair at Shoreline is unique, with spacious shopping areas, and a mellow, unique vibe. A quick purchase of a new DeadBase, and a great photo of Garcia taken by Rob Cohn, and it was time to hustle back inside.

TOO performed trusty versions of Jack-A-Roe and Friend Of The Devil, yet Karan and Kimock were low on sparks. Kreutzmann was prodded out again by Weir, and roused the crowd by sitting in on a top-notch Iko Iko. Molo gave up his kit, as the two old drummers captured a taste of magic with China Cat Rider, but without Jerry it lacked quite a bit, and wisely the band touched down into... Rhythm Devils.

What can be said? The first real "Drumz" in three years, and the exorcism was in progress. Afterward, Mickey and Billy hugged, and Kreutzmann left the stage. Bruce came out to perform Preacher In The Ring with Molo and Hart, and the full band followed with simple versions of Banyan Tree and Corinna. The concert started to take flight as Kreutzmann joined in on a Playin' jam, and as Bob Weir led the group through the reprise of The Other One, the musicians were again playing at optimum capabilities.

Following a nice Wharf Rat by Bruce, the highlight of the weekend came with the hat trick of St. Stephen, The Eleven and Lovelight. Karan more than delivered in spades on St. Stephen and Jorma even came out for a few rounds of Lovelight.

The double encore of One More Saturday Night and Touch Of Grey capped the weekend in grand style. The band members came to center stage, put their arms around each other, and bowed in unison. Hugs, handshakes and tears onstage brought the same reaction from the crowd, and brought the summer tour to a close.

Happy Trails!

Attics of my Life
my official test
my societal tiff
I'm stiff acolyte
Camelot is fifty my lattice is off icy leftist foam fat society film fit fat is comely
it felt my fiasco
flimsy attic foe
foil mystic fate foil mystic feat
oft a mystic life offices may tilt static of my life fifty slice atom
some licit taffy
if coma fit style

Eyes of the World
hoofed westerly
ho, flowery steed
the flowery dose
we of holy desert
drowsy hotel fee
two holy feeders wet fleshy rodeo frosty wheel ode we see hotrod fly softer holy weed softly hero weed
howdy stereo elf stereo defy howl feel worthy dose flee worthy dose
we seed thy floor holy weed fortes forty wheel odes lofty horse weed lofty whore seed lofty hero weeds defy those lower
we fly other dose fed to holy sewer three dewy fools
try dose of wheel
